Hollywood and Return, or A Personal Disappearance

By AL MARTIN

It was on Main Street of Paris, and this being my first trip to Illinois, I was thrilled to think of being so far from home. I was thrilled again in the same place when I saw a sign on a moving picture theatre which told all that Francis Z. Fairford, the famous screen star, was appearing personally at that theatre.

After I was comfortably seated next to some girl who had parked her gum on the arm of my chair, the theatre manager announced Francis Z. Fairford. Francis jumped up on the stage with his hat in hand, and was all out of breath as though he had ran all the way from California. He told the audience how glad he was to be with them, and how much he enjoyed working in pictures. Also he hoped they would like him in his new pictures as well as they did in his old. All together it was a wonderful speech, and when he told the audience he was going right back to California they all applauded to their full strength.

He didn't go back to California as he had promised, for I saw him in the lobby of the theatre shaking hands with people, and answering their foolish questions. When it came my turn I told him how wonderful I thought he was, but he didn't seem at all surprised. I also told him I expected to go to California shortly, and asked him where I could get a pass to Hollywood, as I would like to see how pictures are made. He laughed right out loud at my question, and as he laughed, I had sufficient time to notice that his tonsils were out.

He then explained to me that there were other things in Hollywood besides motion pictures, in fact it is a regular city, being just ten cents worth of car-fare from Los Angeles, he emphasized.

After my confab with Francis, I went to a restaurant nearby, and over a saucer of coffee I managed to get an idea. Most people like to see motion picture actors in the flesh, so I figured I would go to Hollywood, get in a motion picture, and then, I would return east and make personal appearances with it. The people in the smaller towns would think I was a star because I would not only admit it, but I would have a picture to prove it. However, I could improve on the speech that Francis made, and I don't believe I would rush on the stage like he did, but might run off, which, of course, would depend on my audience.

It is so seldom I get an idea that when I do I sure make use of it, so two weeks later finds me sending post cards from Hollywood to my friends back home in Kokomo. I tried very hard to get work in pictures, but found it is not a very easy thing to get. Every place I went it seemed as though all the work was done, which was good for them, but not so nice for me. It didn't take me long to get on my feet as I wore my shoes out, and did the wire act, telegraphing home for money.

I made up my mind that I was going to get work in pictures, but it seemed as though all the directors had made up their minds that I wouldn't. Finally, one day for no reason at all, a man stopped me on the street, and asked me if I wanted work in his picture. His question took my breath away, and as soon as I was able to speak I said, "Lead me to it." I know this is not the way to talk to a director, but I couldn't think of anything else to say at the time.

He took me to the studio, and as we passed the gate-man I looked over my shoulder expecting him to speak gruffly to me and call me back, but he didn't do either, in fact he laughed at me. The director showed me my dressing room and left me alone with my thoughts. I had just taken off my hat when a man, who I later learned was the assistant director, rushed in the room and said, "Aren't you ready yet?"

As I wasn't I told him no, so he left me, telling me to hurry. Then I took off my collar, and another man entered. He also gave me the rush act. I told him I was hurrying as quickly as possible, and as he left I realized that they were waiting for me.

Strange, for so long I have been trying to get in the moving pictures, and now that I've got a job the whole company waited. The chances are that I am playing the lead, thought I, but was interrupted again right there, this time it was the director himself.

Before he had a chance to tell me to hurry I said, "It won't be long now." He then told me to take my time as Jerry was having his lunch, and seeing that he was the star he must be humored.

After he said that I knew I wasn't playing the lead, but as long as I worked in a picture I was satisfied, and as I looked at the director I noticed he had a slip of paper in his hand together with a pencil with which he was making notes.

He then asked me several questions as one would expect when he has their life insured, such as my name and address, where I wished my body shipped in case of death, and a few more pleasant ones. He didn't scare me a bit with these questions, or the sober expression on his face, and to prove this I started to whistle. I just started, for he jumped up as though he were shot and said, "Don't you know it's bad luck to whistle in a dressing room?"

I don't believe in superstitions unless it's for good luck, so I laughed at him, which laugh was not returned, as he seemed to gaze into space. He continued to do this as he turned to me and said, "Well, let's get it over with."

I followed him into the studio, and just as I thought, everyone was waiting for me. He introduced me to the entire company, which didn't take long, and then he said,

Sheiks and Sheikesses, Beware and Be Careful

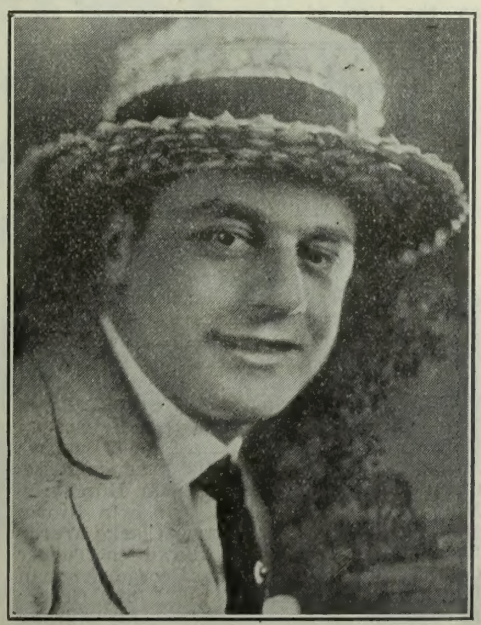
Fresh from conquests of the hearts of San Francisco's flappers comes Reggie Morley (Morelli).

The usurper of the crown so long worn by Rodolph Valentino has just completed a series of twelve Plum Center Comedies in which he created the character of "Dude Bisbee." This, of course, was one of Reggie's lighter moments. He now feels the urge of Sheiking and hereby gives notice to all other aspirants to the laurels of Valentino that his bandana, or whatever it is that sheiks wear around their heads, is in the ring.

When Rodolph established his prior claims to the title of "Pioneer Sheik of America," Morelli was in the east. As soon as he heard of the "Four Horsemen," Reggie came out to the coast, but Valentino had retreated to the east.

One of Reggie Morley's early roles, in which he demonstrated conclusively that he was a coming Sheik, was "Love's Comet." In this vehicle Reggie played the part of a negro preacher in support of Ora Carew. So you see even in those early Mack Sennett days he leaned toward the dusky hero roles.

For the benefit of the sighing maidens and signing producers Reggie announces that through the aid of the Motion Picture Players Association, he has located a harem and can be reached on the phone by dialing 435-252 and 435-253.



REGGIE MORLEY

In a truly Sparkplugish vein Reggie says, "Don't overlook any bets. I am ready to go, and will go and won't stop until Hollywood Boulevard is called 'Morley's Lane.'"

STARS TO ENTERTAIN STARS

Stars of the motion picture world are to be hosts and hostesses at many important social events in July when the Monroe Doctrine Centennial will be celebrated in Los Angeles.

Many distinguished educators will visit the Exposition in Los Angeles on their way home from the meeting of the National Education Association, which is to be held in Oakland and San Francisco the end of June.

Famous men and women of the South American countries are to be invited to speak at a series of conferences which will be held at the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition.

California universities have been engaged for some time in research work that will enable the directors of the pageants at the Monroe Doctrine Centennial to adhere strictly to historical facts. As all the episodes are to be filmed as educational pictures the importance of exactness in even minor details is recognized.

Gossip from New York

By RAYMOND McKEE

Persons here are asking the question, "Are the rumors true about the Miller-Pickford match?" The persons who usually buzz about other people's business are now sending out on the underground radio that although smothered under banks of flowers the affections between the two are not as cordial as they once were. We dunno!

Hooray! Spring has cub! Without a doubt! The Ringling Brothers and Barum and Bailey Show, "Bigger and Better Than Ever," is in town. Monday night the General Equestrian Director, of the "Greatest Show on Earth" blew his whistle and lohundreds of people, elephants and things snapped into somersaults, twisters and whatnots, while Mr. and Mrs. New York sat on the "Blues" and ate peanuts.

Mme. Petrova obtained $5,000 for the injury sustained when struck by a New York trolley. It was settled outside court. She sued for $35,000.

Marion Davies bobbed her hair for the part of Pat O'Day in her next Cosmopolitan picture, "Little Old New York." 'Tis said she spends an hour a day oiling and brushing the locks in order to take out the permanent wave.

"Enemies of Women" has opened at the Central for an extended run. It is by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the author of the "Four Horsemen," and "Blood and Sand." It is presented by Cosmopolitan and features Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens.

Joseph M. Schencke this week paid $55,000 in purchasing "Secrets" from Sam H. Harris for screen production with Norma Talmadge.

"The Covered Wagon" at the end of its first week at the Criterian Theatre drew $10,873. This is an astonishing record considering that the theatre has only 608 seats and only two performances a day were given.

The following sign appeared over a New York theatre last week: "Larry Semon," "The Christian."

Johnny Hines is by this time enjoying the Hollywood ozone. He, with his brother as assistant, and Charlie Gilson to turn the crank, are there to work for Warner Bros., on their screen adaptation of "Little Johnny Jones." C. C. Burr is largely responsible for the success of the Hines pictures.

Neal Sullivan will replace Chas. Gilson behind the camera at the Glendale studios, and turn on the Charles Murray—Raymond McKee Comedies.

Charles Harris, miniature scenic artist, not with the brush but miniature in size, is laughing on the other side today. It seems Charlie is a Mason and has been looking forward to the initiation of Harry Keifer, which happened the other night. Now Harry is "some husky," and as we said before Charlie the reverse Annie, whoa! Harry is doing the laughing today, and Charlie, sorta walks with a limp.

Anthony Paul Kelly was next to the best man at Raymond McKee's marriage to Marguerite Courtot, says Mrs. McKee.—Raymond McKee.

From U to You

By BEN WESTLAND

At last the secret is out regarding the marriage of Edward Laemmle, world adventurer and film director, who left Los Angeles recently to enter the state of matrimony in Chicago at the home of an uncle, Louis Laemmle. The story involves a romance cradled in the old world through the first job held by Carl Laemmle, now president of the Universal Pictures Corporation.

When Carl Laemmle was a little boy he went to a small town in Bavaria and apprenticed himself in the business of Aaron Heller, a Saxon who had a big wholesale paper business there. Between the boy and his first employer a strong friendship grew which outlasted the severance of their business relations a few years later. Ten years ago Mr. Laemmle, then a film producer on the road to prosperity in America, returned to Bavaria and visited the Heller family. When he came back to America he brought with him a daughter of Aaron Heller, who was to live for a time with the Laemmle family in America.

A short time later she married a brother of Carl Laemmle, Louis, living in Chicago.

A year or so ago Mr. Laemmle again visited the Heller family in Bavaria. Another daughter of Aaron Heller, Peppi Heller, was invited to come to America. She went to live with her older sister, Mrs. Louis Laemmle, in Chicago.

Then Edward Laemmle visited his uncle Louis, and there met Peppi Heller. A romance developed rapidly, and when Edward returned to Universal City to take up his duties as a director, it was only to make one more picture. Upon the completion of that, "The Oregon Trail," he packed up "the old kit bag" and returned to Chicago, where Peppi Heller will become Mrs. Edward Laemmle on April 8.

Edward Laemmle is the son of Joseph Laemmle, who resides near the Universal studios at Universal City.

If Carl Laemmle had not chosen to enter the wholesale paper business in Bavaria as a boy, "the story might have been different."

A band of Universal cowboys and several cars of friends accompanied Edward Laemmle to the train in Los Angeles when he left for Chicago.

Duke R. Lee, who was "Buffalo Bill" in Universal's film version of that doughty pioneer's life, and Ruth Royce, who has played in a half dozen of the recent historical serials, have important roles in the chapter play which is being made at Universal City today, immortalizing the figure of Daniel Boone. Their roles are in support of Jack Mower and Eileen Sedgwick, who co-star in the picture. Frank Messinger and Jay Marchant co-direct the filming.

At Universal City there is one comment on the lips of everyone who has seen "Merry-go-round," the film spectacle of love and war in the old world which Rupert Julian directed, as it has been previewed in rough form. That comment is, "A new star has come to the screen."

Mary Philbin, picked out of a Chicago beauty contest two years ago and taken from high school to start her training in pictures, is one member of the big all-star cast of "Merry-Go-Round." Such fine artists as Norman Kerry, Cesare Gravina, Dale Fuller, Maude George, Lillian Sylvester, George Hackathorne, George Siegmann, Anton Vaverka and Dorothy Wallace, give their full measure of sincerity in dramatic portrayals.

But little Miss Philbin exhibits an emotional-interpretive ability which has astounded experts at Universal City and caused predictions of a spectacular career for her. The role she plays is far from being a straight romantic one. It is sad, vibrant with the pathos of eternal love and brightened by the great beauty of faith, faith in the seemingly impossible.

This girl of whom they speak has never met the tragedies of life's "Merry-Go-Round" and the understandings she shows remains an inexplicable mystery.

A preview of "Drifting," the latest completed Universal-Jewel starring vehicle of Priscilla Dean, which the editorial department at Universal City has nearly finished editing, has disclosed the fact that the star's excellent performance is supported by some unusually fine characterizations, conspicuous among them the portrayal of a Chinese girl of high caste given by Anna May Wong.

Miss Wong was mentioned in a recent issue of Photoplay magazine as having given the best individual performance on the screen during that month, and friends believe her work in "Drifting" superior to any previous portrayal. The role is a tragic one, imbued with the wierd, mysterious spirit of the East.

Taking Chances on Being Movie Actors

By RAY H. LEEK

Steeplejacks who gambol on the pinnacles of skyscrapers lead soft, pampered existences, as compared to those laid out for the male players in productions now under way here.

For hair raising thrillers the sort that used to be performed by the luckless "double" have been the order of the week. And in every case the players whose names appear in electric lights were those who braved the perils laid out by imaginative script writers.

Within a few days Milton Sills submitted to a spectacular beating that would have chilled the ardor of any ring champion. Walter Hiers clung, head downward, from a parachute several hundred feet above the ground, while Kenneth Harlan provided the climax to the thrills by crashing from the clouds in an aeroplane, through the roof of a house and landing right side up with care, almost in the arms of a Spanish senorita.

Sills took his trouncing in the interest of the second production of "The Spoilers," in which the Goldwyn organization is attempting to outdo the famous fight originally staged by William Farnum and Tom Santschi. Noah Beery's idea of making the fistic encounter realistic was to hurl Sills over his head three times in the course of the fight—a bit of unexpected violence that kept Sills in his bed for two days after the struggle.

Hiers' thriller is a feature of "Fair Week," being filmed by the fat comedian as his newest Paramount picture. The story calls for a rescue scene in which the hero all but loses his life. If the good natured Walter's statement may be accepted at its face value this is just what occured. At any rate, it is hardly likely anybody will be able to persuade him to leave the ground for many days to come.

But it remained for Kenneth Harlan, experienced aviator that he is, to provide the real breath taking thrill. "The Broken Wing," in which he is playing a featured role, calls for the collapse of an aeroplane in mid-air, a drop through a roof and the wrecking of everything in sight but the intrepid Harlan, who is needed for fresh hazards in later episodes.

When the production was seen on the speaking stage in New York and elsewhere the crash was pictured largely in the words of the player rather than in fact. But in the Tom Forman production it was agreed that it would be visualized down to the last broken bolt of the aeroplane.

The drop, which carried Harlan and a pet dog through the tiled roof and log-covered patio of a Méxican home, was figured out with mathematical precision in advance. Engineers who weighed and balanced the plane assured Harlan that there was no chance of his meeting death in the fall.

"A broken arm or leg at the most," was the reassuring statement of the cheerful experts.

So the fall was taken the other day amid a roar of timber and rending steel. And Harlan didn't break so much as the mere leg or arm that the experts had figured

THE SILENT TREND

Composite of Views, Previews, and Reviews of Motion Pictures.

"The Covered Wagon" as it finally comes to the picture-going public of Southern California in the midst of the alluring environments of Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre, is a superb cinema achievement worthy of the highest encomiums. Slight imperfections, chiefly in the assembling, have been eliminated since its premiere showing here several weeks ago and, as the picture stands now, it is well-nigh the maximum in true art. Los Angeles critics seem to agree that Ernest Torrence takes the top honors although Tully Marshall is given credit generally for offering one of the most brilliant performances the screen has had in some time. J. Warren Kerrigan as the hero and Alan Hale as the villain have also registered personal triumphs while Lois Wilson does some of her best work as the heroine. James Cruze is entitled to much praise for the directorial genius he displays. All in all, "The Covered Wagon" constitutes another history-making high mark in screen history and there is every reason to believe it will stay in Hollywood prosperously for several months.

Although there is plenty of room in which to take exception to some of the revelations" in "Souls For Sale," Rupert Hughes is given credit for the creation of a motion picture sensation—one which is pretty sure to attract throngs to any theatre any place. With a total of twenty-five principal characters in the hands of twenty-five well-known photoplayers, it would seem Mr. Hughes put himself to the disadvantage of an unwieldy cast, but close scrutiny of the results of his assemblage of talent reveals traces of masterly handling and consummate skill in dove-tailing characterizations so as to prevent the confusion to be expected. By all means, "Souls For Sale" is a picture for the audience—it will ingratiate itself with most any class of people. It is replete with class and it is devoid of serious faults. It is an eloquent example of the tendency of the times. That tendency is to reach out and do something different.

"Success" is a daring title for a photoplay inasmuch as it gives the punsters too wide a latitude in which to poke fun in case the picture does not live up to its name. This one made by Metro is blessed with enough commendable qualities to keep it quite out of the class of the unsuccessful and it is in reality exceedingly interesting, because it neither sags or drags and in it is unfolded an intriguing story of stage life. Suspenseful moments abound after the picture gets away to a slow start and no one is liable to walk out before the word "Finis" is projected. Ralph Ince directed this picture and did a very good job of it, all things considered. Brandon Tynan and Naomi Childers, to whom are intrusted the two principal roles, do excellent work and add interest to the feature by virtue of their intelligent interpretations of two interesting characters. "Success" is especially suitable for neighborhood theatres.

"Slippy McGee" slips into the going with something of a pleasing rush and it is destined to return a fair profit because it offers a new twist or two which lift it out of the rut of the common-place. It is rather unfortunate that there should be so much of the hackneyed in some of the situations in this film, because if this occasional element could have been avoided, the whole story would have come under the wire as a novelty. As it is, it's only half novel. Wheeler Oakman and Colleen Moore carry the bulk of the responsibilities of the story although Sam De Grasse and Edmund Stevens handle their roles with artistic finesse. Wesley Ruggles directed with a great deal of ability, but overlooked some good points. However, for a crook story with a sufficiency of human interest, "Slippy McGee" sizes up well and with its memorable dramatic climax it is bound to send a good percentage of any audience away talking favorably.

"Foreign production is now at a rather low ebb, in great contrast to the activity one sees in the California studios. We think in larger terms over here, with more self-confidence and assurance, knowing, as everyone does who has made pictures on both sides of the Atlantic, that Los Angeles easily maintains its supremacy as the world-center of motion picture production."

This is the report of Joseph J. Cohn, Goldwyn production manager, who has just returned to the studio from a two months' trip to Europe, on a confidential mission.

Although not primarily in search of entertainment, Mr. Cohn visited Europe's gayest capitals, including the three cities which vie with each other as centers of Continental night life, viz: Paris, Berlin and Vienna. His itinerary also included Venice and Rome.

"If European pictures are not as good as the American product," he says, "one reason is that the Los Angeles-made pictures now showing abroad are just about four years old. This puts the foreign producer and public just that far behind American ideas and methods, which, as practically the whole world admits, set the pace."

TENDENCIES TERSELY TOLD

British-made films are coming into the United States in increasing numbers just now and although the quality excels that attained by the Britons five years ago, the general concensus of opinion among New York critics seems to be that the American standard is still untouched by several notches. The British idea of the cinema seems to be too stifled by old traditions of the London stage. Therefore, there is no trend toward serious competition for American producers from English sources.

Reference to the soul is unusually common among current photoplays. Rupert Hughes' "Souls For Sale" and Thomas H. Ince's "Soul of the Beast" are only starters of a list of about a dozen new pictures in which "soul" creeps into the titles.

Although there is a decided inclination on the part of most producers to do something different in the way of producing pictures, still they seem hog-tied by a reluctance no doubt inspired by the men whose responsibility it is to sell the pictures to the exhibitors. These salesmen shudder at the mere suggestion of trying to sell exhibitors something unlike they have been accustomed to buying. Could this means that fogyism grapples with the exhibitors? And how could they possibly fail to realize that the public literally craves something different?

There is still a determination in some quarters to make a reality of practical talking movies. Elias E. Ries, a New York electrical engineer, is the latest inventor to get into the limelight with an alleged perfection of a device making possible the utterance of words as the motion picture is being projected. But why all this seeking to obliterate the silent drama? It is more than likely that a vast majority of the "fans" would prefer a continuance of the omission of spoken words from screen entertainments. If they want the spoken drama, there is plenty of it to be had in the legitimate theatres.

Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky deny the trust charges preferred against them by the Federal Trade Commission, although they admit the acquisition of additional theatres. We have no opinion whatever as to the merits of this case, but we do commend the Federal Trade Commission for being so active in efforts to restrain monopolistic tendencies in the motion picture business. A trust is something which simply must not infest Filmland.

The fruits of film-making labors continue to come in pairs. Simultaneously with the release of "The Girl Next Door" comes the Victor Schertzinger production of "The Man Next Door." Guess we will have to call them neighbors.

BORZAGE HAS FOREIGN AMERICANS!

Frank Borzage, directing "Children of Dust," for Arthur H. Jacobs, has an all-American company, but by the sounding of their names one might think them all-abroad.

The list below demonstrates this fact:

Italy, Frank Borzage, art director.
Holland, Tristram Tupper, author.
Ireland, Frank Dazey, scenarist.
Scotland, Johnnie Walker, star.
France, Pauline Garon, star.
Germany, Frank Ormston, art director.
England, Howard Bretherton, cutter.

JACK COOPER ASKS QUESTIONS

Jack Cooper, who is playing the leading comedy role opposite Doris Eaton, in the Century Comedy in which the famous Gorham Follies appear, wants to know if studio employes are heartless

—if they KILL a set
—if they TRIM a light
—if they UNDRESS a set
—if they THROW a spotlight
—if they DRESS the stage
—if they SHOOT a scene
—if they BREAK DOWN film

Cooper asks these few simple questions, and believes anyone correctly answering these questions deserves a front seat at the theatre showing Century Comedies in which the dazzling Gorham Follies appear.

WOMEN ARE ZEALOUS IN SUPPORT OF EXPOSITION; CLARA K. YOUNG TO TALK

Although preparations for the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition have not yet advanced to a stage where the women's part in the great enterprise is definitely worked out, their clubs are taking a great interest in the Monroe Doctrine Centennial.

In response to an urgent invitation from Mrs. David A. Fraser, president of the San Diego County Federation of Women's Clubs, Miss Clara Kimball Young will talk on the significance of the centennial celebration at the convention to be held next Wednesday and Thursday in Balboa Park Auditorium, San Diego. Miss Young is peculiarly gifted as a speaker and probably is more often invited to appear before women's clubs than any other motion picture star. As a representative of the Revue and Exposition she will do much to interest residents of San Diego county in the international celebration, which opens in Los Angeles, July 2.

The exhibition bungalows, the first buildings to be erected in Exposition Park, made good headway this week and by May 1 it is expected the Spanish-Colonial city will be well along, so that an idea of its beauty when completed can be obtained. Plans for the buildings to be placed at the disposal of women's organizations include a beautiful court that will be the center of hospitality. Here will be a tea-room that will afford a pleasant resting-place in the course of sight-seeing and it is to be conducted on novel lines.

The work of landscape-gardening is to be most extensive and the recent rains have meant much to the elaborate scheme that is to be carried out on the grounds.

The Momus Special, dedicated by the Southern Pacific to the American Motion Picture Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, made a triumphal trip to New Orleans, arriving Tuesday evening. Many friends went to the station to bid godspeed to Miss Ruth Roland, who represented the Monroe Doctrine Centennial on the eastern journey, and from the first stop onward there proved to be the sort of enthusiasm that satisfied even such an exacting publicity man as Garrett Graham, who personally conducted the eventful tour.

Crowds awaited the train at every station. Bands played and there was much cheering as the distinguished Angelenos appeared. The mayors of many cities responded to the radio advance announcement of the coming of the "Special" and received the invitations from Mayor Cryer who urged attendance at the Premiere and subsequent five weeks of entertainment which the Revue and Exposition will offer.

Despite the counter attraction of a Confederate reunion in New Orleans an immense crowd assembled to welcome Miss Roland and the other Californians. School children almost mobbed the train in their demand for pictures of the star and the newspapers were all represented. Not even a President of the United States, or a presidential candidate could have drawn better than the Monroe Doctrine Centennial and its motion picture envoy, Miss Roland.

"ALICE ADAMS" PRINTS IN LOS ANGELES NOW

Rowland V. Lee, who directed, titled and edited "Alice Adams," starring Florence Vidor, was informed, on his return from Catalina Island yesterday, that the first prints of "Alice Adams," which he also adapted from Booth Tarkington's 1921 Pulitzer Prize novel, had been received by the Associated Exhibitors of Los Angeles.

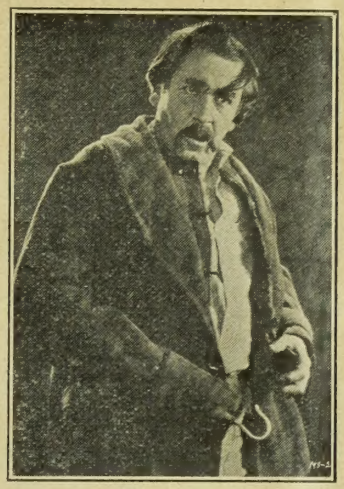
Mr. Lee had been on Catalina Island for several days, recuperating from an attack of the flu, which for several weeks held up work on "Desire" which he directed for Metro release.

Tom Moore With Viola

Tom Moore has been engaged to play opposite Viola Dana in "Rouged Lips," the first of her new series of Metro special productions on which filming will start in the near future. Harold Shaw will direct Miss Dana in the screen version of this story of the stage written by Rita Weiman.

Mr. Moore, who with his brothers, Owen and Matt, form one of the most widely known film families, has come west especially to appear in this picture which is his first with Miss Dana.

NOAH'S ART



No, not Noah's Ark, but Noah's Art. And Noah Beery long since won distinction as a great cinema artist. Here he is in one of his prize characterizations---in "Main Street". He is also the villain in the new version of "The Spoilers", and, well, he is in most of the big pictures.

"ETERNAL THREE" IS 4TH NEILAN-URSON PICTURE

With the completion of Marshall Neilan's "The Eternal Three," at the Goldwyn Studio, this producer celebrates the fourth production directed by himself in collaboration with Frank Urson.

Mr. Neilan's system of direction has always been marked by the collaboration of a co-director and is based on the ancient adage that two heads are better than one. It is Mr. Neilan's contention that no single director can do full justice to a story and that the collaboration of another mind in the directorial phase of picturemaking is highly essential. The record of consistent successes which have marked Neilan's past performances seems to confirm his belief.

Mr. Urson was affiliated with Mr. Neilan a year ago following the production of many Paramount successes in which the former directed the foremost stars of that organization. "The Eternal Three," it is said, will illustrate examples of achievements made possible only through the association of two directorial minds on the production of a photoplay.

WHAT'S WHAT AT WAMPAS FROLIC APRIL 21

The second annual "Wampas Frolic and Ball," to be given on the evening of Saturday, April 21, under the auspices of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers, an association of motion picture studio publicists and theatrical press agents, will be held on the world's largest studio stage recently completed at the Warner Brothers' studio.

A majority of the big cinema stars, producers, directors and others making up the personnels of the various studios in Los Angeles and vicinity will be in attendance, making the assemblage one of the most celebrated gatherings ever grouped under one roof.

Thirteen potential stars, selected and sponsored by the "Wampas," will be presented in a novel pageant at the big "Frolic." They are Eleanor Boardman, Evelyn Brent, Dorothy Devore, Virginia Browne Faire, Betty Francisco, Pauline Garon, Kathleen Key, Laura La Plante, Margaret Leahy, Helen Lynch, Derelys Perdue and Jobyna Ralston. These "stars of tomorrow" want to meet you in person at the ball.

And the thirteen present-day luminaries, who made their formal debut at last year's "Wampas Frolic," also will be present at this year's big joyfest. These include Lois Wilson, Maryon Aye, Jacqueline Logan, Bessie Love, Louise Lorraine, Lila Lee, Colleen Moore, Mary Philbin, Kathryn McGuire, Claire Windsor, Patsy Ruth Miller and Helen Ferguson. These charming young "stars of today" will appear in the costume of some one role they made famous on the screen during the past few months.

Fred Niblo, who was master of ceremonies at last year's ball, will officiate in the same capacity at the 1923 frolic. He will introduce the numerous celebrities to the audience and will also see to it that no speeches are made.

An elaborate entertainment program is now being arranged for the "Wampas Frolic and Ball." Three well known orchestras, a mammoth pageant and fashion parade to be staged under the supervision of J. K. Gorham, well known producer, a gorgeous ballet presented by Ernest Belcher, unique dancing numbers by Marvel and Curtyne Engler, and a score of other features will be offered preceding the dancing.

SOCIETY GIRL IS WINNING WAY IN FILMS

Another high society girl is making a successful conquest in Filmland. Martha Marshall is this latest one to score as a result of abandoning a life of ease in the midst of luxuries to embrace opportunities for a screen career.

Up to a year ago, Miss Marshall was a leader of Chicago's Smart Set. Now after a year of persistent effort, she has angled herself into that enviable position from which she bids fair to travel to leadership in film circles.

During her brief career as a photoplayer, she has won admiring friends for her promising histrionic work in such notable productions as "The Covered Wagon," "Adam's Rib" and in support of Betty Compson in "The Rustle of Silk," under the direction of Herbert Brenon.

Miss Marshall's next engagement will be in I. W. Irving's production of "Trapped," a sea story just about to be filmed at the Goldwyn Studios.

All those familiar with her talents predict a brilliant stellar future for her and she seems destined to go far in a short space of time.

Fay Forges Forward

Little Fay McKenzie has been and continues to be as busy as the next one. Her most recent career reads like a hasty tour of the whole studio district. No sooner had she finished in the Palmerplay, "Atonement," at the Ince Studios, than she was rushed into Marshall Neilan's cast appearing in "The Eternal Three" and the minute she completed this characterization at the Goldwyn Studios, she hurried over to the Rockett company to play Sarah Lincoln, the lamented Abe's baby sister in the historical photodrama of "Abraham Lincoln." Incidentally, Fay's sister, Ida, will play the part when the story calls for a lapse of time and she is supposed to be older.

Goulding Kept Busy

Edmund Goulding is rapidly finishing the script on "Broadway After Dark," and it will go into production soon under the personal supervision of Harry Rapf for Warner Brothers. The director has not yet been selected. Goulding was personally selected by David Belasco to do the adaptation of Belasco's famous play, "Tiger Rose," to the screen and he will start work on it within the week. Sidney Franklin will direct "Tiger Rose" and Lenore Ulrich will play the leading role. Actual production will start about the first of June.

MAE MARSH HAS A TITLED DADDY IN "PADDY"

Those who see Mae Marsh in the new British film, "Paddy the Next Best Thing," will scarcely realize that her film father in this production is Sir Simeon Stuart, a distinguished soldier and English aristocrat.

Just for the sake of the film, this fine old English gentleman forgot his title and disguised himself with a moustache.

Stuart, by the way, is one of the few titled people who has achieved his position in filmland by sheer hard work and determination, coupled with the very essential dramatic ability. He has been playing in films for three years only, but when at Magdalen College, Oxford, he was a very active member of the O. U. D. S., and played a great many leading parts for this society, which were always well applauded.

It was after he was demobilized at the close of the recent war that Sir Simeon cast his eye around to discover into what niche he could fit himself in order to maintain a flow of money into his almost empty coffers.

The stage attracted him, but the stage was overcrowded and so he determined, as have so many thousands of others, to try his luck in filmland. He is one of the fortunate ones, for he has gone far and not on account of his title, because until quite recently no one in the industry knew that Sir Simeon Stuart, the good-natured film actor was none other than Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Simeon Stuart.

At heart he is Bohemian, and although he is proud of his title, (for he is the seventh holder of the baronetcy, which was created in 1660), he never utilizes it in connection with his business.

As a soldier he has had a very distinguished career, for as a Major and D. A. A. G. he served in South Africa where he obtained a medal and three clasps and was many times mentioned in dispatches. During the recent war he commanded the Second Company of London Imperial Yeomanry in France and was several times gassed.

To see him with Paddy is to realize that a man is only as old as he feels, for he enters into the majority of Paddy's escapades with heart and soul.

HOLLYWOOD'S NEW MYSTERY OF THE FILMS

While watching a vaudeville show recently, Director Fred Caldwell of the L. K. C. Productions, discovered Gene Metcalfe, and through Dr. Frank E. Metcalfe, arranged an interview for Gene with William Jenner, west coast representative of the American Releasing Corporation.

Gene was introduced to Mr. Jenner as Mr. Palmer, who had been selected by Mr. Caldwell to play the juvenile lead in some forthcoming pictures. Mr. Jenner expressed the opinion that Mr. Palmer was just the type.

The following day Director Caldwell introduced a Miss Hamilton to Mr. Jenner, who was duly impressed with the well-dressed young woman's appearance. Then Miss Hamilton made some reference to a conversation she had held with him on the day previous. He was sure he had never before laid eyes on her.

"How much will you bet you didn't meet me in this office yesterday?" inquired Miss Hamilton.

"Only my right arm — and maybe a couple of teeth," was the answer.

"How about Mr. Palmer, whom you met yesterday?" she asked.

"Well, I'll be——" exclaimed Mr. Jenner. "Say, which are you, a man or a woman?"

"Sssh—— I'm a——"

Gosh, guess we'll have to wait for the next carload of notices from Gene Metcalfe's agent before the mystery is solved.

YOUTH'S BUSINESS ACUMEN WINS APPROVAL

Frank Borzage was busy one afternoon this week directing scenes with half a dozen youngsters of the street in his new picture, "Children of Dust," for Arthur H. Jacobs.

One of the juveniles had a bright idea for some diversion between scenes, so went outside and found some children who were anxious to see the studio.

"Wanna git in?" questioned one of the urchins.

"Sure—how kin we?"

"Gimme a penny an' I'll take yer troo. Yeh kin see Broza-gee and all the acteers; they're makin' real movies from Noo York."

Soon the director noticed that his gang of Gramercy Park youngsters had mysteriously grown from six to nearly thirty-six.

"Hey, Bunny," he yelled to his assistant, "where'd this regiment come from?"

Then Bunny went on a still hunt for a hole in the wall, but came upon the youthful financier working his Barnum speech outside.

When Bunny went to oust the children he met with such remonstrance that Borzage allowed them to remain and watch the shooting.

"MEANEST MAN" IS GETTING QUICKLY ONTO FILM

Principal Pictures Corporation's "The Meanest Man in the World" is in its fourth production week with filming progressing at a rapid pace. The production is being made at United Studios under the direction of Eddie Cline, and a cast of exceptional merit will be seen in the many characters made famous by George M. Cohan.

Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures Corporation, is now in New York conferring with Irving M. Lesser on general distribution matters pertaining to this comedy feature and all other Principal Picture products for the present and coming season.

According to Lesser, "The Meanest Man in the World" will be a comedy feature de luxe. No time nor expense is being spared in giving the screen a truly big picture in every sense of the word.

The cast now includes Bert Lytell, Blanche Sweet, Bryant Washburn, Maryon Aye, Helen Lynch, Carl Stockdale, Warde Crane, Forrest Robinson, Frances Raymond, Lincoln Stedman, William Conklin, Victor Potel, and others of equal merit.

Camera work is being done under Arthur Martinelli with Fred Eldridge acting as first assistant and Frederick C. Clarke in charge of still photographs.

The company will soon leave for Fresno, where many of the rural episodes of the former Cohan stage play will be filmed. Two huge stages at United Studios and many exterior settings occupy that spacious studio "lot" and no little amount of interest is being attached to the production by the film colony of Hollywood.

Lytell is ideally cast as "the meanest man" and the other artists have been selected with utmost care for the various portrayals in the comedy feature which is scheduled for release immediately after the summer months.

MOST BEAUTIFUL ARMS ARRIVE IN FILM COLONY

The world's most beautiful arms have arrived in Los Angeles. They were accompanied on their trip from Spokane by the body of the latest aspirant to the title of "America's Most Beautiful Woman." Both the arms and body are the personal property of Mrs. Veta L'Ehmann who comes to Los Angeles on a business trip in the interests of her husband, who has invented a moving picture device. Besides her great beauty, Mrs. L'Ehmann is one of the fastest swimmers on the Pacific Coast, being the holder of many medals. She looks like a bright possibility for a motion picture career.

"Big Boy" Williams has made such a hit in Charles R. Seeling's pictures of Western life that he's going to make a second series. It's the East that likes him best.

SUTHERLAND ADDED TO "GOLDEN WEST" CAST

Dick Sutherland has been assigned an important role in Edwin Carew's current production, "The Girl of the Golden West," now in the course of filming at the United Studios. Sutherland, who will be long remembered for his remarkable characterization of the ugly tramp in Harold Lloyd's screen success, "Grandma's Boy," is one of filmdom's most interesting characters, inasmuch as he seems to be alone in his field, even surpassing the facial features of Bull Montana in ugliness so intriguing. He will portray the role of the half-breed Mexican in "The Girl of the Golden West."

Trio of Stars Corralled

Estelle Taylor, Rod LaRoque and Kathryn McGuire compose the star triumvirate which will share stellar dramatic honors in Richard Thomas' newest six-reel thriller, "Other Men's Money," now in production at the Hollywood Studios. The comedy players are headed by Tom Wilson, delineator of negro types and famous for his work in "Reported Missing."

Vacations in Volcano

"Here I am in the crater of a volcano," says Kate Lester, "grande dame of the screen," who is taking a short rest from her duties at the Goldwyn studios at Coso Hot Springs. Miss Lester, who has appeared in grandmother and dowager roles in scores of pictures, is taking her first vacation in more than two years. She plans to return to the Goldwyn studios April 16.

Sells Chinese Story

Treve Collins, Jr., of Brooklyn, who divides his time between writing short stories for popular magazines, and writing screen originals and continuities for independent producers, says he has just sold the motion picture rights to his Chinese story "The Idol of Men Lip San," for production abroad.

AFTER TRYING 'EM ALL, BILL RETURNS TO FILMS

No doubt a great many of the present screen favorites have attained their prominence through their efforts in pictures, but the truly interesting character is the one who graduated into the film world from the hard school of experience. No more glaring example of this class can be recalled than William A. Carroll who is one of the high lights of the present cinema year.

The old-timers will doubtlessly remember Bill Carroll of the Rice and Dixey days. The same Bill Carroll who attained fame over-night at the old Bijou Theatre in "Adonis" and as quickly disappeared from the public eye. For the benefit of those who did not subsequently learn what became of him, it is fitting to explain that Mr. Carroll, even at that early date, realized the importance of varied experience to the true actor. At the conclusion of "Adonis," Mr. Carroll entered musical comedy, in which field he remained only long enough to make the managers fight for his services.

From musical comedy he took a fling at circus work. Here, as in all his endeavors in the amusement field, he was acclaimed. Not satisfied that he had tried all the branches of the theatrical business, Carroll left the Leon W. Washburn Circus and enrolled with the Ralph Cummings Dramatic Stock Company in Canada.

During his long stage experience Mr. Carroll has appeared in all varieties of plays, ranging from ' 'The Mummy and the Humming Bird" to "Dr. Wainright."

When he reached the pinnacle of success in New York he sighed for new worlds to conquer. He would probably still be sighing were it not for the advent of moving pictures. Here, again he was a pioneer, having been identified with Gaston Molies, the first person to use a human being in cinematography. He later joined the Biograph company and would have been happy in this field had not someone reminded him of the fact that he had never played vaudeville.

He completed a tour of the Pantages circuit and again resumed work in moving pictures.

Among his more recent roles are: Henry Drew in "House of Fifty Candles; John in, "Yellow Men and Gold;" Phillip Ashton in, "Gas, Oil and Water" and in support of Herbert Rawlinson in "Confidence."

BLUE SPEAKS FOR MAN WHO LIKES HIS BOSS

Monte Blue, Warner Brothers star, who just lately appeared as Doctor Kennicott in "Main Street," went up north last week to visit the various film exchanges and put a little personal note into the business.

During Monte's stay in Seattle he was requested to visit a small town near there. When he reached the town he found it in the throes of political warfare. Monte was requested to speak in behalf of one of the candidates, but declined until he found that the man was very much in favor of Warner Brothers' pictures; then he said: "Well, sir, any fellow who likes those pictures should make a good mayor, so I'll speak for him."

A mass meeting was called for that evening and everything was hurriedly arranged.

Truly Rolled by Experts

"For surprises, spend a day in pictures," says Truly Shattuck, former vaudeville headliner who is now playing in the Gasnier production, "Daughters of the Rich," at the Schulberg Studios.

"The assistant director told me to 'get into negligee' the other morning. I donned a particularly handsome Irish lace affair. On the set, specialists from a Parisian beauty shop, according to the story, had to roll me up and down the carpet and give me reducing exercises. Now, I remember these scenes by a torn bit of finery—and corns on my hips."

BULL WILL MAKE "THE UNCOVERED WAGON" NOW

Florence Gilbert has been resigned by Hunt Stromberg to play in Bull Montana's new burlesque on "The Covered Wagon." The comedy will be known as "The Uncovered Wagon" and will follow the great film epic as closely as "Rob 'Em Good" did "Robin Hood."

Miss Gilbert recently finished important roles in "Snowed Under" and "Breaking Into Society," and it was her excellent work in these comedies which won her the cherished ingenue role in the burlesque on Emerson Hough's historic photoplay.

This makes Miss Gilbert's fortieth two-reel comedy, although she has twenty-four features to her credit, also.

Returns From Frisco

James Farley, the well known heavy, has just returned from San Francisco, where exterior scenes from the new Paramount Picture, "The Woman With Four Faces," starring Betty Compson, under the direction of Herbert Brenon, have been filmed for the past week.

Why Ralph's Thankful

Ralph Lewis is feeling very happy over the fact that in the F. B. O. production of "Blow Your Own Horn," he does not die or get killed off. It is his first production for several months in which he does not get his life snuffed out before the final fade-out.

Johnny Walker is always on the run from one picture to another. His popularity is to blame. He has just finished the leading role in Frank Borzage's "Terwilliger", and is back at the R-C Studios.

COUPLE RETURNS FROM EUROPE TO ENTER FILMS

Among the most recent interesting arrivals in California are Mr. George D. Colovos and his beautiful American wife, Mrs. Colovos, or, to be more exact, Mme. Septimus Valistoke Colovos, who is the daughter of one of the finest southern families and is a true southern type.

M. and Mme. Colovos have just arrived from Europe, where they have charmed on the screen and stage for several seasons. Their work took them to all the principal cities of Europe, but both claim they have never seen anything to compare to the beauty of California.

Kent Has Real Life Double

Have you a double? Are you called to account for the sins of another?

Kraufurd Kent, playing a leading role in the Gasnier production, "Mothers-in-Law," faces this predicament, but with this advantage—his double is a perfectly behaved friend.

For years past, Kent has been confused with Frederick Tiden, an actor well known in New York. Even brother members of the Lambs Club constantly mistake one for the other. At Grauman's Theatre, recently, Kent accompanied Reginald Denny to a Sunday morning concert. After a careful rendition of several selections, a number of people waited to congratulate him as "my old friend, Frederick Tiden!"

Actor Gets New Tooth

Theodore Hays looks natural once again. The tooth which was knocked out during a recent film fight at the Hollywood Studios has been replaced with one of the dentist's products, and once again Mr. Hays can chew a complete mouthful.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

SAN FRANCISCO, April 9.—Gibson Gowland, Zasu Pitts, Fanny Midgley and Frank Hayes aal arrived in San Francisco last week to join Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed" for Goldwyn. Chester Conklin and Jean Hersholt are still to come, when the cast will be complete. The company is working very hard day and night on their set at Hayes and Laguna Streets, with a little location work. Having been drowned in the cold, dark waters of the bay on Friday night, Ceasare Gravina has almost finished his part in the picture, and will return to Los Angeles in a day or two.

Paul Powell, director, is editing "The Fog" made by the Graf Productions, at the Pacific studios at San Mateo. The shooting of the picture was finished on Thursday after a little more than seven weeks' work.

Joseph Kerr has severed his connection as publicity director for the Paul Gerson studios on Page Street and returned to Los Angeles.

The Victor B. Fisher Productions began work at the Hollywood studios last Monday on the filming of "Youth Triumphant." Ward Crane, lately with Lasky in "Within the Law," and William Boyd have been added to the cast. David Chaplin, business manager of the corporation, and Iverson Blake went south, from the office here, on Sunday to remain during the shooting of the picture.

The Rellineo Film Syndicate, of which Dr. Orlando E. Miller is the head, and who has offices in the Chronicle Building, has started the filming of their first picture in a southern studio. The story is as yet unnamed, but it will be a picture with a physchological punch. Louis W. Chaudet is directing.

John Arnold, cameraman on "The Fog," is returning to Los Angeles in a day or two. He says he has enjoyed every day of his ten weeks' stay in San Francisco, and will always be more than willing to come back. His next picture will be at the Metro studio under Harold Shaw's direction, the story by Rita Wellman.

The Famous Players-Lasky company making "The Woman With Two Faces," put off their expected coming to San Francisco for a week, but they really arrived on Sunday morning. They will do some jail and other location work here for several days. The company includes Herbert Brenon, director, Harold Schwartz, assistant director, James Howe, cameraman, Betty Compson, Richard Dix, Gladden James, Theodore von Eltz and some dozen other members of the cast and staff.

With Eric Von Stroheim's outfit now filming "Greed" is what is probably the highest paid actor for his size in captivity. A large black raven with a friendly disposition, but seemingly little conversation, who is drawing the merry little salary of $75 dollars a week.

San Francisco people have had the unusual opportunity the last week of seeing a favorite star either in person or on the screen, as Elsie Ferguson was playing "The Wheel of Life" at the Columbia Theatre, while her picture "Outcast" held the screen at the Royal.

ANOTHER FOOTBALL HERO TO BECOME FILM HERO

Three years ago Robert Cosgriff, full-back of that famous Oregon football team which played Harvard off her feet, to finally lose the game on a fluke play, at Pasadena, visited Hollywood.

When he returned to college his mind was made up that some day he would return to Hollywood, equipped to take some part in the great motion picture industry which has its home here.

A course in dramatic art was the result. Graduating, Cosgriff's ability was recognized immediately by leading stock companies of the Northwest. More lately he has been featured in a series of pictures made in Portland and released by Pathe.

He has now come to Hollywood, where he has been assured of leading roles by some of the most prominent producers.

He will probably be seen first in Irving Cummings' next all-star production.

ROBERT COSGRIFF

FROM WITHIN FILMDOM'S INNER PORTALS

Gladys Walton has just started her starring vehicle, "Sawdust," at Universal City under the direction of Jack Conway.

It is a story of the old time circus days when the appearance of the big tents in a community was the occasion of a general holiday. It was adapted to the screen by Hugh Hoffman from a magazine story by Courtney Riley Cooper.

She will be supported in the cast by several well known and popular screen players, including Niles Welch, Edith Yorke, William Robert Daly, Frank Brownlee and Mathew Betz.

Extensive improvements have been made in the property department at Universal City, where nineteen companies are dependent upon one studio's facilities, not counting the outside firms that lease space there.

Under management of A. E. Rosenberg, the department has been considerably enlarged, "Props" to the value of twenty-five thousand dollars have been added to the stock and ten thousand spent on general improvements.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the spectacle film starring Lon Chaney, following several other specials of unusual magnitude, made such demands upon the existing stock that enlargement and improvement were necessary. "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is not only the biggest motion picture undertaking in history, but, due to its period and locale, the most exacting in costuming and investiture.

With the recovery of William Duncan, incapacitated for several weeks past by a broken hand, work will start within the coming month on "The Steel Trail," Universal's big railroad story, by George Plympton and George Pyper.

Duncan was the victim of one of the oddest accidents in the history of Universal City. While riding his horse in a thrilling "Rescue scene" he stretched his hand out over the animal's head as it reared sharply. His hand, weighted by a heavy revolver, was forcibly hit by metal on the bridle, and a shattered bone resulted.

Despite his pain the actor finished the scene.

"The Steel Trail" marks a reunion between actor and playwright.

While filming some very dangerous fire scenes for "Now You See It," an R-C picture, which pames W. Horne is directing, Virginia Fox, who plays the leading feminine role, was uninjured. In fact, startling excitement remained completely away.

Tom Gallery, the hero of the screen story, made no daring rescues except those ordered by the director.

This story is quite unusual because it is against all stereotyped rules of press-agentism.

Following several weeks at Universal City the author will return to Oakland, having recently purchased a new home on Lake Merritt, and thenceforth plans to gravitate between studio and home.

"The most amazing thing to me," said Beaumont on his arrival at Universal City, "is the immensity of the film capital of America. After going over the gigantic 'Hunchback of Notre Dame' settings and the great Vienna street setting of 'Merry-Go-Round,' and seeing the big productions in the making, I was almost breathless with amazement. It gives one a thrill for the first time to see crowds of several thousand directed with the precision of an army,—a thrill almost akin to awe."

FISHER JOINS IN INDEPENDENT FILMING

The ranks of independent producers have been augmented by the formation of a new concern, Fisher Productions, which plans to produce a series of offerings, the first of which will be "Youth Triumphant," from the story by George Gibbs, which ran serially in the Green Book magazine. An all-star cast is being assembled at the Hollywood Studios, where the company will operate.

Victor B. Fisher will supervise the making of each production and attend to the business affairs of the organization. Mr. Fisher was for two years general manager of Associated Photoplays. Prior to that he was associated in Super Art Productions and concerned in the Production of "Bubbles" with Mary Anderson, and other photoplays.

San Francisco capitalists are numbered among the officers and members of the directorate of Fisher Productions. Aaron L. Jaffe, manufacturer of the northern city, is president; S. L. Blake, formerly affiliated with the Anglo-California Trust Company of San Francisco, has the post of secretary, and Victor B. Fisher is treasurer.

Lillian Ducey will direct "Youth Triumphant" under Mr. Fisher's supervision. Mrs. Ducey has had wide experience, having been associated with Allan Dwan, Eric Von Stroheim and Maurice Tourneur. "Blind Husbands," "The Christian," "The Scoffer," "Deep Waters" and "The Forbidden Thing,' are among the pictures she has worked on in the past.

Dryden Tells of India

Wheeler Dryden, young English actor-playwright, read a paper entitled "Dramatic Art in India," at a meeting of The Playcrafters, held on Sunday, April 8, at the home of Sydney Sprague, president of the organization. Mr. Dryden illustrated his talk with a number of "still" photographs brought by him from Bombay, India. In these pictures Mr. Dryden posed as the hero and the villain (a dual role) of a novel published in Gujerati, the native language of the Bombay presidency. Mr. Dryden also exhibited a copy of the novel itself, in which reproductions of the photographs were used as illustrations. The novel bears the dedication to Mr. Dryden in the personal handwriting of its author, Mr. P. J. Marzban, a noted Parsee dramatist and philosopher. This is the second time Mr. Dryden has read his interesting paper on Indian dramatic art, the previous occasion being at a meeting of the Ebell Club in Los Angeles.

MURIEL SHOWS US UNIQUE WAY TO STEAL PICTURE

There are all kinds of ways to "steal a picture," but Muriel McCormac's way is absolutely the most certain and the most effective. She simply hides her rival for camera honors just as the camera starts. Here's proof of the proclivity of the winsome little Miss for just such extreme measures. It happened when she was playing opposite little Mickey McBan in Gasnier's "Poor Men's Wives." Muriel decided she was to have a scene all to herself despite Mickey's protestations in favor of staying in camera range. Hence down dropped a big Turkish towel and all of Mickey that was left to be photographed was Mickey's feet, which he is not featuring at all.

"I hated to do it, but it was my scene and Mickey wouldn't move out of it," Muriel says.

Muriel and Mickey did so well as the Heavenly Twins in the Gasnier picture that now William Fox has engaged them to be twins in the Dustin Farnum picture which is scheduled to start early next week.

Muriel McCormac's head and Mickey McBan's feet.

HOW NIBLO GETS RESULTS FROM ACTORS

Fred Niblo became even more firmly entrenched in the front line of directors with the beginning of "Captain Applejack," his second independent production for Louis B. Mayer and Metro release.

Not only because he has a big story with an all-star cast and a studio of his own, but because he revealed the secret of his success in a two minute conversation with one player.

Thomas Ricketts, admirable old character star, is playing the role of "Lush," the sparklingly funny British butler of the story.

Mr. Ricketts asked Mr. Niblo's suggestions for one bit of action. Mr. Niblo told him and then asked what he thought of it.

"You know more about the role than I do," he said, "You are a splendid actor and you are living the role of 'Lush.' I will welcome every suggestion from you to make the character the outstanding role of the production."

Mr. Ricketts is one of an all-star cast which includes Matt Moore, Enid Bennett, Barbara La Marr, Mrs. Mathilde Brundage, Robert McKim and Otto Hoffman.

MOVING DAY SOON TO COME FOR WARNERS

Moving day is rapidly approaching at the Warner Brothers Studio. Files, desks and all sorts of paraphernalia are being assembled so that they can be moved into the new executive offices. Equipment is beginning to arrive. Part of the library which S. L. Warner contracted for on his recent trip to New York is beginning to come in. The Warner Brothers expect to be comfortably settled in their new offices within two weeks. Several new systems of office work have been worked out by J. L. and S. L. Warner and they will be put into effect when the new studio opens.

"We are doing out utmost to get our studio down to a firm business basis and run it as systematically as any other business," says J. L. Warner. "And to that end all the experts in business procedure necessary have been obtained to launch our new offices. There is no reason why a studio cannot be systematized and placed on a basis the same as any business, that is, of course, the office; it wouldn't be so easy to keep the directors and actors down to a business schedule, as they are continually making changes and for various reasons cannot arrange things too far ahead."

MAX GRAF SIGNS MILDRED FOR LONG TERM

It is nothing less than terrible the way everybody keeps pestering Mildred Harris these days. And the sad, sad part of it is that all of them are endeavoring to force money on her—money and jobs—"engagements" in theatrical parlance.

Motion picture producers, vaudeville producers, musical comedy producers and dramatic producers — all of them have lately discovered that Mildred Harris is a lady of versatile possibilities. She, however, also knows what she wants—namely, to be a sure-enough photoplay star. A happy career during which her name has blazoned in electric lights, exclusively as a photoplayer, has convinced her that the articulate theatre does not offer sufficient opportunity for reaching out to the great multitude who have learned to love her.

Miss Harris became convinced of this when a month ago she left the vaudeville stage to play the leading feminine role in "The Fog," which is being produced in San Francisco under the personal supervision of Max Graf.

After a year of vaudeville, Miss Harris finds her present work far more interesting. "It affords you a chance to give play to your emotions. It is much less wearing on the nerves, and consequently one is able to keep in better health."

This last item is a matter of considerable concern with the fair Mildred, which is why she spends her hours of recreation far from the glare of the studio lights, motoring with her mother near San Francisco. She does not worry about the pestering offers—not she. She has signed a contract to appear in the future under the exclusive management of Max Graf, if you please, and now she is letting that gentleman do the worrying.

Esmelton Demurs

Fred Esmelton, playing the role of the whimsical butler in Goldwyn's "Three Wise Fools," says he does not think it is fair for those eastern welfare workers to send out queries to women asking how much spooning they did before marriage without saying something to the men. Esmelton is going to take it upon himself to send a thousand queries to married actors, electricians and travelling salesmen, asking how much spooning they did prior to the marriage ceremony.

Harry Burns Recovers

After being confined to the Culver City Hospital for eight weeks, Harry Burns is at his home again and almost entirely recovered from his serious illness. He resides at 1428 Gordon street.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Eva Novak has completed "Temptation" for the Wilnat Production Company.

Michael Dark has completed his role of Lord Balfour in the Charles Brabin production "Six Days."

Arthur Stuart Hull is finishing his role in the new Clara Kimball Young production tentatively titled "La Rubia."

Lillian Lawrence has completed her role of the mother in the new Vitagraph production starring Alice Calhoun.

Ernest Butterworth, Sr., actor and author, has again taken up the pen and joined forces with the Harry Edmondson unit.

Eva Novak's series of articles now published in book form will be off the press in a few days. The title is "Beauty Hints For the Blonde."

Nelson McDowell has just completed his role of "Sonora Slim," in the Edwin Carewe production of "The Girl of the Golden West."

Taylor Graves has completed "Only 38," under the direction of William de Mille. Others in the cast are Elliott Dexter, May McAvoy, and Lois Wilson.

Huntly Gordon is in Catalina making water scenes for the new Lasky production, "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife." Gloria Swanson is starred in this production.

Cullen Landis has returned from San Mateo where "The Fog" was made for Metro. The entire production was made "on location" and at the Pacific studios there.

"Bull" Montana, Metro's cave man comedian, led the orchestra on the occasion of the opening of his burlesque, "Rob 'Em Good," at Loew's Warfield Theatre in San Francisco.

Ethel Grey Terry is at work on the new Jack Dillon production, "A Self-Made Wife." Miss Terry is playing the title role under the direction of Mr. Dillon at Universal City.

Myrtle Stedman is again playing a "modern mother" role in the new Goldwyn production, "Six Days," now in process of production under the direction of Charles Brabin.

Carl Gerard has completed his role of the juvenile in the new Cosmopolitan production featuring Anita Stewart. The title is "The Love Piker," and was written by Frank R. Adams.

Myrtle Stedman is playing Olive Kingston, mother Corinne Griffith, in the Charles Brabin production, "Six Days," from the pen of Elinor Glyn.

Taylor Graves has completed the juvenile role in the William De Mille production "Only 38." The production was made in twenty-two working days.

Huntly Gordon has returned from Catalina, where water scenes were made for the next Gloria Swanson production, "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife."

Nelson McDowell, having finished with "The Girl of the Golden West," has gone over to the Universal lot to play a minister for Richard Stanton in his Northwestern production.

Harold Shaw, who will direct Viola Dana in Rita Weiman's "Rouged Lips," while in England directed Cyril Maude in the only motion picture in which this famous stage star ever appeared.

Lionel Belmore and Lillian Leighton have been added to the cast of "Other Men's Money," under the direction of Richard Thomas, which is in production at the Hollywood Studios.

Mae Murray's portable dressing room built especially for her use during the filming of "The French Doll," for Metro, is quite as elaborate and bizarre as some of the dazling settings in this picture.

Metro has dispatched "location scouts" to Wyoming to choose the natural settings to be used in the filming of Katharine Newlin Burt's "The Eagle's Feather," under the direction of Edward Sloman.

Otis Harlan has been assigned the role of a Chief Eunuch, in the forthcoming Maurice Tourneur production, "The Brass Bottle," now under way at the United Studios for First National release.

Margaret Landis has returned from Truckee, where snow scenes for the new Harry Carey production were made. The title of this new Carey production for Robertson-Cole is "The Miracle Baby."

Fred Huntly, well-known character actor, and Charles Stevens, one of the screen's "dirtiest guys," have been added to the cast of "The White Silence," which Chester M. Franklin is directing for the Warner Brothers.

"Main Street" which has just been completed at the Warner Brothers studio, is going forward rapidly under the guiding hand of Director Beaumont and film editor Lewis Milestone.

James Kirkwood, who is now enacting the leading male role in Mrs. Wallace Reid's anti-narcotic film, "Human Wreckage," this week branded the report of his engagement to Lila Lee as "idle gossip."

Lincoln Stedman is playing the role of Barth, the office boy, in the Sol Lesser production of "The Meanest Man in the World." This is the screen version of the George M. Cohan production.

Lincoln Stedman is busy these days playing the role of the office boy in the Sol Lesser production "The Meanest Man in the World." Eddie Cline is directing this screen version of the George M. Cohan hit.

Edwin Moulten, who played important parts in the Universal serial, "The Phantom Fortune" and Roy Stewart's "Blue Blood and Red," is supporting Ann Little in "The Eagle's Talons," Duke Worne's latest serial for Universal.

B. P. Fineman has announced the signing of House Peters, sterling dramatic actor, for the leading part in "Don't Marry for Money," the production which will mark Mr. Fineman's return to West Coast activities after an absence in the East of a year.

E. de B. Newman and Robert Thornbury of the Courtland Productions are filming "The Man from Ten Strike," a Guy Bates Post special, on the Thomas H. Ince lot. The story was written by James Oliver Curwood. Fred Myton arranged the scenario.

Not only does Viola Dana have to perfect herself in some difficult chorus steps for her new Metro picture, but she must also learn the Highland Fling and the Irish reel for "Rouged Lips," Rita Weiman's story of the stage which will be the first of her new Metro starring pictures.

Burnell Manly, who scenarized "Women Wake Up" for King Vidor, adapted Daniel Frederick Whitcomb's original screen story, "Other Men's Money," for Richard Thomas, which the latter is directing at the Hollywood Studios. Like the other Thomas features, "Other Men's Money" will be published in six-parts.

Three of the costumes that Lewis Stone wears in his portrayal of the Marquis de La Tour d'Azyr in Rex Ingram's production of "Scaramouche," weigh 30 pounds apiece and are typical of the sartorial accouterments of a French Nobleman in the Eighteenth century.

George O'Hara completed this week a thrilling fight faction in "The End of a Perfect Fray," tenth in the Witwer "Fighting Blood" series, his adversary being Morry Lux, noted ring veteran. The new vehicle has some delightful home scenes, comedy touches and the usual charming romance. Mal St. Clair directs.

Joe Butterworth, brother of the well-known juvenile, Ernest Butterworth, has been engaged by the J. K. McDonald company at Hollywood Studios. He is playing the part of Sam in the First National attraction, "Penrod and Sam," while Ben Alexander enacts the role of Penrod.

Harold Lloyd has purchased the site of the old Pass school, located at Sunset Boulevard and Gordon Street for a price of $55,000. In contradiction to circulated reports, the property was purchased as an investment, and will not be the location for a new studio to house future Lloyd activities.

Madeline Hurlock, leading lady to Ben Turpin in Mack Sennett comedies, was granted a divorce from her husband, John Sterling, on the grounds of cruelty and desertion. Miss Hurlock termed her husband a "love pirate," and declared he had married Florence Wright of New York, under the pretense that he had been divorced.

Senorita Marina Vega, the Mexican girl who attempted suicide recently at the home of Charlie Chaplin, will be returned to Mexico City by officials of the county charities, under whose observation she has been since her arrest, when information was received from Mexico to the effect that sensational attempts at suicide were an obsession with her.

Cinema stars will play a big part in staging the "Charity Circus," which will be held at Praeger Park, May 4 to 13 inclusive. Cecil B. DeMille, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Ray and Tom Mix will act as aides to Capt. George K. Home. Marian Fairfax and Mrs. Cecil B. DeMille will have charge of the presenting of the "King Tut Harem," in which many of filmdom's most prominent and beautiful ingenues will appear. Mrs. Charles Ray has been assigned the position of supervising balloon sales at the circus.

THIS NEW STAR OF DAWN SHINES BRIGHTLY

Arthur Trimble has finished his second two-reel comedy under the direction of Jack Dawn, who also wrote the stories.

The first story is centered around a youngster who dreams of the days of King Arthur. Arthur Trimble portrays the youngster who dreams he is a prince. The new boy star is supported in this picture by Bessie Love.

The second comedy is centered around a regular kid, who is mistreated by his foster family. The titles are now being written by Max Abramson, who titled many of the Jackie Coogan pictures.

Trimble is one of the most promising stars of the ultra juvenile sphere, and is not yet seven years of age. Exceptional talent, big stories and splendid direction is going into every one of these pictures.

New stories are being whipped into shape by Director Dawn, who will continue to direct little Trimble in the others to follow.

The comedies are being made at the Century Studio.

FATE CONSPIRES TO MAKE LITTLE GIRL AN ACTRESS

The old saying that "Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them" has found a Betty Giles, little ten-year-old school girl from New Orleans, is having opportunities to become a screen actress literally thrust upon her. She never intended to be an actress. In fact, her parents were in opposition to a professional life.

Fate started dealing her a helping hand when Betty took part in the Carnival of the Woodcrafters of America at the Hollywood Bowl. Betty was the screen stars' choice as the winner. Later she was watching a Harold Lloyd comedy being filmed on the street, and the director drew her out of the crowd to play in the picture. Lastly, when visiting at the Charles Ray studio, Betty was snatched up to play "the big sister" to the Pilgrim children in "The Courtship of Miles Standish." She has had several other offers since then. So little Betty is finding herself an actress in spite of herself.

Holmes Needs No Home

Stuart Holmes probably is the busiest man in Hollywood these days. During the daylight hours, he carries one of the featured roles in "Daughters of the Rich," a Gasnier production being filmed at the Schulberg Studios. At night, the Universal Company is employing his talents.

CALNAY ENGAGES STAGE STAR FOR NEW PICTURE

Arthur Beckman, a delineator of character roles on the American and Canadian speaking stage, since his eighth year of age has played opposite such celebrities as Kessler, Morrison, Madame Waxman, and many others, before he entered screen work. He is now engaged by the West Coast Productions to play the difficult part of the condemned man, whose execution in "Why Do We Live?" is expected to arouse such sympathy even in the hearts of the staunchest believers of capital punishment. The picture is designed to awaken the conscience of all the nations against what it holds to be the barbaric and unworthy law of legal murder.

"There is no more promising artist on the screen today," said Mr. Calnay, "than Arthur Beckman, capable enough to depict a role so sympathetic as this, yet with sufficient villainy to deserve the supreme penalty."

NEW ASSOCIATION IS SIGNING PLAYERS UP

Gordon Maloney, formerly of the Knickerbocker Stock Company of Chicago, yesterday, through the excellent work of the Motion Picture Players' Association, was signed to a long-term contract as leading man by the Jack Laughlin productions.

Mr. Maloney has been a trooper for fourteen years and one of the first members of the Motion Picture Players' Association. He leaves for Fresno, the home of the Jack Laughlin productions, and expresses his delight at the fine way in which the Motion Picture Players' Association co-operated with him.

Carol May, formerly ingenue of the road company of "Abie's Irish Rose," has also received favorable recognition and has joined Eddie Lyons Comedies.

Marjorie a Busy Actress

Since completing a part with the Charles Ray company in "The Courtship of Miles Standish," Marjorie Warfield's activities have been many and varied, including parts at the Goldwyn and Lasky studios, at Universal City, and with the Monte Banks company. In Herbert Brenon's "The Rustle of Silk," at the Lasky studios, Miss Warfield is said to have done some excellent work, which likewise applies to her characterization of an office girl in the Herbert Blanché production, "Twenty Dollars," starring Herbert Rawlinson and Doris Pawn at Universal. At present Miss Warfield is working with Monte Banks in his latest comedy, "Please Arrest Me."

Town Talk Boosts Brown

Otheman Stevens, purveyor and conveyor of Town Talk in the Los Angeles Examiner, blossomed forth last week with an exceedingly complimentary paragraph anent Sedley Brown. It seems some little bird put a word in Town Talk's ear to the effect that a certain motion picture producer was negotiating to secure Mr. Brown's services as a director for forthcoming productions. He ended by saying, "Any producer who wishes to make the pictures Will Hays ask for, entertaining, brilliant and clean can have them if he lets Sedley direct."

FINEMAN SIGNS BROWN TO DIRECT "REDEEMER"

Clarence Brown, for years assistant to Maurice Tourneur, and who won his spurs as director of "The Great Redeemer," "The Light in the Dark," and other big pictures, has been signed by B. P. Fineman to direct "Don't Marry for Money," the picture which marks this producer's resumption of West Coast activity after a year's absence in the East.

Charles Dorian, who was also with Tourneur for some years, will occupy the post of assistant director. Frank D. Ormstrom, responsible for the effects in "Kismet" and "Within the Law," is art director.

Silvano Balboni, the cameraman for "Quo Vadis," "The Last Days of Pompeii," and other great foreign spectacles, will make his American debut as chief cameraman for "Don't Marry for Money." Balboni is recognized abroad as pre-eminent in his field.

Unique Last Rites

Marie Prevost is reported to have said that she will never again don a bathing suit for a motion picture. The post mortem with her famous garment took place recently at the Warner Brothers studios in Los Angeles following the completion of "Brass," when the star, with shovel in hand, dug a grave and buried her once priceless treasure.

What is believed to be a new pace in the electrical phase of motion picture production is being set at Universal City, where H. D. Brown, chief electrician, is utilizing 100 electricians to supply the proper lighting effects for the filming of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." The light reflected by all the Kleigs and sun-arcs totals approximately 100,000,000 candle power. More than 1200 extras are being used each evening, during the filming of the night scenes in this production.

Lloyd Bacon, son of the late Lightin' Frank Bacon, has arrived in Filmland and will devote his undivided time to directing a series of one-reel comedies for Universal starring Walter Forde, the English comedian.

JACKIE COOGAN'S $50 IS IN THE RING

Even the kiddie stars of filmdom are desirous of participating in the second annual "Wampas Frolic and Ball" to be held Saturday evening, April 21, on the monster stage now under construction at the Warner Brothers' Studio in Hollywood. Comes Jackie Coogan with a $50 bill in his pudgy little hand and lays it on the counter for a box at the affair.

But Jack Coogan, Jr., was not the first to secure one of the muchly prized loges for the publicists' big entertainment. Manager E. C. Bostick of Loew's State Theatre, has the distinction of being holder of Box No. 1, while close at his heels were B. P. Schulberg, Edwin Carewe, Al Christie, Joseph Henaberry, Abraham Lehr, and a host of other equally well-known members of the film colony who had to satisfy themselves with boxes bearing higher numbers.

Upon learning that the "Wampas" had opened the seat sale for their second annual frolic, B. P. Schulberg, producer of many big screen successes, wired his protege, Ethel Shannon, who, by the way, is one of the "stars of tomorrow" recently selected by the publicists, to reserve one of the box admission tickets she was selling for him.

According to Joseph Jackson, president of the "Wampas," it will be necessary to hang out an "S. R. O." sign on the evening of Saturday, April 21, if not before, providing the ticket sale continues as it has begun. Every present indication points toward a capacity "house" at the frolic and arrangements to handle the crowd are being made accordingly.

Preceding the ball, an unique entertainment will be staged at the advertisers' frolic, on the program of which will appear many celebrated stars of the cinema and legitimate stage. A pageant, in which the stars introduced at last year's "Wampas Frolic" will take part, will be one of the many big features of the evening. In this novel prelude, the thirteen original artistes sponsored by the publicists will appear in costumes worn by them in their greatest film triumphs of the past few months. The individual stars will be presented to the assembled crowd in this manner while the "stars of tomorrow," the latest aggregation of potential screen luminaries to be taken under the "Wampas" wings, will be introduced in an equally effective manner.

Raymond McKee and Margaret Courtot, stars of "Down to the Sea in Ships," were married last week in New York.

ANN'S CONSCIENCE ADDS TO HER DANGERS

If there is any one thing that Ann Little wants to impress upon the minds of picture fans, it is the fact that she does not allow a double to perform the precarious stunts she is called upon to do in various photoplay thrillers.

"To allow another girl to enact the dangerous stunts that I am given credit for would be gaining admirers under false pretenses," Miss Little says. "I have been nick-named 'the most daring girl on the screen,' and I want to prove, at least, that the thrills and dangerous scenes interpolated in my pictures are provided solely by myself."

So Ann is setting about to prove it all—this week.

The Universal company now filming the serial, "The Eagle's Talons," in which Miss Little is being starred, has left for Redlands, where the final scenes of the fourth episode will be "shot."

The public at large will be invited to the scene of action when Miss Little will perform several of the most dangerous stunts of the entire serial, one of which will necessitate her jumping from a speeding train onto her horse.

Duke Worne, director of the serial, has pleaded with Miss Little to allow an experienced stunt actress to perform these risky feats, but has met with no luck.

Miss Little is adamant whenever she is asked to refrain from the practice of enacting hazardous scenes, sticking to her firm belief that a person should not accept glory resulting from another's efforts.

Barry's Plans Changed

"The Printer's Devil," an original story by Julien Josephson, will be the first picture for Wesley Barry at the Warner Brothers' Studio upon his return from his personal appearance tour. The Warner brothers had intended making "Little Johnny Jones" from the George M. Cohan, of which they own the screen rights, first, but because of the merit of Josephson's story and its particular adaptability to Wesley Barry, they have decided to make "The Printer's Devil" first. William Beaudine will direct. None of the cast has been selected.

Dog Joins Free-lances

Brownie, the former Century Comedy wonder dog, is now a free-lance actor. He got his release from Century March 28, and two days later went to work with Fred Hippard, taking eleven of his pals along with him. Here Brownie interrupts: "Oh, Boy! Am sure having fun!"

MARY PICKFORD'S LIBRARY

Convalescing patients in hospitals and the dear old ladies at the Los Angeles County Poor Farm will no longer want for reading matter when Mary Pickford's new library plan gets going. All magazines and newspapers subscribed to by the Pickford-Fairbanks studios are now being read with the utmost dispatch and then collected by the little star and distributed to hospitals and the poor farm. Practically every publication of any consequence in this country as well as abroad is subscribed for by Miss Pickford, and since only a few days is required to read them each month when they arrive, they can then be sent to hospitals while their contents are still a matter of current news.

V. F. Joins R.-C.

Virginia Fox, screen comedienne and one of Hollywood's "baby stars," has been placed under a long term contract by the Robertson-Cole organization. Her first work under her new contract is the leading woman in "Now You See It," which has just gone into production, with James Wesley Horbe directing. Her role in "Now You See It" represents Miss Fox's first serious characterization. Heretofore, comedy has been her forte. She has appeared for two years in Mack Sennett comedies, has played opposite Buster Keaton for two and one-half years and appeared in a Fox picture with Lupino Lane.

Sidney Making Farce

The Christie organization is working on a fast farce comedy featuring Bobby Vernon, under the direction of Scott Sidney. The new film will be called "Take Your Choice," and is by Frank R. Conklin. Five leading ladies are in the picture, including Charlotte Stevens, Duane Thompson, Natalie Johnson, Margaret Cloud and Gladys Baxter.

Noted Dancer in Film Debut

Della-Vanna, nationally-known terpsichorean artist, who recently scored a sensational hit in the Greenwich Follies in New York, has been signed by Finis Fox to present an eccentric dance number in the cabaret scenes of his latest picture, "The Man Between," according to announcement made by Robert R. Beaty, general manager of the company. This will be the first time that Della-Vanna's dances have been recorded by the motion picture camera.

Finishes With Roach

Sidney D'Albrook, who also claims the "Old Biograph Days" as his family tree of the pictures, recently played the character heavy in the Halperin production of "Tea—With a Kick." He has just completed the part of "Hal" in Jack London's "Call of the Wild," which Hal Roach is producing under the direction of Fred Jackman.

GLANCES AT THE PAST

King Vidor probably has the distinction of having started in pictures more celebrities than any other director. He gave first parts to Mildred Davis, Florence Vidor, Lloyd Hughes, Za Zu Pitts, Robert Gordon and David Butler. He also persuaded Corinne Griffith to leave a little town in Texas and seek fame before the camera.

Erich von Stroheim's first theatrical experience was with a vaudeville sketch which he wrote, produced and acted. He says he was "whistled out" of the theatre. Von Stroheim now has a Goldwyn contract and is preparing to direct Frank Norris' great novel, "McTeague."

Frank M. Norcross Signs

After an absence of two years in New York, Frank M. Norcross has just returned to Hollywood. Mr. Norcross immediately closed with James Horn, of the Robertson-Cole Studios, to play a role in the forthcoming feature, "Blow Your Own Horn." When last here Mr. Norcross appeared with Charles Ray in "19 and Phyllis" and in "Garments of Truth."

Where Filming is Work

Four and one-half miles to location each day. This is what the Trimble-Murfin Company is up against in the land of ice and snow, where the only means of travel is skiis or dog sleds. The company, under Director Laurence Trimble, is now working at Lake Louise, in the heart of the Canadian Rockies, where Strongheart's next starring vehicle, "The Phantom Pack," is being made. They are now "shooting" at Lake Louise glacier and have to travel a mile and a half across the ice of the lake and three miles up the mountain on skiis. "Our greatest winter sport," writes Walter Perry, "is carrying in our own water and coal. We have taken over some summer cabins and they haven't all 'the comforts of home.'"

NOTICE

Beginning on April 21, 1923, the subscription price of CAMERA! will be revised to a normal standard, the current rates having been an error of a former management. Hereafter the rates will be $2 for six months or $3.50 for a year in Los Angeles county, and for outside zones the rates are $2.50 for six months and $4 for a year.

CLARA HAS WHOLE VILLA BUILT ON STAGE

Something new in motion picture settings has been introduced for the production of "In Old Madrid," Clara Kimball Young's newest starring picture which is being produced for Metro by Harry Garson under the direction of Thomas Heffron. The novelty is the construction of an entire ten-room Spanish villa on a studio stage.

It is the usual custom to build each room separately and only in unusual cases to have two or three rooms adjoining. For instance, it is not unusual to see a living room at one end of a stage and the dining room supposed to adjoin it at the other end—or perhaps on another stage.

It was decided to try the plan of building the entire house in one unit. The chief difficulty was in arranging it in order that it might be lighted properly, an engineering feat, the credit for which goes to Joseph Wright, the designer.

The house—or villa—contains ten rooms and has a second story. Because of its completeness considerable more time was required in the building. One of its interesting features was a marble paved patio in the center containing a fountain, flowering plants, dwarf orange trees and scarlet hibiscus.

Probably the chief advantage of this marked departure from the customary is the fact that scenes may be photographed from any angle.

Those appearing in support of Miss Young in "In Old Madrid" include Lewis Dayton, Albert Roscoe, Wedgewood Nowell, Louise Bates, Arthur Hull, Lillian Adrian and others.

Peggy Finishes "Orphan"

Baby Peggy has just finished the final scenes in "The Orphan," at the Century Studios under the direction of Alf Goulding, with her fond papa, J. Travers Montgomery, directing the Jitney Juliet in her individual scenes. She will soon start work at Universal on her first seven-reel special.

Prisoner Respects Lewis

Ralph Lewis has just received a fan letter of which he is quite proud. It is from a life prisoner at San Quentin prison who said that he had just seen Lewis in "The Birth of a Nation," and added that he would hate to run up against Ralph in trying to make a getaway from the police, as he felt that Lewis certainly handled the southern mob in the Griffith classic in a very wicked manner.

FROM U TO YOU

Besides Miss Wong, the cast includes Matt Moore, Wallace Beery, J. Farrell McDonald, William V. Mong, Rose Dione and others of note. It is expected to surpass preceding Dean vehicles in the appeal of its polished artistry.

Reginald Denny, who a short time ago completed Jack London's "The Abysmal Brute" under Hobart Henley's direction, and who is now battling his way through six more two-reel classics of "The Leather Pushers" series, is essentially the fighting, red-blooded type.

Side by side on one Universal City stage Roy Stewart and William Desmond are starring in motion pictures of the Northwest and the Royal Mounted Police. Each plays a rough-cut hero of the outdoors with no sign of the dancing idol characteristics popular among screen heroes of the yesterday. Stuart Paton directs Stewart and Richard Stanton directs William Desmond.

Hoot Gibson has returned from a warm dash through the sun around San Diego and the Mexican border in "Blinky," a story of the cavalry and the making of a man, directed by Edward Sedgwick. Gibson is the world's champ horseman and has never shown a "softy" characteristic.

Jack Hoxie is masquerading before the camera as "Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande" under George Marshall's direction. There is nothing namby-pamby about the hard-hitting, fast-shooting "Don Quickshot."

Herbert Rawlinson, the screen's athletic hero of mystery romances, whose physique and training enable him to play "he-man" roles to perfection, will be in action in a few days in "Thicker than Water," in which he will be directed by Edmund Mortimer.

Lloyd Bacon, son of the late Frank Bacon, famous character actor of the stage who scored such a tremendous hit in "Lightin'," and himself a well known comedy director, has been engaged to direct single reel comedies for Universal. The comedies are featuring Walter Forde, a well-known English comedian. Production of the first will start at once.

The new Bacon unit is one of three which will be in operation under the general supervision of Tommy Gray, famous song writer, vaudeville actor and scenarist.

Gerald Beaumont, former sporting editor of The Oakland Tribune, and now one of the most famous writers of sporting fiction in America, is the latest author to hear the lure of the celluloid. Beaumont arrived two days ago at Universal City, where he will consult with scenarists and directors, and personally collaborate in the direction of his stories of "The Information Kid" and others of his celebrated characters.

TAKING CHANCES

might be lost. He did announce that any cameraman who suggested a retake of the scene "just to make sure," would be clubbed to death without a moment's warning.

For even the experts have been known to make mistakes. And though Kenneth seems willing to flirt with death, he is averse to making the stunt a daily occurrence.

Victor Schertzinger, known to music lovers the nation over as a composer, to picture fans as an understanding director, and to his friends as a lover of children, is one of those individuals who is credited with a real understanding of the childish mind. It probably is due to this fact that he was sought as the director of Jackie Coogan's next picture, "Long Live the King," by Mary Roberts Rinehart. The arrangement was made by special agreement with B. P. Schulberg, who has consented to delay the making of the next Schertzinger production, "A Mansion of Aching Hearts," in order to permit this association with the child-star.

The Holy Land seems to be growing rapidly in favor as a background for picture production. With C. B. De Mille proposing a trip to Palestine for the filming of his new picture, "The Ten Commandments," Lawrence Weingarten discussing the plans for the making of a new series of Biblical pictures there, and another body of financiers announcing a series of scenic productions to be "shot" there, the censors seem likely to lose their hold on our celluloid entertainment.

Ethel Shannon, filmdom's tiniest starlet, has gone the King Tut fashion makers one better by obtaining an entire wardrobe of hand painted gowns. One striking negligee shows what seems to be a band of Egyptian natives chasing a lotus leaf down the bank of the Nile. Another appeared to have been constructed of building blocks. Miss Shannon likes them, however, and insists that she knows what the strange figures mean.

All the World Losses a Lover, and "A Whisper" suggests a confidence.

Young or aged, single or wedded, you will find a revelation in "A WHISPER by Master Thought to Wives and Husbands," printed in two colors on antique paper, that will reveal the real path to right understanding and true happiness. "A WHISPER" will prevent, will cure most of the mental ills, its good for all. "A WHISPER" should be in every home, in fact in every hand. If you would learn to be real happy and make others happy—try this large and beautiful book for a minimum price of $1.50. This edition is superbly artistic and very limited. FROM U TO YOU

Imagine walking about all day carrying a hundred pounds in dead weight!

If you can picture that, you may appreciate what Norman Kerry is undergoing at Universal City where he has to wear a suit of full armor in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

First Kerry has to don a suit of mail, which completely covers all portions of his body, and over that he wears heavy steel breast, leg and thigh plates. The entire suit weighs one hundred pounds and to add to the discomfort the actor's body is kept perfectly rigid by the metal encasement.

Kerry's suit of armor was carefully selected by Perley Poore Sheehan, who is supervising his adaptation of Victor Hugo's romance, and Colonel Gordon Magee, technical director, who are both authorities on fifteenth century Paris.

Somebody discovered among the extras playing in a Siberian scene in "The Fog" the other day, no less a person than Floyd Glotzbach, much advertised ex-husband of Margaret Matzenauer. He says he likes the game and when "The Fog" is done he is going to Hollywood to try to break in.

HOLLYWOOD AND RETURN

"The first scene is where you and the lion meet."

I heard him all right, but realized that he wasn't talking to me even though he was looking over in my direction. I wondered who he was talking to, however, so I looked behind and all around me, and saw nobody, so I again realize, by this time he was talking to me, and I tried hard to answer him. At first the words that came from my mouth meant nothing to the naked ear, but finally managed to say "When?"

As soon as I said that I knew I should have said "What?"

So I corrected myself very quickly. I was very nervous and was getting more so every second, and the director noticed this, as I had no control over my lower limbs which were knocking together something terrible, so he explained that Jerry was really very gentle, and anyway wouldn't be hungry for awhile yet.

I was very anxious to work in a picture, so that I could carry out my plans and make personal appearances with it back east, and with that thought and many others I entered the cage with Jerry.

The lion looked funny at me, and I guess I looked funny at him, then very playfully he started to chase me around the cage, the director yelling at me not to hurt Jerry, and I yelling at him to let me out. As I ran, I remembered whistling in the dressing room, and that the director told me it would be bad luck, so I made up my mind right there that if I got out of this thing alive I would stay clear of dressing rooms.

Everything comes to an end, and when Jerry got me in a corner with no chance of escape I didn't move, but was breathing very hard, that is, when I did breathe. Jerry came very near, in fact too near, for when he got a whiff of the garlic I had eaten previously he fainted, doing a Chaplin grin as he hit the floor.

Seeing that Jerry was out temporarily the director took quite a few scenes, in fact finished me in the picture.

I asked the name of the picture, as that was most important to me, and was told it was to be called, "The Lyon Fool." I then told the director how much I enjoyed acting for him, and he gave me five dollars for my work. Of course five dollars wasn't much, but it was enough to wire the manager of the Grand Theatre in Kokomo to run "The Lyon Fool" at his theatre, and that I would appear personally with it. I also sent a wire to my Dad for car-fare home, and told him to tell all my friends that I was a full-fledged movie actor, and they would see me soon, on the screen and off.

Three weeks later a train pulled into the station at Kokomo, and the whole town was there, as I was a passenger. The fire department and his assistant were there, together with all the girls I ever knew and a few extra ones, the mayor and my folks. They were very proud of me, to have gone to Hollywood, returning to them a regular movie actor.

Of course I had to answer many foolish questions, but the worst one I believe was, "What kind of vaseline does Valentino use?" Of course I answered them as though I really knew what I was talking about, but anyhow everyone was glad to see me, and a parade followed in which they marched me down to the hotel, where a banquet was waiting. After the eats were devoured we all went to the Grand Theatre, and sure enough, there was a sign with my name on. The hardships I had gone through in Hollywood were for some good after all, because now that I was started making personal appearances I would do the same in other towns.

The wonderful moment of my life had arrived when the manager made his speech introducing me, and telling all how proud they should be of one reared in their town.

I came on the stage with my hat in hand as Francis had done, and a half-hour later, after the applause had discontinued, I told them how glad I was to be with them. I also told them that I would explain my part in the picture, and motioned for the operator to start to work, which he did almost immediately. Sure enough there was the picture that I was in, but as the picture advanced I didn't see myself in it. The audience didn't either, evidently, for they yelled, "Where are you?"

"That's what I want to know," I answered, and thought the chances were they cut some of my first scenes out. After every picture is finished it is given to a film editor, who cuts the bad parts out to make it more presentable. By this time the picture was half over and I hadn't appeared on the screen, the audience giving me the well-known "razz" with variations.

They now thought that I never worked in a picture at all, but was just trying to kid them, and they didn't hesitate to tell me what they were thinking about. As they were yelling, I wished that I was any place but where I was, even the cage with Jerry would seem like Heaven. Now that I was thinking fast I remembered meeting the editor that cut this picture, and when I told him about going east and my plans, he laughed at me. I remembered his laugh, and I bet with myself that he had cut me out of the picture.

For the first time in my life I was right, as the picture finished, all my friends gave me the horse-laugh and other things. I tried to explain, but there was so much noise it was useless, and jumping off the stage I ran through the audience ashamed of myself. They said many things disagreeable to hear, but as I reached the door, above every other wise crack I heard someone yell, "The lyin' fool."

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912

Of Camera! The Digest of the Motion Picture Industry, published weekly at Los Angeles, Calif., for April 1, 1923.

State of California, County of Los Angeles—ss.

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and County aforesaid, personally appeared S. W. Lawson, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he is the publisher of Camera! The Digest of the Motion Picture Industry, and that the following is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management (and if a daily paper, the circulation), etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in section 443, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are:

Publisher—S. W. Lawson, Los Angeles, California.

Editor—D. E. Davenport, Los Angeles, California.

Business Manager—S. W. Lawson, Los Angeles, California.

2. That the owners are: (Give names and addresses of individual owners, or, if a corporation, give its name and the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of the total amount of stock.)

S. W. Lawson, Los Angeles, California.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.)

None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by him.

S. W. LAWSON,
Signature of Publisher.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 6th day of April, 1923.

(Seal) S. W. BUGBEE.

In assuming responsibility for the success of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, more tersely referred to as the "Monroe Doctrine Centennial," the Motion Picture Industry has taken an important step towards becoming definitely and permanently identified with the civic destiny of Los Angeles. The people of this city have implicit confidence that the Industry will stage one of the most entertaining and spectacular expositions ever held in America. The entire city of Los Angeles has assumed, as a matter of course, that the Exposition will be an unqualified success if the Motion Picture Industry is back of it. This is a compliment to the Industry which should not be taken lightly by those who are at the head of affairs in Filmdom.

All great expositions are predicated upon some momentous event in history; and this one is no exception. Hence the name, "Monroe Doctrine Centennial." When President Monroe promulgated his famous doctrine Los Angeles was a sleepy little Spanish settlement completely foreign to the sturdy American republic then heroically struggling to hold aloft the banner of Liberty and Territorial Independence in the Western Hemisphere. No one living in that age, on either the Atlantic or Pacific coast, dreamed of the wonderful transformation the little City of the Angels was to undergo during the hundred years to come. And now, at the ending of the greatest century in all history, Los Angeles, grown into a world metropolis, is selected to be hostess on the momentous occasion of celebrating the One Hundredth Anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine. And immediately Los Angeles proves her confidence and faith in the Motion Picture Industry by intrusting to its leaders the full management of this historic function.

It is not necessary to add that this faith is not misplaced. The Motion Picture Industry will prove to be more than equal to the task.

Vol. VI. SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1923 No. 2

From Within the Editorial Sanctum

If you want to see a lot, go on any studio lot.

The trouble with too much continuity is it continues too long.

And the Wampas "wamped" again, "wampingly" and triumphantly.

Culver City is growing. Reason: all of its studios are going—full blast.

The price of carpet sweepers is going up. Just to help clean out the family man?

It is to be hoped the Prohibitionists won't get the wrong impression and try to ban "Captain Applejack."

Fortune smiles on the cinema as never before. May the cinema smile back with ever-increasing quality.

L. A. stands for a lot more than Los Angeles. It stands for more dangerous criminals than it should.

Maybe there will be four or five new theatres built in Hollywood all at once. Evidently what is meant is ample amusement.

Misunderstanding! Ye gods, will human beings never learn to understand each other? We've been misunderstood so much this week that we can't understand it at all!

It begins to look as if even the most confirmed pessimist will be forced to look up to the wholesome, prosperous conditions now obtaining in the motion picture industry.

During the early part of a late photoplay, the climax of the story comes too soon and so the chances of success for the film goes before it's well started. Thus it goes.

Universal has reached a high crest of activity with something like thirty companies working. Better still this top-crest tendency is getting more and more universal every day.

If you are not actively boosting the forthcoming Motion Picture Exposition, you are overlooking a chance to help boost the greatest amusement project ever essayed in Southern California.

After producing a picture called "The Real Thing," Johnnie Walker licked the director he hired to do the picture. Perchance he wanted to be sure of having the real thing in all ways possible.

There is an agitation against calling the screen the screen. Shadow stage is claimed to be more elegant. What's the difference what you call it so long as the pictures projected on it are good?

Someone suggests making a picture under the title of "Don't Mention It to Your Wife." In most cases, a man couldn't mention much of anything to his wife without being accused of being rude for interrupting her.

Society girls are becoming more numerous in pictures every day and in many cases are making good as actresses. Is it that they just naturally know how to act? All society girls do—in society, or else, they wouldn't stay in it.

Some of the best pictures of the whole decade are now in the course of production in Hollywood studios. What with "Scaramouche," "Trilby," "Three Wise Fools," "The Meanest Man in the World," and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" as mere starters, could anyone ask more in the way of a grand array?

Kings will continue to occupy their share of the screen. Wallace Beery will show us more of the character of Richard, the Lion-hearted and Alan Hale will play king in Jackie Coogan's first Metro feature, "Long Live the King." Indeed his Royal Highness may not be as popular in Europe as he used to be, but he's sure going to make a brave fight to retain his prestige on the screen.

William Humphrey, the well-known director who is now acting for a change (and of course the change) in "Scaramouche," is of the opinion that nick-names would be better if abolished. Although he admits they generally denote endearment, he believes a discontinuance of the use of them would aid in improving our manner of talking by encouraging people to stop corrupting the English language. Now, Bill, you don't expect us to ever stop calling you Bill, do you, Bill?

"Selected Pictures" of Interest to Everyone Interested in Any Way in Motion Pictures

That there are 703 motion pictures of 1574 submitted to the National Board of Review during 1922 and now available, which constitutes worth while entertainment is revealed by the 1922-23 catalog entitled "Selected Pictures" just issued. This catalog, which is compiled by the National Committee for Better Films, affiliated with the National Board at 70 Fifth Avenue, New York, lists pictures of feature length, short comedies, scenics, cartoons, reviews and various entertainment-educationals chosen by the disinterested colunteer committees of the Board at the time the pictures come before it for possible editing and action as to passage.

Exhibitors, schools, churches, community houses and others using motion pictures find this catalog valuable, as do also libraries, clubs, better films committees and the individual movie patron. "Every effort has been made," writes the secretary of the committee, "to make this catalog accurate and serviceable. The name and address of the producer or distributor from whom the films can be obtained is given, the number of reels, the "star" or "stars," a brief description or characterization of each film and the published source when not based on an original scenario. This information is of particular interest to schools and libraries. And above all, although we do not expect everyone to agree with these selections—as people's opinions differ so much on motion pictures—it is nevertheless the testimony of those who use our catalogs and supplementary lists year after year, that the selections are reliable.

"In this connection I should point out that one of the most valuable features of the catalog is its designation of age-group suitability for each film listed. 340 films suitable for young people, in age from 13 up and 10 up, are specially marked, thus affording a guide to the selection of pictures for special young people entertainments and for the patronage of children as supervised by careful parents. These are the ideal 'family group' films, as everyone both young and old can understand and enjoy them. Most of the remainder we say are also suitable for the family group, where children are accompanied by intelligent adults who can explain pictures and regulate their attendance with a thought to the child's temperament and development. Only eight of the films listed in the catalog are advised for strictly adult audiences only.

"Thus, by means of the catalog and our Photoplay Guide issued weekly and monthly, which supplements it, people can be apprised, in advance of seeing them, of the better pictures, while another publication, 'Exceptional Photoplays,' supplied under our popular plan of membership, will actually contribute to their enjoyment and appreciation of the finer pictures critically reviewed in its pages. Just as one must first hear good music and then study it, in order to thoroughly enjoy it, so must one see the good pictures (as listed in our catalog and Photoplay Guide), then study and analyze them (as can be done by reading 'Exceptional Photoplays'), in order to discriminate and fully appreciate the best. A quarter only sent to us by mail will procure the catalog for anyone anywhere in the country, together with complimentary specimen copies of our three monthly membership publications—The Photoplay Guide and Exceptional Photoplays already mentioned, and an interesting bulletin-magazine for members exclusively entitled 'Film Progress.' Membership in the National Committee is on a popular basis, open to anyone who desires to join."

Communications should be addressed to the secretary of the National Committee for Better Films at 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Officers of the Committee are: Clarence A. Perry, chairman, Associate Director Department of Recreation, Russell Sage Foundation; W. D. McGuire, vice-chairman, executive secretary National Board of Review of Motion Pictures; Dr. Myron T. Scudder, head of the Scudder School for Girls; and Alice Belton Evans, secretary of the Committee. Members-at-large of the executive board comprise leaders in social and civic work, educators, ministers, clubwomen, etc.

The membership creed of the National Committee is as follows:

I BELIEVE that the best way to improve motion pictures is to select, patronize and advertise the best.

I BELIEVE—

In special performances for boys and girls and special "family nights."

In educating parents to study their children and to regulate their attendance at motion pictures with intelligent care.

I BELIEVE in the maintenance of the highest standards in the conduct of the motion picture theatres which I will attend.

I BELIEVE in telling the exhibitor when I like his program and why, as well as when I don't like his program and why.

I BELIEVE in the motion picture theatre as a community institution and in community co-operation with the exhibitor.

I BELIEVE in the vast educational, cultural and recreational values of the screen, and in my own ability to add a little to the forces working for its constant elevation.

Can Screen Adaptations Ever Satisfy Authors?

"Yes," Says Creator of "Brass"

"I came prepared to curse. I came away pleased and marvelling a bit."

In these words Charles G. Norris, author of "Brass," the best-seller that deals with marriages and divorces, describes his reaction before and after attending the premiere showing of the screen adaptation of his novel.

So enthusiastic did he become watching his puppets live on the silver screen that he wrote, in the first flush of pleasure, to Harry Rapf, the producer.

Mr. Norris had made the transcontinental trip from California to New York City for the express purpose of sitting in the darkened theatre auditorium and observing his story of modern American life in celluloid version.

"I reached New York," he explains, "and the first thing I did was to go and see 'Brass.' I confess I went with some trepidation. I had no idea how I should like my 'child' in other clothes, but I confess I was pleasantly surprised. The spirit of the book, its reason, is there, and what more has an author a right to ask. On the whole, I think you have made 'Brass' a big picture and I congratulate you."

By thus revealing the pleasure the photoplay afforded him, Mr. Norris proves himself an exception to the general rule. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, authors experience emotions ranging from contempt to disgust when viewing the mutilations and changes suffered by their brain children at the hands of motion picture producers, this proceeding sometimes so far that their work is unrecognizable.

His stamp of approval on this Warner Brothers classic of the screen sets a fashion that can only be for the best in its influence upon motion pictures. It would be easy to bring example on example of writers who forsook the silver screen medium as hopeless, or who sell the movie rights to their novels with a shrug of indifference and never take the trouble to see their finished product on the silent sheet. That this novelist could sanction the film version is a tribute to the rare skill of those responsible for this production directed by Sidney Franklin.

Norris, as he himself puts it, is a harsh critic, particularly where his own work has been altered or edited.

"For an author to see his puppets that have originated in his mind and lived there," he remarks, "strutting about on the screen is a hard, tough and may I say, at best an unpalatable experience. In many ways you have accomplished the impossible —you have transferred the spirit, the lesson, the purpose of the book on to the screen. In places it is a beautiful picture. In spots, it has moments of bigness. Never is it bad. Let me say here that I am a harsh critic, particularly where my own work has been altered or edited, and so, what I have said of the photoplay you have made of 'Brass' is high praise from me."

Much of the picture's success he attributes to Irene Rich, whose successful playing of the role of Mrs. G. won her a long-term contract with Warner Brothers following the release of the picture.

Fred Thomson, world's champion all-round athlete and latest advent into the ranks of screen actors, will not appear before the camera for several days, as the result of a peculiar and spectacular accident that marred one of his sensational "stunts." Thomson, in attempting to swing on a rope between two buildings at Seventh and Main Streets in Los Angeles, slipped, fell with a jerk to the limit of the slack of the rope, and suffered a badly sprained ankle.

Thomson was doing the rope swing as a feature of "The Eagle's Talons," being produced as a chapter mystery play at Universal City.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., April 16th.—Zasu Pitts has been confined to her apartment at the Fairmount Hotel most of the past week with a bad attack of tonsilitis, but she now is improving, and hopes to be able to begin work in a few days in Eric Von Stronheim's production of "Greed."

Marjorie Bennett, sister of Enid Bennett, and herself a star of the stage and screen, arrived in San Francisco from Australia on the "Sonoma" last Tuesday. She, during the last year in Australia, has been leading woman for Louis Bennison, well-known American actor in his play, "Benvenuto." Miss Bennett spent part of her short stay in town seeing her sister Enid in "Robin Hood," and later went on to Los Angeles for a visit with her mother and sister.

Gibson Gowland is now playing the dentist in "McTeague's" very lifelike office on Von Stroheim's set at Hayes and Laguna streets, where the picture is making fine progress. Off the set Gowland probably attracts more attention than any other man in San Francisco, as McTeague had to be a blonde, so he has had his fine and curly crop of hair bleached a wonderful light, bright yellow, with the result that he looks like a very large and lively yellow crysanthemum.

Leigh Smith, assistant director on "The Fog," has finished his work here and went to Los Angeles on Thursday night.

On the bill at the New Portola Theatre last week was a most delightful travelogue of Holland made by the Castle Film Corporation of San Francisco, who have offices in the Spreckles Building. The Castle Films have been making good and successful travelogues and educational pictures for several years, but so modest is the management, and so successfully have they hidden their light under a bushel that few people in San Francisco even know there is such an organization. Judging, however, from this picture their output is well worth seeing.

Al Christie of Christie Comedy fame, Dorothy Devore, Vera Steadman, Hademan, assistant director, and several other members of the company, spent last Saturday in San Francisco en route to Westwood, a lumber camp in the mountains, where they will do location work for the next Christie Comedy.

N. Ragomanovich, head of the West Coast Films, went to Los Angeles on Thursday last to spend the week-end and attend to some business for the company.

Mildred Harris having finished her work in "The Fog" which the Graf Productions are just completing at the Pacific Studios at San Mateo, left for New York last Monday night. She will go to London for a short holiday, and return to play the lead in the Graf's next production, "The Grain of Dust."

Robert Warwick beloved of cinema as well as stage fans, made his first appearance Sunday of last week as a visiting star at the Fulton Theatre in Oakland. The present play is "The Masquerader," to be followed by several others during Warwick's stay of five or six weeks. His fine looks, charming voice, and good acting won him a very warm reception in his first appearance in this part of the country in several years.

Tom Santschi has been signed for the "heavy" role in the new play soon to be made at Universal City under the direction of Harry Garson, famous as the producer of Clara Kimball Young's best known films. The play, a story of Java, will present J. Warren Kerrigan and Anna Q. Nilsson in the leading roles. The title has not been decided upon yet.

"The Daughter of Crooked Alley," one of the best known stories of Jack Boyle, has been purchased for screen use, according to announcement at Universal City. This is one of the "Boston Blackie" stories, several of which have proven decided screen hits. Adrian Johnson is now working on the continuity, and an all-star cast is to be assembled for the production.

Walter Whitman, one of the pioneer character actors of the screen and who is perhaps best remembered as the priest in "Hearts of the World," has been engaged to play the role of Father O'Shea in "McGuire of the Mounted," a production of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, starring William Desmond, now being made at Universal City.

"McGuire of the Mounted" is an original story by Raymond L. Schrock, head of the Universal scenic department, and was written especially for Desmond. It is Desmond's first starring vehicle under his new contract with Universal which calls for feature production only.

With preliminary research work practically finished, designing of costumes and scenery for Frances Hodgson Burnett's "A Lady of Quality," is about to be commenced at Universal City. Hobart Henley is to direct the quaint story of the London of 1700. An important cast will be chosen, in which Virginia Valli will be introduced, and also Milton Sills.

Ann Little and Herbert Fortier, photoplay favorites, and Al Wilson, famous "stunt aviator," had narrow escapes from injury, Bill Noble, cameraman, was partially scalped and his valuable camera damaged, and Duke Worne, director, caught a flying grease cup neatly with his left eye, as the result of an odd mishap in one of the "stunts" filmed at Universal City.

The actors were in an automobile that was to have sped over a specially made track covering a pit in which the camera was placed, on a level with the ground.

Following the accident repairs were made to the auto, camera and cameraman's scalp and the "stunt" repeated successfully.

Jack Dillon, who directed Mary Pickford in "Suds," and who has directed many other notable screen successes, has been engaged by Universal to direct the "Self Made Wife," which will be produced with an all-star cast. Production has just started.

"The Self Made Wife" was written as a serial for the Saturday Evening Post by Elizabeth Alexander, and later published in book form. It was adapted to the screen by Edward T. Lowe, who wrote the continuity for "Under Two Flags," "The Prisoner" and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Among the well known screen players who have already been chosen for the cast of "The Self Made Wife" are Ethel Gray Terry, Crauford Kent, Virginia Ainsworth and Dorothy Cummings.

Mary Philbin, whose clever characterization of the little hand-organ girl heroine in "Merry Go Round" furnished one of the surprises of the season at Universal City, is to have an important role in "A Lady of Quality." This was announced at Universal City yesterday by Hobart Henley, who is to direct the play. Miss Philbin will be seen in support of Virginia Valli in the new picture.

"A Lady of Quality" is a filmization of the famous novel by Frances Hodgson Burnett, and will be presented at Universal City by a large and important cast, and in an elaborate setting of historical as well as technical interest.

The world's youngest film star has "arrived." She's not quite four years old yet—but she's now a "great big star," with one of the best known directors in filmland. She won it all through clever acting.

This is the news from Universal City, with the announcement that Baby Peggy is to make her debut in a big feature play.

Raymond L. Schrock, scenario editor at Universal City, and King Baggot, famous actor and director, are now engaged on the story in which she is to play, and King Baggot himself will direct the offering, to be released as a Universal-Jewel photoplay. The title has not been announced yet. A big cast of well known "grown-up" actors and actresses will support the diminutive star in a seven or eight-reel elaborate special.

Artists in Springtime and Miss Dupont for One Time

By RAY H. LEEK

This is the season of the year when screen idols, stage players and literary lights sojourning here turn to planting and pruning of fig trees, delving into vineyards and irrigating their orange groves.

Visitors at the film capital daily report the conflicting sensations resulting from a glimpse of the romantic Bert Lytell hoeing potatoes, Barbara La Marr shaking a table cloth over a back porch, or Charlie Chaplin in the very serious business of looking into the possibilities of city property.

Just now the conversion of a modern Apollo to domesticity is the wonder of those who make up the "seeing-filmland" tours. For Orville Caldwell, the six-feet-three of muscular activity whom Morris Gest called "a modern reincarnation of Apollo," and whom Elinor Glyn calls "the most physically perfect man of stage or screen," is engaged in the completion of a pretentious foothill home and the setting out of the ever-present shrubbery that is of greater importance than the mere house here.

In the semi-privacy of overhanging trees Caldwell's bulk has been glimpsed in the rear of his house in the same abbreviated costume that made him famous as a discus thrower and all-round athlete during his university days at Oakland, a few years ago. And those who have been curious enough to peep between the trees insist that the domesticated Caldwell is just as interesting as the romantic figure in "Mecca" which first attracted the attention of Miss Glyn and several million women who saw him in person or in the widely circulated pictures of the picturesque sultan of the extravaganza.

Miss Dupont, she of the economical name but unstinted allurements to the masculine eye, is the latest to sign a B. P. Schulberg contract. Although the present contract is merely for one role—an important one in the Tom Forman Production of "The Broken Wing"—it has been the occasion for numerous rumors.

"Is Miss Dupont called 'the most beautiful blonde in America', often characterized as a 'more vivacious edition of Katherine MacDonald', being groomed to follow in the footsteps of the retired Katherine?"

The youthful producer, however, has failed thus far to enlighten those asking the question. It is known, however, that when he concluded the contract under which Miss MacDonald was starred a few weeks ago, he announced his intention not to make any more "star pictures." He has kept his promise, thus far, by concentrating on productions like "Shadows," "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" and "The Hero," in which all the roles were assigned to players who seemed best to fit the parts.

Good news for the boys—those whose ages range from six to sixty. A local statistician has just reported that not fewer than six pirate pictures either are under way or are about to be filmed. Captain Kidd will figure in person, or under some easily recognizable alias, in all of them. Probably the most important of the cutlass crew will be Doug Fairbanks, who is letting his hair grow to the proper piratical length in anticipation of his contribution to the series of maritime thrillers.

One way to gauge the activities in picture productions is to watch the transactions in favored players. During the lulls of the summer months the agencies that handle these loans usually report no re-

A bathing suit.

A letter of introduction.

A Broadway stage success.

All of these have been the medium by which pretty girls have gotten onto the screen.

But Marie Campbell chose a typewriter.

She told about it yesterday between scenes at the United studios where she is doing her first bit in Maurice Tourneur's "The Brass Bottle."

"I had four years coaching in dramatics when I was in the Waco High School," she said. "I took part in all of the high school plays and later in dramatic society presentations at the University of Minnesota. My teachers all urged me to go on the stage or the screen.

"Girls who had tried told me how hard it was to attract attention in Hollywood; told me of the tens of thousands of extras striving to exist on a day or two of work a week. I resolved to wait until I had a plan.

"I spent two years in Oklahoma as secretary to a bank president in Sepulpa, and a Y. W. C. A. secretary in Tulsa. Then one day I had an inspiration. That week I quit my job and came to Los Angeles."

Once here Miss Campbell made the rounds of the studios, seeking a place as secretary to a studio executive. She got it.

For two years Miss Campbell was secretary to M. C. Levee, president of the United studios. She made the acquaintance of producers and directors by the score. She handled scenarios. She watched pictures in the making. She became familiar with all departments of the studio, with all the details of production.

Those were two bad years for pictures. There was little production. But Miss Campbell had a good salary.

Business picked up. The script of "The Brass Bottle" passed through Miss Campbell's hands on its way to Mr. Levee. It had an opportunity in the part of the maid, for a beginner; an opportunity which would allow of recognition on the screen.

Miss Campbell asked for a chance and got it. She left the typewriter for the make-up box. She has a bit, a good bit. She can get an audience with directors and producers. She has assurance of enough work to keep her busy.

Her typewriter made a place on the screen for her.

Calling Feminine Slackers Downright Parasites

"Today there would be much less unhappiness and fewer divorces if the man who really loves his wife and daughters would, instead of trying to keep them in idleness as a sop to his own vanity, see to it that they do their share of constructive and interesting work.

Thus did Idah McGlone Gibson, noted author and war correspondent, sum up her views of the modern domestic upheaval which is sending husbands and wives in veritable droves to the divorce courts throughout the land.

Mrs. Gibson was prompted to discuss the feminine slackers by the role her son, Kenneth Gibson, is playing in "Daytime Wives," an F. B. O. production which flays in scenes of stirring drama the pampered and petted wives of the rich who neglect their husbands and spend their time at bridge tables and jazz palaces where lowered lights and lounge lizards are the chief attraction.

"Every foreigner who comes over here," continued Mrs. Gibson, "is greatly surprised to find that most American men consider it a disgrace to let the women of their households work. It is every man's ambition to make his wife and daughters only walking advertisements of his business acumen and prosperity.

"Consequently, although she does not own it to herself, it is the ambition of every mother to marry her daughter to at least a limousine, if not a steam yacht, with all the accompanying appurtenances of great wealth. The man doesn't count very much, provided he has enough money to make greenback plasters for his deficiencies.

"It has always seemed to me that those ancient writers of tradition who, when describing the lives of our first father and mother after they had, through idleness and its attendant vices, been expelled from the Garden of Eden, make a great mistake.

"They intimated that work was a curse. 'In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread until thou return to the ground,' was a part of the supposed curse put upon humanity.

"It was not a curse, but a splendid privilege that God gave to man when He made him earn his bread by work instead of picking up his sustenance from the foot of the tree.

"To hear many a young married woman talk you would think that she was the most injured individual in all the world because she is made to do her own housework when she is married.

"She rails against the fate that made her fall in love with a poor man, or rather the fate that did not put her in a position where she could meet a man—any kind of a man—as long as he had money.

"There is no reason why a healthy young woman should not keep her part of a bargain and do her own housework. It should make any housewife blush when she tells of her martyrdom in keeping a house comfortable for her husband.

"The idle young woman of today has little interest in her house either before or after marriage and her parents are more to blame than she is for this state of affairs.

"These parents who make such great sacrifices to keep their daughters in idleness have not been kind to them for there is no more reason why a young woman should be a slacker than a man.

"The war did one thing that illumined the false idea regarding women's physical strength and real working capacity. It showed that a healthy young woman was as capable of hard work as a healthy young man.

"She found that working in the fields was a splendid health-giving exercise. She took men's places in every branch of endeavor and made good with little effort."

Movies and Millions—They Go Together

The day when a producer may spend as much as a million and a half dollars, and wisely, on a single picture, is approaching in the opinion of Joseph M. Schenck, film magnate, whose stupendous expenditures as producer of Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge and Buster Keaton photoplays in the past, give weight to his predictions.

Picture expenditures, thinks Schenck, is "in its infancy." Mr. Schenck at present is spending more than half a million dollars on one picture, "Ashes of Vengeance." One scene in this sixteenth century French costume drama cost more than $100,000 to build and film.

"The expenditure on superproductions is not going to stop within the limits of the capacity of the cinema to get results," says Schenck. "A picture is worth every cent the returns justify."

Schenck was one of the few producers bold enough to declare publicly that "Doug." Fairbanks was justified in spending a million on "Robin Hood" if it showed in results.

Schenck looks forward to the time when superfilms will enjoy continuous runs of two and three years, like the biggest of the stage successes.

A new era in the showing of pictures is at hand, according to the producer of Talmadge and Keaton films. An era when the real big films will play the big city theatres from three months to a year or more and then be taken on the road like stage plays. Ordinary program pictures then will have their first runs at neighborhood picture houses.

Of course these great "more than a million" productions will necessitate the charging of higher prices of admission.

"There's no need to worry about the public's willingness to pay such higher prices," says Schenck. "It already has demonstrated its willingness to pay higher for superior things in films."

"In spite of the thousands of screen actors that have been developed, there is a scarcity of real talent," he says. "Perhaps there always will be, because the screen is more exacting than the stage in the appearance of actors. On the stage a woman of 35 may very well make up to create the illusion of 20. But that can't be done on the screen, and so we are robbed of the experience of years when we must have a girl of 20 play a character of her own age."

The technical advancement of the films has outstripped the other branches, and the producer expects that further development must come more gradually.

EXPOSITION CONSTRUCTION IS SPEEDED AS DEMAND FOR EXHIBIT SPACE INCREASES

Record speed in building will mark the erection of the Spanish-Colonial city, which will open its gates, July 2, to receive visitors to the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition. Work began this week under the direction of Frank S. Brown, construction engineer in charge, who put on a double shift of men.

The exposition buildings will cover approximately 1,000,000 square feet of ground space. The principal ones will face the wide Esplanade leading to the Coliseum where the floats and pageants will be presented on a mammoth stage. Half way between the peristyle of the Coliseum and the main entrance, the Esplanade will widen into a Court of Honor, which will be one of the most picturesque places in the grounds. Here there is to be a beautiful central fountain and the great circular plaza will be surrounded by colonnades.

Demand for exhibit bungalows has been exceedingly brisk the last week, many of the choicest sites having been taken. It is reported that long before the Premiere there will not be a bungalow or even a square foot in the beautiful exposition city for rent, even the smallest spaces being coveted for novel exhibits. The fact that the keynotes of the displays are to be quality and originality rather than the quantity gives promise of real variety.

"The Location," the section given up to the exhibits of the various motion picture studios, is to be the most remarkable attraction ever offered by any exposition. Here all the mysteries of picture-making will be revealed and the most wonderful entertainment will be assured. There will be a great rivalry for original effects among the studios, each of which is to have a bungalow of special design, all conforming to the general style of architecture, which will make the exposition beautiful and colorful.

Plans for the elaborate pageantry that is to be more gorgeous and more important historically than anything previously attempted in this country are well under way. The research departments of the various California universities have been long engaged in obtaining data for various episodes based on scenes in the history of all the Americas. At a meeting last week the historical commission of the exposition including Dr. E. C. Moore, Dr. Rufus von KleinSmid, Dr. Harry W. Wright, Dr. Victor L. Duke, Dr. J. A Blaisdell and Mrs Martha Nelson McCan, conferred on the program for the Historical Revue.

TO FILM WILDEST OF UNCLE SAM'S WILD 'UNS

America's least civilized inhabitants are to become motion picture players.

They live in the Tonto Basin, Arizona, and will play in the mob scenes in the filming of Zane Grey's famous novel "To the Last Man." Mr. Grey, who will supervise the production of the picture; Victor Fleming, the director, and Lucien Hubbard, production editor, have left Hollywood for the Tonto Basin, where they will look over the ground.

Actual production will begin April 30, and the cast will journey 100 miles by horseback into this rugged valley from Payson, the nearest railway station. The story is that of a feud between sheepmen and cattlemen in which both factions were wiped out literally to the "last man." The tale is based on fact and the actors in this drama of the primitive west will include descendants of this last man.

The country where the picture will be filmed is said to be the most rugged in America. It abounds in big game and is heavily timbered on the ridges which in some places rise sheer above the valley for several thousands of feet.

Mr. Grey wrote the story at his ranch in the Tonto Basin and will provide the tame bears, several horses and sheep for use in the making of the picture.

This will be the first of Mr. Grey's novels to be produced by Paramount under Mr. Grey's contract which arranges for the production of photoplays from all his current and future works.

THREE STAR DIRECTORS JOIN EXTRAORDINARY ARRAY OF STARS IN "HOLLYWOOD"

Desmond Finishing Another

Final scenes are being taken at Universal City by Richard Stanton on William Desmond's latest starring vehicle, "McGuire of the Mounted," a story of the Northwest Mounted Police, in which alluring Louise Lorraine is seen opposite the former dramatic stock matinee idol. Despite bad weather Stanton has made an enviable record for combining speed and dramatic artistry in the production.

HAS FIRST NATAL DAY PARTY AT LATE DATE

Scott R. Beall (Scotty) was host at the first birthday party of his life last Saturday. Members of the cast of "The Brass Bottle" and of the staff of Maurice Tourneur Productions filled the parlor of his home at 1383 North Ridgewood while he was away on an emergency call to Mr. Tourneur's home. "Scotty" is assistant director and production manager of Maurice Tourneur Productions.

"A member of a theatrical family, I've been on the move all my life and hardly ever have lived long enough in one place to become acquainted with people, so that they would know my birthday," Mr. Beall declared after he had recovered from his surprise. He was presented with a silk lounging robe by the cast and staff and a gold wrist watch by Mr. Tourneur.

Among those present, besides members of his family and relatives, were: Mr. Tourneur, Harry Myers, Charlotte Merriam, Ford Sterling, Arthur L. Todd, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Menasco, Louise Lester, Fred Pelton, Nan Collins, Aggie Herring, Clarissa Selwynne, Edna May Strauss, Buddie Erickson, Anna Manee, Wealey Jones and Frank Evans.

Christie Girl Ill

Hazel Deane, new Christie leading lady, is seriously ill at the Clara Barton hospital, suffering from peritonitis. She was taken sick suddenly on the day when a new picture was to be started.

With James Cruze's production, "Hollywood," nearing completion at the Lasky Studio, Paramount has announced the complete list of players who will appear in this picture. Among those who will have conspicuous parts in the unfolding of the drama is Mr. Cruze himself, but the producer of "The Covered Wagon" will not be able to be the sole representative of the directorial profession, for Cecil B. DeMille, director general of Paramount, and Alfred E. Green, producer of all of Thomas Meighan's late pictures, who recently completed the production of Rex Beach's "The Ne'er Do Well," both make their debuts as screen actors.

The list of prominent players eclipses even that of Cecil B. DeMille's "The Affairs of Anatol," which set a hitherto unapproached record in the way of all-star casts. "Hollywood" includes Thomas Meighan, Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Betty Compson, Leatrice Joy, Walter Hiers, Lila Lee, Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett, Nita Naldi, J. Warren Kerrigan, Elliott Dexter, Charles Ogle, Lois Wilson, Mary Astor, Hope Hampton, Will Rogers, Gertrude Astor, Laurance Wheat, Ben Turpin, Kalla Pasha, Jim Finlayson, and many others.

In no sense propaganda or, on the other hand, a travelogue, or "trip to the movie studios," this picture, Paramount states, is a straight human-interest drama, adapted by Tom J. Geraghty from Frank Condon's absorbingly interesting novelette, "Hollywood, and the Only Child." The theme undoubtedly carries the most widely popular appeal for the average picture audience that could be conceived, for it is the intimate drama of the hopes and aspirations and the trials and disappointments of a girl whose consuming ambition is to gain fame and fortune in the movies—the prototype of perhaps a million screen-struck American girls not only of the small town but of the big city.

The four or five dominate characters are played by people unknown to screen audiences but all carefully chosen for type by Director Cruze. All of them, moreover, have had previous stage experience.

TECHNICOLOR HAS COME WEST TO MAKE FILM

Unusual interest has been manifested among local film folk over the announcement the Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation of Boston has established itself in Hollywood, under the management of C. A. Willat, brother of Irvin Willat, who has been prominent in film work for the past eighteen years.

The Technicolor process has been in development for the past seven years, and according to report $1,250,000 has been spent in perfecting it. The personnel responsible for its development is composed of Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, formerly Professor of Physics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Queen's University of Canada; Dr. Daniel T. Comstock, who also was a Professor of Physics at Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Dr. Troland, president of the American Optical Society and associate professor of Harvard University; Dr. Proctor, professor at Dartmouth College; Mr. Weaver and Mr. J. A. Ball, graduates of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and C. A. Willat

The first picture shown by the Technicolor company was "The Gulf Between," which was exhibited at the legitimate houses of Klaw & Erlanger. At that time a special projector was necessary for the screening of these pictures, and it was not possible to exhibit in a motion picture theater. Since that time they have worked on the process until today they can show their films in any cinema house. This was accomplished a year ago and their first picture was "Toll of the Sea," which was released through Metro and is now reported to be enjoying an extensive run throughout the country.

Technicolor is now establishing itself here to offer its process to producers. They also intend to produce a complete picture here for autumn exhibition. It is interesting to note that the Technicolor process has no limitations as to double exposing, dissolving, or stop motion, and its action in this is the same as that of an ordinary camera. The local establishment is under the direct supervision of Mr. Willat and Mr. Ball, and under their management should enjoy rapid expansion.

Mae Busch Wins Again

Victor Seastrom has chosen the first player for his first American motion picture. The noted Scandinavian director has selected Mae Busch to play Bessie, the persecuted heroine of "The Master of Man." It will be Mae Busch's second Hall Caine heroine. She went to England with Maurice Tourneur to play Gloria Quaile in "The Christian."

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S WHAT IN FILMLAND

The largest stage in the world is being used by Norma Talmadge in the ballroom scene of "Ashes of Vengeance," a forthcoming First National attraction.

Dagmar Godowsky, appearing in the Goldwyn production, "Red Lights," made her debut on the stage at one of the leading theaters of Moscow. She is an accomplished pianist.

While in New York, Charles G. Norris had an opportunity to view the Warner Brothers screen version of his brainchild, "Brass," and reports have it that he was immensely pleased.

The "Six Days" Elinor Glyn writes about in the original story Charles Brabin is directing for Goldwyn are none of them week days, according to our war correspondent at the Goldwyn front.

Florence Vidor sailed recently for Honolulu for a short vacation after portraying the role of Carol Milford in the Warner Brothers picturization of Sinclair Lewis' novel, "Main Street."

Johnnie Walker, who plays the leading role in "Children of Dust," Frank Borzage's new picture for First National did his bit during the war. He enlisted as a gob and came back a commissioned officer.

Rodolph Bergquist, cinematographer for the Goldwyn "Red Lights" company, has just completed a series of the most unusual night scenes ever taken of the interior of a Pullman coach. domo of the palace.

David Belasco, the famous theatrical producer, has placed his approval upon the scenario of "The Gold Diggers," which will be produced by the Warner Brothers. The play was adapted for the screen by Grant Carpenter.

Ford Sterling and Aggie Herring, the last members of the cast to report for work, were before the camera this week for their first scene of Maurice Tourneur's forthcoming First National release, "The Brass Bottle." Sterling has sacrificed the two inches of brush he has had to keep matted on his face for "The Spoilers."

Pauline Starke and Charles Clary were the first two players to be selected for parts in Emmett Flynn's first Goldwyn production, "In the Palace of the King." Miss Starke will play Inez, a blind girl, one of the most emotional roles of her career. Mr. Clary has been chosen for the part of Don Ruiz Gomez de Silva, villainous minister in the court of King Philip II, of Spain, and majordomo of the palace.

Gordon DuMont, "heavy" in many of Ruth Roland's screen successes, declares he has $5,000 invested in personal wardrobe. He is at present portraying the role of a slippery crook in Richard Thomas' newest six-reeler, "Other Men's Money."

Claude Gillingwater, who is playing in "Three Wise Fools," besides being a distinguished actor on the stage and the screen is also an author. He has written more than twenty-five successful one-act plays, several of which he has played in vaudeville himself.

Ray Enright, who has been assistant director and cutter at the Mack Sennett studios, has been promoted to chief cutter. He has just completed assembling "She Loves Me Not," first Sennett comedy to be released through Pathe, under the supervision of F. Richard Jones.

George Marion, venerable character actor, wanted to die, slashed his wrists; but lived. He couldn't get work. Fred Niblo engaged him today for a small part in "Captain Applejack." He said he was glad to get such an excellent actor. The sun came out as Mr. Marion went to get his wardrobe.

Myrtle Owen has been added to the cast of "The White Silence," being produced at the Warner Brothers studios. Rin-Tin-Tin, the dog actor and featured player, recently won the high jump in a police dog show held at the Beverly Hills Hotel, Los Angeles.

Miss Bess Meredyth, scenario editor of Fred Niblo's unit and adapter of "Captain Applejack," characterized a solemn British footman in her script but couldn't name him. Someone suggested that "Dibbles" described the part. Gilbert Clayton, fine character player, will have the role. He is remembered in "Blood and Sand," which Fred Niblo directed.

Malcolm Stuart Boylan, director of publicity for the Fred Niblo unit of Louis B. Mayer productions, has been made correspondent of the Chicago Evening Post and the six other newspapers of the Shaffer group. He is contributing a weekly column of Hollywood news which, while controlled by the Shaffer publications, is being widely syndicated to other papers.

From Lake Louise, Alberta, Canada, comes word from Director Laurence Trimble that his company, which has been in Canada since last December filming scenes for two forthcoming Strongheart starring vehicles, "The Phantom Pack," and Jack London's "White Fang," expects to finish the location work and start immediately for Hollywood, where the interiors of both pictures will be made.

BABY BETTY WILL BE BUSY LADY HENCEFORTH

Professionals and the non-professionals attending the Wampus Frolic held last year at the Ambassador Hotel will well recall Baby Betty in the closing number of the evening's program. Being an occasion for "Baby" stars the youngest infant in the profession followed the presentation of the other "Baby" stars. Fred Niblo, Master of Ceremonies, introduced Baby Betty as "Movieland's Youngest Celebrity," she being fourteen months of age at that time.

Baby Betty will attend the Wampus Frolic again this year at the Warner Brothers Studio tonight, accompanied by James Connery, life-long pal and associate of Will Hay. She has added another twelve months of thrilling experience since her debut a year ago and during that time she has supported many of the greatest stars in Filmdom, including famous and popular Jackie Coogan.

Joseph A. Eliason, producer for World Educational Films, will leave for Yosemite and points north to make "The Forty-Niner," a special featuring Baby Betty. Upon her return the little starlet is under contract to make a super-six-reel poetic masterpiece adapted from a poem from America's foremost poet. Following the closing of the Monroe Centennial and Motion Picture Exposition the Baby will leave for a ten months' tour around the world, leaving Washington, D. C., the last of August. Twenty-six one-reel Educational Gems will be produced on this trip. The entire series will be released in June, 1924.

In "The Magic Skin"

Bessie Love and Carmel Myers have been engaged for roles in "The Magic Skin," to be made at the Goldwyn studios by Director George D. Baker for Achievement Films. Miss Love will play the leading role, that of Pauline, and Miss Myers has been cast as "The Countess."

The story has been taken from one of Balzac's best known novels, "The Magic Skin."

Work will start on the picture soon.

May Allison "Comes Back"

Entering the motion picture field as a producer-director, Jane Murfin, noted playwright, has started work at the Thomas Ince studio on the screen version of "The Sign," a play written by Mrs. Murfin and Jane Cowl. May Allison, who has just returned from a tour around the world, will again be seen on the screen in the leading feminine role, that of Claudia Bigelow, a daring and emotional young society leader whose regeneration is the theme of the story.

LEW CODY ADDED TO GOLDWYN'S STAR LIST

Lew Cody is the latest celebrity to be added to the ever increasing Goldwyn stock company. Announcement was made this week that a long-term contract had been signed with the star in New York, where he is now playing in a picture.

Cody's excellent work as the villain in Rupert Hughes' "Souls for Sale" is responsible for his engagement. He will return to the coast as soon as he completes his present engagement and will have an important role in one of the big productions now in preparation.

Cody has been in pictures for nine years and has been starred and featured most of the time. He has played for nearly all the leading companies. Before going on the screen he was a well-known stage actor in New York and in stock. He was born in Berlin, N. H., and educated at McGill University, Montreal.

The Goldwyn Studios have created a sensation in film circles by the signing of such a large number of distinguished players. The stock company now consists of the following:

Frank Mayo, Mae Busch, Claire Windsor, Eleanor Boardman, Helene Chadwick, Raymond Griffith, James Kirkwood, George Walsh, Hobart Bosworth, Conrad Nagel, Patsy Ruth Miller, Kate Lester, William Haines, Cecil Holland, Lucien Littlefield, Aileen Pringle, Kathleen Key, Jean Haskell, William Orlamond, Ted Edwards, and the latest addition, Lew Cody.

This is Jack Parker who refuses to be called Jackie because he is adverse to appearing in the light of imitating Jackie Coogan. Jack is six years old and has been in pictures 3½ years. "To Have and to Hold" was one of his best releases.

LURE OF HOLLYWOOD DEPRIVES HOLLAND OF PLAY

Because motion pictures are made in Hollywood ,the people of Amsterdam, Holland, will not be able to see Peer Gynt this year.

Although this statement may seem ambiguous to some and unimportant to others, it bears a deep significance because it shows to what extent the foreign field is being drawn upon for artists and artisans by the American film industry.

Six months ago, Svend Gade, celebrated Danish producer and designer, came to America from Copenhagen, Denmark, to stage "Johannes Kreisler," rated as the most unique and revolutionary theatrical productions ever seen on Broadway where it enjoyed a long run this season.

When Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford were in New York last fall, Miss Pickford decided to engage Svend Gade to design the settings for her next production because he had brought something new to the theatre and she believed he could do likewise for the screen.

Gade is now busy on designs for sets for the new Pickford picture.

"Film work is so new and so interesting," said Gade, "that I have decided to remain a long time in Hollywood."

And that is why the people of Amsterdam, Holland, will not see Peer Gynt this year.

Gade was under contract to produce this famous Ibsen play at the royal theatre in Amsterdam, where it was to be presented for an unlimited run, starting May first. Because of his desire to remain in America, the Peer Gynt production has been postponed a year.

COMEDIAN GETS SHOCK IN FORM OF GOLD MINE

Returning from Balboa, California, where he had been "shooting" scenes for his forthcoming Fox production, Al St. John, comedy star, arrived in Hollywood recently to learn that he was the owner of a potential gold mine. For the past few years the comedian has been associated with a syndicate of Los Angeles business men who have been buying city and farm properties in California, and St. John gave power of attorney to his associates recently when he expected to be away from the city for several days. During the comedian's absence, the syndicate purchased an eighty-acre tract of land which at one time was considered a valuable gold claim, and at Al's suggestion the group will now endeavor to rejuvenate the once-famous property. A crew of miners will be dispatched to the discovery within the next thirty days and a new shaft will be sunk to bedrock.

CALL FOR IRISH TYPES DREW MOTLEY MOB OF 'EM

The Fine Arts Studio was stormed this week by a mob that gave the appearance of a Hollywood invasion by Irish insurrectionists. The cause was a call sent out by Director Fred Caldwell for Irish types to appear in the comedy feature he is about to start, entitled "Hogan in Hollywood," an original story by J. Stewart Woodhouse.

Inasmuch as the script calls for a whole Irish family the mob varied from old men and women down to babes in arms, and there was a continuous flow of sons and daughters of Erin into the offices of the Caldwell company from nine a. m. until five p. m.

Mr. Caldwell says he doesn't expect to be able to talk without a brogue for a week or ten days.

DEL ANDREWS ADDRESSES PALMER INSTRUCTORS

Del Andrews, of Thomas H. Ince's staff of directors, last week addressed a meeting of the entire educational staff of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation in the Palmer Building, Hollywood. While Mr. Andrews took one of the weekly "speech-making" dates on which prominent directors, producers or writers regularly hold forth to the Palmer instructors, taking up subjects of professional interest, his talk concerned "Judgment of the Storm," the first Palmer screen production, which has just been completed under his direction. The story for the production, written by Mrs. Ethel Styles Middleton of Pittsburg, had been discovered by the Advisory Bureau, and the instructors were vitally interested in the high praise given the original story by Mr. Andrews.

Wilson-Bailey, who after a long career on the stage and screen returned to her high society life in Washington, D. C., only to yield to the lure of studio life again. Now she is in Hollywood in pictures again.

MISS NORMAND TO PLAY "EXTRA GIRL"

Mabel Normand, inimitable comedienne of the cinema, is one of the busiest stars of the day. And she has plenty of work to look forward to, for while she is at present being photographed in the title role of "The Extra Girl," plans are already being formulated to launch into a big production of "Mary Anne," immediately upon the completion of the present vehicle. Both stories are from the pen of Mack Sennett and ideally suited to Miss Normand's individuality.

The story of "The Extra Girl," embodies a big wholesome theme, and is estimated to prove an ideal vehicle for Miss Normand, star of such previous classics as "Molly'O" and more recently "Suzanna."

In her present vehicle, "The Extra Girl," Miss Normand will enjoy ample opportunity to further demonstrate her wistful charm, with one of the best all-star casts ever assembled, including such artists as Ralph Graves in the male lead, George Nichols, Dot Farley, Anna Hernandez and Vernon Dent.

F. Richard Jones, supervising director of Mack Sennett productions selected William A. Seiter to direct this latest classic. Homer Scott, well known as one of the best photographers in the profession, and an expert on lighting effects, is in charge of the cameras, cranking first camera himself, as he did with previous Mack Sennett productions starring Mabel Normand.

Work is continuing on the filming of the interior scenes in the home of "The Extra Girl," a setting which has been declared a marvel of realism, and which took four weeks until completely constructed in every detail. Phylis Haver had started in this picture, but, according to report, a disagreement brought about the substitution of Miss Normand.

POLICE CHIEF OAKS AID MRS. REID ON HER FILM

Chief of Police Oaks not only gave Mrs. Wallace Reid permission to film a number of scenes for "Human Wreckage," her anti-narcotic film, in and around the Los Angeles city jail but also loaned her a squad of policemen to work in the picture and assist in handling several hundred "hop-heads," drug addicts and "types" who appear in the scenes. Chief of Police Oaks, as a member of the organization committee of the Los Angeles Anti-Narcotic League which is sponsoring the Reid film, has been deeply interested in the development of the production and has visited the Ince studios many times to confer with Mrs. Reid about the picture.

MAYER INCREASES EFFORTS TO CORRAL

In order to keep up with his increased program of production and to further establish his position as an independent film producer, Louis B. Mayer is gathering together a number of stage and screen celebrities who will be placed under long-term contracts for featuring in the all-star productions made by the John M. Stahl, Fred Niblo, Reginald Barker and other units now assembled under the Mayer banner.

Jack Roach, popular leading man in the East, is the latest to sign his name on the dotted line, having been engaged by Mr. Mayer immediately upon the latter's arrival in New York last week. While no definite announcement has been made as yet, it is rumored that he will take the colorful and romantic role of the Portuguese in the old New England classic, "Cape Cod Folks."

The starring contract with Mr. Roach followed closely upon a similar one recently awarded by Irving G. Thalberg to Robert Fraser who is now playing in "The Desert Healer" at the Goldwyn Studio opposite Anita Stewart.

Among the other stars who have been placed under contract to play in Louis B. Mayer productions are Renee Adoree, a former Broadway favorite who is giving an excellent performance in the leading role of Reginald Barker's new picture, "The Master of Woman;" Norma Shearer, selected by John M. Stahl for one of the principal parts in "The Wanters;" and Huntly Gordon, signed as a result of his striking success in Fred Niblo's "The Famous Mrs. Fair." Mr. Gordon is working at the Lasky studio at the present time, having been loaned by Mr. Mayer to play the lead with Gloria Swanson in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife."

Takes Over Faire Contract.

Associated First National Pictures announce that the company, this week, took over the long-term contract which Virginia Browne Faire recently signed with Richard Walton Tully. Miss Faire will not immediately appear in First National pictures, however, as the casts for the early pictures to be made by this company have already been engaged. It is very probable, according to information from the First National studio offices, that Miss Faire will be seen in a number of independent productions before given a role in a First National picture.

Victor Seastrom considers his best picture was a tragedy of Iceland called "Eyvind of the Hills," made in 1917. It has never been shown in America.

TRAVESTY BECOMES THE FAD AMONGST COMEDY PRODUECRS

With the completion of "Where Is My Wandering Boy This Evening?" the initial Ben Turpin comedy which Mack Sennett will release on the Pathe program, the producer announced that he has plans for the continuation of this caliber of screen satires, based on the popular sob-stuff drama, which will insure for lovers of the comedy a series of travesties such as have made the name of Sennett a byword the world over. Under this classification is included the popular "Shriek of Araby" and the second of Ben's new comedies, on which production was started this week under the direction of Herman Raymaker, is to be a sequel of "Where Is My Wandering Boy?"

It will deal with the Boy's adventures in the city while the first relates his downfall and subsequent parting from home and mother. The working title is "Pitfalls of a Big City."

Mack Sennett's plans include filming several other travesties of some of the famous multiple reel cinema sensations. His scenario department in conference with F. Richard Jones, supervising director of all Sennett productions, is now working out two or three stories based upon "sob-stuff" dramas.

THAIS FINDS OUR LANGUAGE A PUZZLER

Thais Valdemar, a young Russian lady recently escaped from the land of the Bolsheviks, is one of the many extra people appearing with Bert Lytell and Blanche Sweet under Eddie Cline's direction in the Principal Pictures production of "The Meanest Man in the World." Though an actress of recognized standing in her home land, Mlle. Valdemar has trouble with the English language even in its meagre use in pictures.

Director Cline, recognizing the young artist's native ability, picked her for a small role and was rehearsing her in the action. She was supposed to speak a line which, after she had "lipped" it, was to be used as a substitute on the screen; but the lady's voicing of the sentence was so very far from coinciding with the words to be flashed on the screen that the discrepancy became humorous, as when one would be supposed to say, "Oh, yes," and the words would appear "Gracious, no."

After several ineffectual efforts at getting a proper registration, Mr. Cline suggested to the young lady:

"Never mind speaking the words that way; say it in pantomine."

"Say it in what?" the lady enquired.

"In pantomine," repeated Eddie.

"I could say it in French, or Russian, or German, but of that language Pantomine I know not one word."

"Here," says Eddie, "is a modest actress, for like most Russians she is most eloquent in pantomine. Perhaps if I had said 'pantomimovitsky' she would have understood."

STAHL, UNAFRAID, STARTS FRIDAY, THE 13TH

Waving the megaphone of defiance at the god of superstition and all of its ill-omened subsidiaries, John M. Stahl started work on Friday the 13th on the production of Leila Burton Wells' "The Wanters," as his next big picture for Louis B. Mayer-First National release. Ready to begin after many weeks of painstaking preparations, the director refused to be overawed by superstitious beliefs, and opened his first camera barrage on the successor to his latest triumph, "The Dangerous Age," at a Santa Monica seashore location.

With the signing of Gertrude Astor for one of the leading roles in "The Wanters," Mr. Stahl practically completed the list of principals for this picture. Miss Astor, who is a noted screen beauty, will play a snobbish society girl of the type most symbolical of the chronic "wanters" in life. Among the other stars in the cast are: Marie Prevost, Norma Shearer, Robert Ellis, Lincoln Stedman, and Cyril Chadwick. Paul Bern and J. G. Hawks wrote the scenario which will be produced with Ernest G. Palmer officiating as chief photographer.

Probably no other industry in the world harbors and nurtures as many superstitions as does the theatrical business, but John M. Stahl proves himself an exception to the rule by openly disregarding the mystic powers said to be connected with broken mirrors, standing ladders, black cats, two-dollar bills and other agents of bad luck. Thirteen and Friday, said to combine in the strongest jinx of all, is his favorite date on the calendar for it was on a Friday the 13th several years ago that he arrived in California to start work at the Mayer Studio as head of an all-star production unit.

SUN OF A SON OF FILM MAGNATE RISES EARLY

Lawrence J. Kane, Yale senior, who is the younger son of Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, was elected recently to the editorial staff of the Yale Daily News, a position much coveted in university circles. He was placed in charge of the pictorial section, and, without loss of time, gave a demonstration of organizing and business getting ability which even Dad never surpassed.

The pictorial section had been started as an independent publication, but not long ago was incorporated with the Yale Daily News and issued as a supplement every other week. Young Kane proceeded to make a weekly of it and in the three weeks since he took charge has so filled it with new and interesting features that its circulation has risen from 1,000 to 10,000.

The pictorial section is a mirror of student activities, and besides being of deep interest to the undergraduates, is of immense value to the university. With its ten-fold increase in circulation its worth to Yale is, of course, vastly enhanced. Arthur S. Kane, Lawrence's father, was a newspaper man before he went into pictures.

"POPPY BRIDE" TO BE MAX MILLER'S NEXT

Coincident with the engagement of Patricia Palmer for the feminine lead and "Ranger" Bill Miller for the principal masculine part, Max Miller, president of the Max Miller Productions of San Francisco, announces his next production as "The Poppy Bride," by J. Stewart Woodhouse, a Los Angeles scenarist.

The production is to be made with an all-star cast and Mr. Miller is combing the field for the best obtainable talent.

Of especial interest is the fact that this feature, the action of which ranges from a western cattle ranch to San Francisco's Chinatown, will present some very remarkable camera work through the medium of a new stereoscopic leans, on which Mr. Miller holds the patents.

Carewe Completes Masterpiece

Edwin Carewe this week completed the picturization of David Belasco's greatest stage success, "The Girl of the Golden West." After three months of strenuous work, the word "Finis" has been written to the production which Carewe hopes will be his masterpiece. No effort in either expense or time was spared to make this one of the steller pictures of 1823. It is to be released the latter part of May.

MISS NILSSON TO STAR IN YOUNG'S "PONJOLA"

Sam E. Rork has purchased "Ponjola," Cynthia Stockley's sensational story of South African life which he plans to produce at the United Studios for Asscciated First National release.

Simultaneous with his announcement that he will picturize this widely read novel, he also announces that he has contracted with Anna Q. Nilsson to play the feature role.

The signing of Miss Nilsson to play the leading role is the result of an unanimous selection by producer, director, distributing organization and the author herself. As the heroine is also the hero, meaning that the girl masquerades successfully as a young man throughout the story, Miss Nilsson is considered the perfect selection not only because of her dramatic ability, but because of her wide range of virile characterizations. She is now playing the leading role of "Cherry Malotte" in Rex Beach's "The Spoilers," which Jesse D. Hampton is producing for Goldwyn in association with Rork.

James Young is now hard at work on "Trilby," the Richard Walton Tully production at the United Studios. Upon the completion of this big production some time in May, the director will rejoin Rork to produce "Ponjola." This will be the second production for First National of the Rork-Young combination, the first being "Wandering Daughters," by Dana Burnet.

With the definite selection of Miss Nilsson to play the featured role no more casting will be done until Mr. Young has completed "Trilby."

The statuesque viking's daughter considers the heroine in "Ponjola" to be her greatest screen opportunity. In fact, it was Miss Nilsson herself who first called the attention of Mr. Rork to the story. Everybody else in pictures was bidding for it, but the star and producer managed to win the race by an hour or so.

Actor Buys Gloom

Carl Miller is investing heavily in "gloom" stocks for some climax scenes he will portray for the silversheet in "Public Opinion," the Charles Chaplin vehicle starring Edna Purviance. In order to feel tragic to the nth degree, Mr. Miller is absorbing the gloom of Ben Hecht's "Fantazius Mallara" and the equally cheering philosophy of one Italian Leopardi who frequently offers in his works that "life is fit only to be despised." These scenes form the final fadeout for the pictures and exteriors and location shots will follow when Mr. Miller won't need the support of Messrs. Hecht and Leopardi.

CLOWN OF 50 YEARS AGO TO CLOWN AGAIN NOW

One of the features of the Charity Circus to be held unde the auspices of the Childrens Hospital at Praeger Park fro May 4th to May 13th inclusive will be Tote Du Crow, local film actor who scored a success a Pablo in "The Pride of Palomar. Du Crow, whose parents were circus performers, and who himself was for almost fifty year one of the most famous clowns in the sawdust ring will appear in his old-time make-up and is predicted he will be one of th biggest attractions of the affair He will be ably supported by tw other noted clowns of many years experience, Jim Gibson and Cal Cohen.

The show will be in the form of a one-ring circus, which was so popular a half-century ago It is under the direct supervisio of S. H. Barrett, Jr., whose father was one of the prominent figures in the show world of the late '80's. Mr. Barrett, who is better known hereabouts as "Shell" ha for many years harbored a desire to stage an old fashioned sawdust performance, and his dream is now about to come true. That it will be a success is evidenced by the scores of letters pouring in from all sections of filmland offering talent for the affair.

The accompanying picture, which was taken twelve years ago, shows Du Crow with his dog, who originated and presented the renowned "rabbit hunt act," which was later so widely imitated. Tote labored for almost half a year to teach the dog his part, and upon the first presentation of the act they were greeted with a tremendous ovation. The dog died later, and Tote turned all of his attention to pictures, where he has been an interesting figure for fourteen years or more.

LEAH BAIRD'S LATEST FILM WINS AT PRE-VIEW

The first print of "The Destroying Angel," the second of the 1923 Specials featuring Leah Baird, to reach the East, arrived in New York a few days ago and officials of Associated Exhibitors had a preview of the picture. This feature is perhaps the most ambitious Miss Baird has done, and, in the judgment of the Associated executives, is certain to enhance greatly the popularity of this player and prove a superior box office attraction.

Miss Baird herself adapted the picture from the well known novel by Louis Joseph Vance. It is in six reels, which abound with romantic features, contain many thrilling situations and are said to present some remarkable scenic effects.

Old-timers Rejoin

Mack Sennett has engaged the man who directed the first comedy in which Ben Turpin was featured to wield the megaphone over the criss-cross eyed comedian's second comedy released on the Pathe program. He is Herman Raymaker, and it was almost eight years ago when this comedy director became acquainted with Ben's lureful orbs. Rehearsals for the new production were conducted by F. Richard Jones, supervising director of Mack Sennett productions. Filming began today.

PRODUCER THINKS SWAN SONG IS DUE WESTERNS

The crook, or underworld type, of photoplay is fast taking the place of the old-fashioned "western," with its cowboys, renegades, posses and villains with a flair for ranchmen's daughters. That is the belief of Richard Thomas, the young producer-director, who is filming his second of a long series of underworld filmplays at the Hollywood Studios.

One need only to look at the magazine sales racks for proof that the western atmosphere in literature has been superseded by detective stories and crook narratives. Pictures, naturally, had to follow the public trend of reading, avers Mr. Thomas.

Louise May Tour England

Louise Fazenda has received a standing offer of a personal appearance tour throughout England and being featured in a sketch especially written for her, with English management. The comedienne is tremendously popular in England, for her characterization of the tight braids, unique hats, quaint basque and full skirts has been seized upon as identical with the English slavey type. One leading magazine for years has devoted a page to her sayings and doings. Miss Fazenda has not yet named the day, but plans one of these summers to cross the pond.

"BLACK OXEN" TO BE FILMED FOR 1st NATIONAL

Gertrude Atherton's widely-discussed novel, "Black Oxen," which is regarded by many as the most startling literary gem of the year, is to be produced for the screen by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Few books of recent years have caused such widespread comment as has this daring story, which, dealing with the rejuvenation of a middle aged woman and her love for a brilliant man, many years her junior, promises to make ideal screen material.

Its adaptation is in the hands of Marion Fairfax, who is regarded as one of the foremost scenarists in the motion picture industry.

"Black Oxen," has not only occasioned a furore in the field of literature but also it has been the subject of considerable comment among the medical profession, for its theme, based on the recently discovered youth-giving glandular treatment, is one which is still agitating scientists and medical men the world over.

The story of "Black Oxen," centers around a woman of sixty, who as a result of undergoing a rejuvenation treatment, becomes able to look, act and feel as a woman of twenty-five. A brilliant columnist and dramatist falls in love with her and it is around this strange romance that the novel plot of the story is wound.

No announcement is forthcoming from First National as to the date of the filming of the picture, but it is expected that camera work will begin on the production some time within the next few months.

At the present time the executives at the offices of First National at the United Studios, Hollywood, are engaged in sifting the whole field of motion pictures to secure the very best talent obtainable to enact the various roles.

Sennett is Expanding

Additional outdoor stages are being constructed on the Mack Sennett lot because of the addition of several new companies. With the new space ready the Sennett studios of 32 acres will contain over 40,000 square feet of actual stage space, exceeding the floor space of any studio in the West. The work is progressing under the supervision of Sanford D. Barnes, technical director.

King Vidor, who is directing "Three Wise Fools," is exceedingly fond of tennis. Every Sunday finds him out on a neighboring tennis court. He is making plans now to have one built in his own garden.

THERE ARE MORE JOBS THAN ACTORS!

That the time has arrived in Hollywood film producing circles, when the demand for talented players exceeds the supply, is indicated by the fact that for the first time in two years there has become evident a distinct shortage of established actors and actresses.

This is particularly true of character men, according to Maurice Tourneur, who, for two weeks, searched Hollywood for an actor to play the important part of Prof. Futvoye in the forthcoming First National picturization of "The Brass Bottle."

It was only after many negotiations and an arrangement of producing schedules on the part of a number of other producers who are simultaneously employing Tully Marshall at present, that Mr. Tourneur was finally able to sign this well-known actor to portray one of the leading character parts in his new film.

In order to appear for Mr. Tourneur, Marshall's working time at two other studios has to be so dovetailed with the producing schedule of Tourneur's film, that it is possible for the actor to appear for all three companies at the same time.

A careful survey of all the established character actors shows every well-known actor appearing in two or more productions simultaneously.

NEW STARRING LINE-UP FOR CHRISTIE COMEDIES

With the signing of Jimmie Adams, Babe London and others under exclusive contracts to be featured in Christie Comedies, the two-reel organization has made a line-up of comedy stars by which five or six different "names" will appear alternately in starring positions in the new releases. Pictures are also arranged so that the supporting players will alternate their appearances.

For instance the latest pictures released will present a great variety of talent. "A Hula Honeymoon" features Henry Murdock and Babe London. Next comes "Babies Welcome" in which Dorothy Devore is starring, supported by Ann May Wong and George Stewart.

"Green As Grass" introduces Jimmie Adams, supported by Charlotte Merriam; while "Take Your Choice" features Bobby Vernon, supported by five different leading ladies.

Screen rights to "The Rendezvous," a powerful story of mountain setting, by Madelaine Ruthven, have been purchased by the Goldwyn Pictures corporation and work will be started on the picture as soon as possible.

FILM PROMISES TO AROUSE SHADES OF OLD TIMES

Little Mr. Wettin, well-known king of England, will perhaps hie away to a high dungeon when he sees "Captain Applejack." A high dungeon is not nearly as fast as a huff, but it is a more dignified vehicle and even motion picture spectators are careful never to leave Buckingham palace in anything as undignified a pique or a frenzy.

"Captain Applejack," which Fred Niblo is directing as his second independent production for Louis B. Mayer and Metro release, concerns a modern British family who suddenly discovers that the original bearer of the name amassed his fortune as a pirate and that he was a smelly old scoundrel with a taste for rum and a cast-iron conscience.

The story was first a stage play and permeated London. That it deals intimately with the history of a famous British family is a favorite rumor among young British antiquarians who antiquate best over brandy and soda in exclusive clubs.

"Extraordinary thing using the honored old name,' said one keen critic. "Might at least have changed it a bit."

Mr. Niblo is changing it. "Captain Applejack" is derived from "Captain Ambrose Applejohn" just as applejack is derived from cider when age adds drama and humor to that mild tipple.

The director has an excellent cast with which to tell his story. Matt Moore has the title role while Enid Bennett, Barbara La Marr, Robert McKim, Mrs. Mathilde Brundage, Thomas Ricketts, Emily Fitzroy and Otto Hoffman have other principal characterizations.

MARY AND DOUG GET INVITATION FROM SKY

Invitations do not often fall from the sky, yet that is exactly what happened recently in Hollywood when Lieut. C. C. Moseley, America's "Speed Hound of the Air," flew over the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios and dropped a bomb containing an invitation to this famous stellar duo to help dedicate the new Reserve Officers' Flying Field at Santa Monica. Lieutenant Moseley is the commanding officer of the field, which will be one of four to be opened in the U. S. Mary Pickford, who was made an honorary "Ace" just before the end of the war, has been asked to raise the emblem which will officially dedicate the field.

Back After Five Years

Scott McGee, character actor, has returned to Hollywood after a five years' absence in the east. He came via Miami, Florida, where D. W. Griffith was engaged in filming exteriors for his forthcoming production, "The White Rose." McGee states that Miami is very beautiful, but not in Hollywood's class, for the weather there is ideal only three months during the year, and the low, flat country cannot in any sense compare with the verdant hills surrounding the Hollywood filmland.

Gets Three Offers on 13th

Roy H. Klumb's birthday was Friday, the thirteenth, and he's one of the few who hold to the opinion that that day does not necessarily signify bad luck. "In fact," Roy says, "it brought me more than an ordinary streak of good luck." He was offered three jobs on his birthday, but all of them were in comedies, so he refused on the grounds that there is a strong possibility he will soon be directing a company of his own.

BABY BRUCE NAMES LOTS AFTER PICTURES HE'S IN

With many dollars invested in Los Angeles real estate, three ranches and several fruit groves, it is quite possible that Bruce Guerin, three and a half year old screen kiddie, will not starve in his old age. Bruce has played featured roles in seven productions in a little more than a year and every cent of his earnings has been invested for him by his parents, who bought a piece of realty property in his name at the completion of each picture. Having recently enacted roles in "Brass" for Warner Brothers and in "Drifting," his earnings from his work in those two productions have been salted away in Hollywood lots. For his "Bachelor Daddy" lot, costing $2,500, his mother refused $10,000, its valuation as business frontage having increased simultaneously with Bruce's own progress since appearing in that picture. The tiny tot was signed last week on a long-term contract by Warner Brothers.

Dives All Dressed Up

Ralph Lewis took a high dive from the mast of a big vessel into the Pacific while attired in a dress suit for one of the big scenes in the R-C production of "Blow Your Own Horn.' Lewis is a powerful swimmer, as well as a skilled diver and when Director Jimmy Horne asked for a retake because the camera had buckled, Lewis made the dive the second time without a murmur.

Robbers Take Poems

Fred Esmelton had his apartment on Vermont Avenue robbed of several rare old volumes of British poems. The burglars also took some clothing and bric-a-brac, but Esmelton states he does not mind the loss of the latter articles if the thief will only return the books. Esmelton plays one of the important roles in "The Rustle of Silk," now appearing at Grauman's Metropolitan.

CONNIE GOES ON LOCATION IN BUSSES

Constance Talmadge and the "Dulcy" company have left for location in the Yosemite region. Accompanying Miss Talmadge were Sidney Franklin, director, and the cast which includes Jack Mulhall, Claude Gillingwater, Ann Wilson, Johnny Harron, Ann Cornwall, Andre de Beranger, Gilbert Douglas and Milla Davenport.

Three special double-deck busses such as are used on Fifth Avenue in New York and which probably will be common sights on the streets of Los Angeles soon, were used to transport the players and technical staff of the Talmadge company. These busses are fitted up with sleeping berths and cooking outfits so that the company will be able to camp out while on location.

The scenes of "Dulcy" will take the players to Big Bear Lake, San Diego, San Francisco, Sacramento and Monterey before they return to Los Angeles. Last week scenes for "Dulcy" were filmed at Barstow, where a severe electrical storm caused much static in the cameramen's boxes. During the past week additional scenes were filmed at the Joseph M. Schenck studios. A stay of about ten days will be made in the Yosemite region.

A magnificent mountain lodge has been rented by Mr. Schenck for the Yosemite sequence of the comedy. Constance Talmadge will live in this lodge and will motor out to location during the making of the film.

"Dulcy" is based on the New York stage success of the same name by George S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly. In it Constance has the role of a feather-brained young married woman. Walter Israel, costumer, has secured for Miss Talmadge several new gowns from the Paris spring fashion shows, several of which, showing the Tut-Ank-Amen influence, will be worn by her in "Dulcy."

BARBARA TO TRY VAMPING "VAMPABLE" KING SOLOMON

Barbara La Marr is to try to vamp King Solomon for Maurice Tourneur. She was signed this week for a role in "The Brass Bottle." She is to play the part of a Princess, beloved of Fakrash-el-Aamash, a Jinnee. Her job, in the story, is to take King Solomon's mind off his thousand wives, and all of his other worries, so that he may be put under the spell of the jinn who are plotting his ruin.

Solomon is warned and the Princess' efforts are fruitless. One of the jinn is put in a brass bottle and thrown into the sea, not to be released until Mr. Volstead's time.

A Chance to "Break In"

We Want

100 People

with or without experience in

MOTION PICTURES

to appear in Feature Film with all star cast

headed by two of the most prominent stars in the Motion Picture world. We are looking for people with the sincere desire to "break in," and those who believe they have the talent and ability, but hitherto have found it difficult, if not impossible to obtain the chance to show what they can do.

THIS IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY

We want to give you a chance to act in Feature pictures to be filmed in our own studios, and at the same time you will have an opportunity to become a shareholder in a large motion picture concern. It is an unusual and rare opportunity to become a shareholder in a company which produces and distributes their own pictures. An investment of $1000.00 is required which entitles you to receive dividends from our Co-operative Stock sharing plan, besides your salary and permanent contract.

ACT TODAY

Send recent photo, with full name, nationality, height, weight, color of hair and eyes, complexion, and state what motion picture experience you have had, if any, and type of work you believe you are best fitted for.

Jean Hersholt of the cast for Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed," came to town last week and is hard at work. Jean doesn't suffer from the cold in San Francisco, but goes around with his collar turned up because he has to wear a comedy haircut which makes him look like a small town dude of a few years ago.

The Victor Fisher Production office here reports that the company making their picture "Youth Triumphant" at the Hollywood Studios, is making most satisfactory progress. They have been at work two weeks, and expect another three weeks to complete the picture. They are especially delighted with some of the photography in the night scenes. A very finely trained Belgian Police dog, the property of Dr. Humber of San Francisco, has been taken to Hollywood to play a part in the picture.

The Famous Players-Lasky company making "The Woman with Four Faces" under the direction of Herbert Brenon, worked here several days last week shooting some scenes at one of the jails, and others in the insane asylum at Napa, and returned to Los Angeles Thursday night. James Howe, cameraman, was back in town over the week-end to do some special locations.

Alexander Pantages, head of the Pantages vaudeville circuit, has announced that he is planning to build a new theatre in San Francisco. As this is his home town he says it will be a sort of monument, and one of the largest and finest theatres in the United States, and in its building he will use all the knowledge he has gained of theatres through years of experience.

ARTISTS IN SPRINGTIME

quests for players. Just now, however, there is an unprecedented demand for featured actors and actresses—chiefly leading men.

Probably the most important "loan" of the week was that of both Gaston Glass and Kenneth Harlan to the Renco concern for the production of a big all-star picture titled "After the Ball." Director Dallas Fitzgerald, who is at the helm for Renco, changed his shooting schedule in order to accommodate the equally active schedule at the Schulberg Studios, from which the two favorites were obtained.

The man who paraphrased the bromide about the industry being in its infancy, saying it should read "infants are in the industry," said a forkfull, in the informal, but forceful language of backstage. For Hollywood's famous youngsters are making known their presence with a vengeance.

Jackie Coogan is about to begin work in what promises to be his most costly and ambitious picture, "Long Live the King," by Mary Roberts Rinehart. Dinky Dean, Charles Chaplin's latest child find, is about to appear in a series of features to be filmed by an independent concern.

Baby Peggy, having completed a series of two reelers for Century Comedies, has been loaned for an eight-reel special production.

Soon the clock will be turned back to the London of 1700—and bewigged and bepowdered gallants and their ladies will live their lives again back in the romantic days when England's highwaymen were heroes of the populace and civilization was in its early sunrise. That will be "A Lady of Quality," Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel, to be filmed by Hobart Henley, starring Virginia Valli.

SCREEN STORIETTES

Those who abandon an occupation which has brought them a full measure of success for the sake of an ideal are few and therefore unusually interesting. Hence this focusing of attention on Lucy Beaumont, who has just arrived in Los Angeles to dedicate herself exclusively to enacting mother roles in motion pictures after a brilliant career of twenty years' duration on the speaking stage of New York, London and most all parts of the world. She bade farewell to the footlights just as she reached the height of her success to embrace the opportunities of reaching more and larger audiences through the medium of film because she is eager to contribute her full share towards inculcating a spirit of greater respect for mothers in the firm belief that a return to old-fashioned notions of loyalty to parents will wield more influence than any other single force towards solving most of the national and international problems confronting the world nowadays.

"If the importance of mothers were more deeply impressed and if the object lessons she holds for all humanity were shown more in the close-up of men's affairs, I am confident most of this terrible inclination tc quarrel and fight would be eliminated and I think impressive characterizations on the screen in relation to the right kinds of stories will do much to help in this desirable eliminating," Miss Beaumont says. "I have high hopes of making millions of people feel the true impulses of the good mother and thereby causing them to settle down to a more amicable consideration of all matters in dispute. According to my way of thinking, the screen offers the greatest possible medium for spreading thoughts of goodness such as will inspire universal goodness and I aspire to be instrumental by using my knowledge of dramatic expression, whatever it may be worth, to serve such a useful purpose. It is my ideal, the ideal that has won me away from the stage for the wider latitude of the screen."

"Parson Fred" isn't a sky pilot any more. He has signed a contract to star in Universal pictures. He is now co-starring with Ann Little in the Universal chapter play, "The Eagle's Talons."

From the athletic field into the pulpit and now seeking fame before the camera is the thumb-nail history of Fred Thomson.

While a student at Occidental College in Los Angeles several years ago he was studying to become a structural engineer, Thomson became the athletic sensation of the mest and won the national all-round track and field championship at Franklin Field, Chicago, the first time that a western athlete had ever carried off this honor.

That same year he decided to enter the ministry and began his theological studies in Princeton. The next summer, as a member of the Princeton track and field team he again won the National championship at Franklin Field.

Then he went into the ministry and preached from coast to coast. During the war he served as chaplain of the 143rd Field Artillery and became known as "Parson Fred."

It was during a football game on the Camp Kearney field at San Diego, in honor of Mary Pickford, honorary colonel of the regiment, that Thomson was requested by Miss Pickford to change his vocation at the end of the war from the ministry to the movies. Thomson had his leg broken during the game and during the weeks of his convalescence Miss Pickford visited him often.

Miss Pickford persuaded him to appear as her leading man in one production at the end of the war. Thomson made his initial debut before the camera with her in "The Love Light." He has had many important roles in pictures since that time.

Thomson was signed by Universal for a long term and is now preparing reels of thrills for the motion picture public by his daring performances in "The Eagle's Talons."

Daniel Boone, George Washington, General Braddock, Thomas Jefferson are living their lives over again in one corner of the city of shadowland. Boone and his hardy frontiersmen battle with real Indians—patriots of the days when America was in the making, and grapple again with the problems of a new nation's independence. The world will see them, in a few months, in the chapter play "Daniel Boone' 'a history lesson in celluloid featuring Jack Mower and Eileen Sedgwick.

Charitable enterprises seem to be demanding most of the leisure of studio workers who are popularly supposed to hie themselves to jazz palaces immediately after wiping the grease paint of labor from their brows. Raising funds for the Childrens' Hospital and the Studio Club—Hollywood's home for its ambitious girl workers—is the chief business of the day.

Gaston Glass has devised a method of raising cash that has proved effective, and a warning to studio visitors. The ever-present star chair, bearing his name in large letters on its back, may be used by visitors for a substantial contribution only. Since the price of a brief rest in the coveted chair is not named by Glass until after its occupant is comfortably seated, the sum collected has mounted to a respectable figure.

Olga Printzlau, Eve Unsell, June Mathis and practically all of the well known writers, are spending their waking hours adding to the building fund that is expected to serve as a foundation for a great structure that will house Hollywood's girl picture workers.

Carmelita in "Rosita"

When Carmelita Geraghty appeared before Ernest Lubitsch who had reviewed that day only 100 fair damsels for the role of a Spanish favorite for Mary Pickford's new production, "Rosita" which he is directing, he immediately said, "You are just the type." For that Miss Geraghty feels she is indebted to her mother's nationality, who is Spanish and from the famous De Cessaros family of San Francisco. The young actress is now appearing in the Cosmopolitan film, "The Daughter of Mother McGinn" in the making at Goldwyn's.

Some Survival of Fittest

Although it was released in April a year ago and was heavily booked from the beginning, Associated Exhibitors' picturization of "Silas Marner," George Eliot's classic, continues in great demand. Not only has this feature proved a popular and profitable attraction in leading theatres everywhere, but it is believed to have been booked by a larger number of non-theatrical enterprises — notably schools, than almost any other film ever made.

Today the entrancing romance of Hugo—of the hunchback and his hopeless love—his supreme sacrifice and the horrors of the Bastile, is being lived all over again—they don't just act such picture plays, but almost actually live them.

Then, between scenes, they turn the clock back to 1923 again and dance to "Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Sheehan."

This may sound like a fairy tale, but it's all true, and it's all routine at Universal City.

In 1914 Edmund Mortimer, newest director at Universal City today, was playing the light comedy juvenile with Mary Mannering in "A Man's World" on the New York stage. He had frequently heard the call of moving pictures but he hadn't turned a very heedful ear because he did not know much about them.

Then one day he thought he'd "look into this picture business."

He dropped into the Universal offices in New York City.

"The office boy didn't think so much of me," he relates. "I was about to surrender to my dignity and leave the place in a 'high-hat' manner when I met Julius Stern. He promptly wrote a letter for me to someone else, a letter which was calculated to satisfy my curiosity with a dip into actual experience before the camera."

The letter worked; Mortimer talked to Herbert Brenon, who was casting a picture. Brenon wanted a skipper for a ship who could really "skip" the thing. When Mortimer alleged that he could "sail a boat" Brenon explained carefully that it was a four-masted schooner. Then Mortimer explained that he had sailed everything and could handle the ship.

So Edmund Mortimer became an actor in pictures more because he had been in the navy three years and the merchant marine two years than because he had been on the stage fifteen years appearing with famous stars.

After a short period as an actor Mortimer turned director and has been one ever since. He will direct Herbert Rawlinson in Margaret Bryant's "Thicker Than Water," scenarized by Harvey Gates.

Production has been completed at Universal City on "Pure Grit," Hoot Gibson's latest starring vehicle, which was directed by Edward Sedgwick.

"Pure Grit" was adapted to the screen by Sedgwick from a Blue Book magazine story, "Blinky," by Gene Marley. It is a story of the adventures of a youth in a troop of United States cavalry on the Mexican border and an entire group of cavalry was used in the filming of the play. All the exterior shots in the production were made near Camp Hearn, San Diego, along the Mexican boundary line.

HOW TO MAKE A MOVIE

William Beaudine, famous director who is directing the J. K. McDonald production, "Penrod and Sam," for First National, was once asked how to successfully make a motion picture.

"Just as a cook bakes a cake," answered Beaudine. "He uses so much sugar, so much butter, so much flour, so many eggs, a pinch of salt, a dash of flavoring and the other ingredients, which if properly mixed and baked, results in a palatable confection.

"That is the same receipt for the making of good pictures, only the ingredients are different; so much suspense, so much pathos, so much comedy, a dash of logic—and a lot of human interest. The art comes in the proper mixing of the film ingredients. And they must not always be stirred by the same spoon. By this I mean the situations must not be bromides, they must be new, or at least handled from a different angle to get the maximum of entertainment value.

"In the making of 'Penrod and Sam' for First National, I have attempted to make it just as natural on the screen as Booth Tarkington made his characters famous on print paper. I believe that every man will be able to see himself in this picture as one of the characters. He will recall his boyish thoughts, his ideas and ideals and if he does not recognize himself as one of the kiddies in this production he will surely be able to recognize some similar youth with whom he played in his childhood."

"Penrod and Sam," which is said to be the best "kid" picture ever produced, is interpreted by an all-star cast which, among others, includes: Gladys Brockwell, William V. Mong, Rockliffe Fellows, Mary Philibi, Gareth Hughes, Denny Alexander, Joe Butterworth, Newton Hall, Buddie and Gertie Messinger, Martha Mattox, Victor Potel and Herman and Verman, the picanniny twins. The story is Tarkington's sequel to his "Penrod," and offers an even better opportunity for the screen than did its famous predecessor.

The people of Los Angeles have accepted without question the public announcement that the Motion Picture Industry will stage a magnificent and brilliant spectacle on the occasion of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial, to be held at Exposition Park and Coliseum from July 2 to August 4. They know positively that it must be a success because Filmdom is behind it. No greater compliment could be paid to the people of the Industry than this manifestation of faith on the part of the Los Angeles public. The outcome is certain to be a closer and more cordial relationship between the Industry as a whole and the entire citizenry of Los Angeles than has ever existed since the Industry was established as an inseparable part of the great metropolis of the Pacific Coast.

No more appropriate name could have been selected for this important function than the official title, "The American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition." It is being held to commemorate the One Hundredth Anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine. Many of the most enlightening and illuminating chapters of history have been written during the century which has elapsed since President Monroe proclaimed to the Old World that, henceforth the United States purposed, at any cost, to safeguard the territorial independence of all the nations of the Western Hemisphere. And today it is the priceless privilege of the Motion Picture Industry to stage a spectacle that will vividly and accurately portray the outstanding events that have occurred during that soul-stirring period.

Every one in Filmdom knows the publicity value of this great opportunity—and furthermore, they all realize that Los Angeles, as Hostess on this momentous occasion, looks to the Industry to maintain the City's world-wide reputation to make a glorious success of anything it undertakes.

Fill out this blank application and mail to Exposition Department, 1005 Hollingsworth Bldg., Sixth and Hill Sts., Los Angeles.

Results of Editorial Observations

It begins to look as if the weather is like many a human being, to-wit: it can't settle.

Is it that people are forced to go the rounds of humdrum existence every day that they can't go on the square?

The cinema art needs no champion to defend its worth, but it does need all of its people working for its improvement for all they are worth.

It is predicted there will be a war between various factions of exhibitors this fall. In other words, there is a dire possibility of peace going to pieces.

Whenever anybody tries to tell you that moving pictures corrupt anybody's morals simply because they happen to constitute a Sunday attraction, you tell 'em they're crazy. True, this is rough stuff, but it is nevertheless true.

They say crop conditions are ideal and that this is bound to be a year of bumper crops galore. But, still we hear some talk of hard times in certain sections of the country. Wonder if it would make any difference if it rained gold for a couple of seasons?

You cannot always tell what a picture is going to do when it reaches the public. It's all because you can never tell what the public is going to do. If you want to know how little anybody knows about the public, ask the politicians about this time of the year.

There is a very general disposition on the part of exhibitors throughout the country to demand all-star casts more stellar than ever. If this keeps up, there is the danger of the tastes of these exhibitors becoming so fastidious that no star will be big enough to be a member of the cast playing in the picture they will play. Then what?

Now that Warner Brothers have built the largest stage in the world,—in Hollywood, mind you—and there are bright prospects of William Fox and other film magnates building other stages of such gigantic proportions in this same Hollywood, it sounds more foolish than ever to give utterance to words of worry over the possibilities of Florida or any other section of the country taking the motion picture industry away from the aforesaid Hollywood.

They are beginning to discuss restrictions in the matter of ownership of motor cars in some of the larger and more congested eastern cities. According to the plan suggested, no one will be permitted to own more than one automobile, the hope being to thus eliminate some machines from the streets. It sure does sound funny to hear about people who own several autos when the fellow who does the hearing has only one car and still owes a lot on it.

The threatened passing of the two-reel comedy seems to cease to be a menace, because as fast as the two-reel comedians move on up to the full-length features, the one-reel kings move up to the two-reel status. Hence it looks as if about the only part of the program which is due to suffer is the one-reel fun film, which many think could be dispensed with entirely anyway. The average fan will not give a whoop one way or the other so long as he is given ample opportunities to laugh a-plenty.

The growth of Hollywood has been such that ground occupied by some of the studios "closer in" has become most too valuable to be used for the purpose of making motion pictures. Hence there is the start of a movement for studios to move farther out into the outskirts of the town. And since Hollywood has only begun to spread out, we are just wondering whether or not even the outskirts are far enough out! It would be all wrong if the studios had to move out about every ten years.

For many years we have heard a great deal about the coming of the great American opera, but it has never come. Now, according to advance information, a group of eastern capitalists have plans for building a theatre in Hollywood dedicated to trying to discover the great masterpiece through offering the means for premieres of the promising works of ambitious composers. It sounds like a bright prospect of very general interest. Moreover, if it leads to the discovery of the long-sought musical gem, Hollywood will be placed in a new limelight of vast consequence. We're for that theatre without reservation and here's hoping the plan proves feasible enough to get quick action.

Personally we are not interested in politics any more, but we quite agree that motion picture people should interest themselves in the game enough to vote for men who will regard the film industry in Southern California as being of some importance and will therefore see to it that there is no detrimental legislation passed against it without putting up a fight of sufficient force to arouse those concerned to a realization as to what it's all about. There is too much of the insidious political maneuvering in America for anyone to be asleep at the switch at any time. Therefore, Camera! urges picture people to make it more of a habit to scrutinize the records of seekers of public offices with great care with the idea of ascertaining definitely just what such are likely to do upon gaining possession of any of the reins of government.

A Chance to "Break In"

We Want

100 People

with or without experience in

MOTION PICTURES

to appear in Feature Film with all star cast

headed by two of the most prominent stars in the Motion Picture world. We are looking for people with the sincere desire to "break in," and those who believe they have the talent and ability, but hitherto have found it difficult, if not impossible to obtain the chance to show what they can do.

THIS IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY

We want to give you a chance to act in Feature pictures to be filmed in our own studios, and at the same time you will have an opportunity to become a shareholder in a large motion picture concern. It is an unusual and rare opportunity to become a shareholder in a company which produces and distributes their own pictures. An investment of $1000.00 is required which entitles you to receive dividends from our Co-operative Stock sharing plan, besides your salary and permanent contract.

ACT TODAY

Send recent photo, with full name, nationality, height, weight, color of hair and eyes, complexion, and state what motion picture experience you have had, if any, and type of work you believe you are best fitted for.

We have a bona fide proposition which will bear strictest investigation.

Synthetic Divorce, Reform and Make-up

By RAY H. LEEK

Now it is the synthetic divoce! In a category with beer without a kick and whiskey without a headache may be classed the divorce without a heartache.

But, lest a false impression of this variety of separation go forth, let it be explained, that we refer to the professional—not the domestic—variety, which has to do with the screen careers only and is in no way related to the family hearth.

Most recent of the synthetic divorces is that of the beautiful Mirian Cooper, who is happily married to R. A. Walsh, the director with whom she has scored her many screen successes. Practically all of Walsh's most successful productions have shown his gifted wife in featured roles, while all of her screen career has been guided by his directorial megaphone.

Now Miss Cooper has joined Gasnier's cast of players at work on "Daughters of the Rich" and will be seen in an important role in that unusual story. Incidentally, she advanced an interesting theory in explanation of her plunge into big productions not directed by her husband.

"As for the why of it, I can only say that no star ever accomplishes their best work until they have had the broader experience permitted by working with more than one director," she said. "Every director and every player can contribute some idea, some suggestion that is helpful to the screen worker. No matter how complete the sympathy between the director and star, there is much to be learned by experience with another director of the caliber of Gasnier.

"Of course the stage version of this Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard story was one of many thrills. But imagine what can be done with it by a director as resourceful as Gasnier and a company of players who are ready to follow him to the end of the earth.

Once more reform stands accused of robbing us of our cherished traditions. One of the leading film critics of Los Angeles, on reviewing the elaborate production of "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," recently released by Al Lichtman, found much to praise in the production, but balked at the cleanliness of the jail in which Kenneth Harlan is imprisoned.

But, for the benefit of this particular reviewer, let it be explained that the dart of criticism is aimed, not at the artificiality of the screen, but at the onrush of reform. For the cleanly cell and corridors to which attention is called, are not the work of a technical director, but an example of hospitality offered by Los Angeles to its convicted law breakers. The jail, in fact, is none other than the Lincoln Heights jail, Los Angeles, just as it was found by the cameramen, players and producers of the picture!

Sam Jaffe, production manager for "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," who claims to know the inner workings of prisons from here to Siberia and back, (professionally, of course) is authority for the statement that

Resume of a Week at Lasky's Studio

Work is now reported one-fourth complete on the gigantic tent city Cecil B. DeMille is building on a stretch of barren beach near Santa Mariax, California. The city must be ready in 24 days to house 2500 people and 4000 animals who will take part in the Biblical scenes which will form the prologue to the modern story evolved around "The Ten Commandments" by Jeanie MacPherson.

"The Ten Commandments" will start indoors about May 7, in the huge throne room of Pharoah's palace, a feature of which will be a statute of the Sphinx, 20 feet high, and hugh gods in equal proportions. Following this ten complete trains will take to "location" the largest crowd ever thus transported for motion picture purposes.

I. S. Liner has been named "Camp Manager" and will run the hotel arrangements. Paul Iribe, Art Director, now is at the "location" superintending the construction of the hugh treasure city of "Rameses" (Exodus 1:11) which will be a feature of the Biblical scenes and the largest exterior set ever built.

As the location is in the center of 300 square miles of barren sand dunes considerable transportation difficulty has been encountered.

Mr. DeMille is now busy with the final details of selecting his cast. An announcement of the people to play in what all indications point to the largest production in motion picture history, is expected shortly.

Additions to the staff of Assistant Director Cullen Tate include Fred Ellis and Edward Chandler.

Catalina Island was the objective this week of Sam Wood for a number of scenes in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" his Paramount Production starring Gloria Swanson. The picture will be completed this week and from all appearances will prove the most brilliant of Miss Swanson's numerous vehicles. The big Egyptian festival scenes, beach episodes and so on, lend color and spirit to the story which was adapted by Sada Cowan from Charlton Andrews' version of Alfred Savior's play, with Julia Crawford Ivers as production editor.

George Fritzmaurice completes his Paramount production "The Cheat" this week, and Pola Negri, the star, will enjoy a brief vacation pending the start of her next picture. "The Cheat" which Ouida Bergere adapted from Hector Turnbull's story has Jack Holt featured and Charles de Roche in support of the star, and has developed a tremendous amount of highly emotional drama. What with the great branding scene, the court room episode, and others of similiar nature, it promises to eclipse "Bella Donna" in intensity as well as beauty.

James Cruze had the show set of the studio this week, occupying the larger portion of number four stage with the dream sequence for his Paramount production "Hollywood." Hundreds of beautiful girls in bathing and dance attire, some clever comedians in action that bordered on extravaganza, reminding one of the days of "The Black Crook" or "The Devil's Auction," made this set distinctly fascinating. Thomas Geraghty adapted the Frank Condon story and Walter Woods is production editor.

Word from Boulder Creek, Cal., where George Melford is making "Salomy Jane" for Paramount, is to the effect that excellent progress is being made and that the company will complete its location work in five weeks. There will then be a few interiors to be shot at this studio. Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett and Maurice Flynn are featured and the adaptation is by Waldemar Young from the Bret Harte story which was dramatized by Paul Armstrong. The spirit of old California is being injected into this drama as much by the characterizations it is said, as by the scenic backgrounds and the action itself.

Charming Mary Astor arrived this week from New York and is starting work under the direction of Alfred E. Green, in his production for Paramount, "To the Ladies." Miss Astor and Robert Agnew are co-featured in this picture which was adapted by Wells Hastings from the play by George S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly. The advent of Miss Astor caused quite a flurry in motion picture circles here, inasmuch as her fame for natural and convincing acting had arrived before her.

Work is shortly to start on "A Gentleman of Leisure" a new Paramount picture starring Jack Holt, which will be directed by Joseph Henabery. This play is a play by John Stapleton and P. G. Wodehouse adapted by Anthony W. Coldway, and Walter Woods is production editor. Sigrid Holmquist, the beautiful Swedish actress will be leading woman and Casson Ferguson has one of the important roles.

Carnival scenes at a location near Hollywood have kept Rob Wagner busily employed this week in Walter Hier's new Paramount picture "Fair Week." The appurtenances of a country Fair, or carnival, including a merry-go-round, ferris-wheel, various freaks, etc., have afforded opportunity for much comedy of which the popular star has taken full advantage. Constance Wilson is leading woman in this original story by Walter Woods who is also production editor.

Scenes in a broker's office have occupied the attention of Charles Maigne this week for his Paramount Production, "The Silent Partner" in which are featured Leatrice Joy, Owen Moore and Robert Edeson. The story is by Maximilian Foster and was adapted by Sada Cowan and Ralph Block is production editor. The cast besides the featured players, boasts a number of well-known people in the screen world, such as E. H. Calvert, one of the best known American actors, Patterson Dial, Bess Flowers, Maude Wayne, Lura Anson and Robert Grey. Miss Joy has an opportunity of wearing some exquisite dresses and is especially happy in a number of unusual and lovely negligees, designed by the Lasky costume department.

SCHERTZINGER TO DIRECT "LONG LIVE THE KING"

After a careful combing of the entire field of available directors, Jack Coogan Senior has engaged Victor Schertzinger to direct Jackie in "Long Live the King," his first Metro production.

Schertzinger has just finished "The Man Next Door." Under his contract with B. P. Schulberg, he handled Katherine MacDonald in her last four pictures.

Schertzinger will be remembered as Charles Ray's director for many of this star's early successes and also for his work with Mabel Normand and Tom Moore. He is one of the universally recognized competent directors of the screen, a capable technician, a man of artistic impulses and imagery and the powers and capabilities to transmute those ideas and images into screen language.

CLOTHING MODEL GIVEN PART IN NEW FOX FILM

Frank MacMullen, who has been a model for numerous clothing, collar, statue and other manufacturers, has decided that displaying his wardrobe before the camera would offer him a greater opportunity than presenting it for the approval of prospective customers on the street, in hotels and other places. Jack Ford, Fox director, has cast the former model for an important role in his next production, as yet untitled, which will enter filming shortly at the company's west coast studios.

Patsy Back on Screen

Patsy Magee, having recently completed a vaudeville tour, has returned to work in motion pictures. She is remembered for her brilliant characterization in "The Charm School" with Wallace Reid, and for her work in "The Son of Wallingford," a Vitagraph production.

PICTURE WINS PRAISE OF INDIANA WOMEN'C CLUBS

Two thousand women, attending the annual convention in Indianapolis of the Indiana Federation of Women's Clubs and Parent-Teachers Associations, expressed enthusiastic approval when Florence Vidor's latest picture, "Alice Adams," was presented as the entertainment feature of their program recently.

At each annual convention of these organizations one photoplay is screened, the choice being made by the Executive Council of Women's Clubs from a selected list of eligible offerings.

A further endorsement was forthcoming when, following the screening, an address was made on "Screen Adaptations," with a discussion of the subject, in which many of the women participated. Naturally, the screen adaptation of Mr. Tarkington's "Alice Adams" formed the theme of the discussion.

MISS SWEET TO APPEAR IN TWO GOLDWYN FILMS

Blanche Sweet, now completing her characterization in "The Meanest Man in the World" at the United Studios, is to appear in two Goldwyn productions.

Upon conclusion of her present engagement wherein she depicts the country lass opposite Bert Lytell, Miss Sweet will start on Goldwyn's picturization of "In The Palace of The King," to be directed by Emmett Flynn. Following this she will appear in the title role of Marshall Neilan's "Tess of the D'Ubervilles." This will mark her initial appearance before the camera under her husband's direction in four years.

Miss Sweet's recent return to the screen in "Quincy Adams Sawyer," after two years' absence has been a triumph for this popular star and has proved that she has lost none of her popularity with the American public as a result of her absence from the screen.

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

San Francisco, Cal., April 23—Jack Dewey, of the Golden Gate Productions has returned from Los Angeles with the finished continuity for three pictures. F. E. Fisher, who is business manager of the organization, announces that they expect to begin actual shooting of at least two pictures early in May, doing their studio work at the Pacific Studios, with location work in and near San Francisco.

Paul Powell, director on "The Fog" finished editing the picture at the Pacific Studios last week, and drove home to Los Angeles in his car last Friday. Mr. Powell has not only made a good picture here, but leaves behind him many new, but warm friends.

Eric Von Stroheim, now making "Greed" here for Goldwyn, says that every picture he directs he has to learn a lot of new stuff, and that this time part of it is dentistry. "McTeague," hero of Frank Norris' great American classic from which the picture is being made, was most of his life a cheap dentist. So by the time Von Stroheim and Gibson Gowland, who plays "McTeague," have, with the help of a real dentist, worked out all of the detail of the scenes in the dental office they both, if the picture business ever fails, can start out as country dentists.

H. A. McKenzie, of the Kenmat Productions, a San Francisco organization with offices in the Mills Building, returned last Saturday with the finished film of the company's first picture. It was made in a southern studio under the title of "Scarlet Shadows," but it has had its title changed to "Crossed Wires." It will be shown here to a few personal friends, after which Mr. McKenzie expects to leave with the film for New York to arrange distribution.

The "Pair of Hellions" company working under the direction of Walter W. Bell for the Stereoscopic Productions are making most satisfactory progress with the picture, another week or ten days of work will finish the shooting. While on location last week up near Niles Canyon the company had a funny experience, as they wanted to get a shot of Ranger Bill Miller getting off a train. So in full cowboy outfit he dashes on a little local train making a short stop at a station, and ran through the cars to do his bit getting off. With the result, that in spite of the camera clicking away on the platform the passengers thought it was a real holdup, and a panic ensued. A few nights ago the company staged a big and most realistic barn dance at the Pacific Studios, where they are doing their studio work.

Edwin B. Willis of the Goldwyn organization spent a few days in San Francisco last week.

Ivor McFadden has decided that making pictures on a co-operative basis has too many difficulties, so the Co-Operative Film Company of this city is, for the time at least, on the inactive list.

Louis Graf, president, and Max Graf production director of the Graf Films left for Los Angeles last Friday with the just completed film of "The Fog," made at the Pacific Studios, with an all star cast, and to be released through Metro.

Ashley Cooper, well known English actor of both stage and the silent drama, arrived in San Francisco last week to join the cast of "A Pair of Hellions" now being made at the Pacific Studios.

Frank Hayes, of the "Greed" cast is having a beautiful time in San Francisco these days, for not only is his part in the picture going well, but he is enjoying a visit to his old home city. For although he has been away for twenty years, he was born and reared here, and belongs to a well known old family, so well known in fact that Hayes Street, where the Von Stroheim set is now, was named after them. So every time Frank sticks his funny face outside the door some old friend is sure to come up to hold a reunion with him.

Robert Eddy, director, and Joseph Gongea, his assistant, have returned to San Francisco, and are busy making preparation for the filming of the second series of Plum Center Comedies soon to be started at the Gerson Studios here.

Noah Berry, his wife and little son spent several days last week at the St. Francis. He said he was here, not on business trips, but for a little holiday, and a complete rest to recover from his very strenuous fight in "The Spoilers," and his four months' steady work on four big pictures. He returned to the south to start work on "To The Last Man" and says he is going to be the last man himself if it kills him.

Why "Souls for Sale"

By RUPERT HUGHES

The crimes committed by the public against moving pictures and their people are largely due to the habit of comparing the lives of actors with imaginary and ideal lives, instead of comparing them with the real lives of other people.

An article devoted to the divorces in Hollywood makes startling reading. But when you say, "The divorces in Indiana are still more numerous," that throws a different light on the matter.

Conditions in the studios are not always beyond criticism, but look at the scandals and murders in church choirs and pulpits.

In "Souls for Sale," I have tried first of all to tell a story of moving picture life; second, to make it true to its life: and third, to give a true idea of the life outside. And so I take a minister's daughter for my heroine, and I show that she has no end of temptation and misfortune in her snug (and smug) little home town. She finds in the moving pictures first a refuge, and then a fascinating lifework.

I have not idealized the movie-world, but have emphasized its ideals. I have not concealed its unpleasant phases, but I have tried to show its difficulties. I have made what use I could of the heartaches, heroisms and nobilities, the bright rewards and the fine soldierly quality of the movie men and women and children as I have known them so well and so long.

Noah Beery, whose great performance in the B. P. Hampston production of "The Spoilers," just completed, is said to be a classic in perfect characterization.

In building the picture from the story, I have made many changes for the sake of beauty, drama or picture. But the first radical change was compelled by the spirit of censorship.

The opening situation in the story was not even criticized when published in magazine and book form and later in the newspapers. But to make any use of it at all on the screen, would violate the rules of every censor board, and set the axes to swinging. The head of the picture would have been cut off before it could be seen. So I changed it. But the very difference between the original story and its picture version may make both more interesting for many reasons.

THE GIRL ON THE COVER

In presenting the likeness of Martha Marshall on its cover this week, Camera! takes pleasure in introducing her as the possessor of unique ambitions. She has no desire to become a star! She only aspires to excel in the portrayal of society girl characters. Until recently she was a leader in Chicago's smartest society, but she abandoned important social conquests to embrace opportunities on the screen. Her cinema future looks very promising.

"Within the Law" Gets Within Warm Praise

Unstinted praise of Norma Talmadge's new crime drama, "Within the Law," was given in an official communication from Police Chief Daniel J. O'Brien, of San Francisco, following a special showing of the film recently before the chief, the police commissioners and other officials.

Chief O'Brien's praise was reiterated by Commissioners Andrew J. Mahoney and Jesse Cook, of the police board in speeches. The program, of which the showing of the film was a part, included a speech by A. M. Bowles, San Francisco executive of the West Coast Theatres Circuit, telling of the personal assistance given by Chief O'Brien when Miss Talmadge's company was filming scenes of "Within the Law," in San Francisco.

The San Francisco police head proclaimed the Joseph M. Schenck film a fair revelation of police methods, and gave an "unqualified endorsement" of it in a letter to the peace officers of America. In his letter he urged the police chiefs of the country to see the film and extend their commendation. He also sent telegrams to Miss Talmadge, Director Frank Lloyd and Joseph M. Schenck warmly praising the film for its dramatic excellence.

O'Brien's letter to police chiefs reads:

"To My Brother Police Officers of America,

"I have just seen Norma Talmadge in 'Within the Law' and endorse it unqualifiedly as entirely fair to the police of America—which endorsement I sincerely believe you will uphold. The San Francisco police have seen it and laud it as an intelligent revelation of the conditions with which the police have to cope.

"I take this means of thanking Norma Talmadge, Frank Lloyd, her director, and Joseph M. Schenck, producer, for the splendid compliment paid to police officers in eliminating from the screen version of 'Within the Law' some of the exaggerated barbarisms, relics of a past period of police methods, which the stage play originally called for.

"It is the criminal who keeps within the law who is hardest to trap, and whose apprehension sometimes requires the extreme methods shown in the Norma Talmadge film. Police officers of all ranks risk and give their lives every day, not merely to pursue crime, but to prevent it.

"I hope you will all take occasion to see this impressive picture and that you will lend your communication to it."

Although the picture is not scheduled for release by First National for another week, a special set of the films was shipped to San Francisco for the showing.

Following are the telegrams:

"Miss Talmadge, Have seen 'Within the Law' and congratulate you on the wonderful triumph and handling of emotional scenes. Your 'Mary Turner' was a gripping, vital portrayal."

"Frank Lloyd: 'Within the Law,' was shown to myself and Police Commissioners, and we unanimously proclaimed it the greatest dramatic production we have ever seen. It is a wonderful tribute to your ability as a director, and to the fine playing of your cast."

Chief O'Brien's telegram to Mr. Schenck thanks the producer for eliminating on his on his recommendation scenes which would show police methods now said to be obsolete. obsolete.

TENDENCIES TERSELY TOLD

If King Tut only knew how many press agents are boosting his fame, he'd probably be inspired to utter the objection: "Tut tut," if he has any modesty left in his mummified self. Many are using his name in films and those who are not are using that name in publicity. No doubt they will keep at it until the public will be forced to cry out imploringly a most resounding "tut tut."

Anyone who thinks the "original story" is on the high road to coming back has only to read the almost daily lists of recent purchases of stories by prominent producers. Successful and unsuccessful stage plays and novels constitute the very big bulk of the current acquisitions of film-makers and the buying of an "original" is a rare event.

Now it is predicted that farce comedy will have its vogue on the screen. Several producers are preparing screen plays of this type. Thus far farce comedy never has been able to dominate the silver sheet situation, but it is said the public has manifested an unmistakable desire to have more occasion for merriment.

Popular demand for more photoplays is causing the studios to increase production. All present conditions in the motion picture industry seem to be wholesome. So, if you're worrying, don't.

There is a dearth in character men due to the unprecedented demand for their services in pictures nowadays. If the supply of character men cannot be made sufficient by adding recruits from the stage, why not give the character women a chance?

If the price of materials entering into the work of making motion pictures should be increased, as is predicted by some eastern journals, it is not likely that the admission prices to theatres will be raised. On the contrary, there is every indication of these prices being lowered in spite of any further soaring of raw-stock prices. Meanwhile, however, the country is entitled to some explanation from Washington, D. C., as to the reason for the apparent helplessness of the government in the matter of cutting the high cost of living with anything like reassuring rapidity.

JAZZ AND TORRENCE

Jazz and more jazz, excitement, music, dancing—all of these form the component parts of opening scenes for Jerome Storm's Paramount Picture "Children of Jazz," in which are featured Theodore Kosloff, Ricardo Cortez, Eileen Percy and Robert Cain. Beulah Marie Dix adapted the Harold Brighouse play and Ralph Block is production editor. Very shortly the company will go to an island location for some important sequences.

The recent announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, of the engagement of Ernest Torrence for a group of Paramount pictures, has caused much interest in film circles. Since James Cruze's production "The Covered Wagon," reached the screen, Torrence has been the recipient of innumerable congratulations for his work as "Bill Jackson." The first picture announced under the new arrangement is a production by George Melford of Emerson Hough's story "North of 36," in which will be featured Ernest Torrence, Jacqueline Logan and Noah Berry.

Chicago had its "Midway" and Seattle the "Paystreak"—both of them notable amusement thoroughfares. But "The Location" at the forthcoming Monroe Doctrine Centennial in Los Angeles, July 2-August 4, is certain to set a standard all its own. As the Motion Picture Industry of Southern California is fostering this exposition, it is appropriate that the highway of pleasure should take its name from studio terminology. This will be one of the unique features of the celebration that Southern California plans for the month when most people have their vacation. The picture "fans" are sure to find "the Location' 'akin to the land of their heart's desire, for all of the film producers have agreed to be represented there with such an array of exhibits as has never been assembled anywhere else before.

"Something different every day" is the program that the makers of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial in Los Angeles this summer, between July 2 and August 4, are working on. In addition to its historical aspect, the exposition is going to make a special appeal to the 20,000,000 motion-picture goers of the country, because all of the studios, their technical forces and actor folk are a unit in supporting the undertaking. While there have been film expositions in New York, Chicago and other points, none of them began to approach the scope of this project in Filmdom's own capital. Such a gathering of interesting people and in such numbers has never been held anywhere; and the studios have joined hands to put their best feet forward that the public may have an opportunity to get a closer glimpse of "what's what in the movies."

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1923

NEW ORLEANS' MARDI GRAS GENIUS WILL SUPPLY THE EXPO WITH PAGEANTRY

Floats which will excel in gorgeousness anything ever seen in the West are now being designed by the most famous expert in in the United States for the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, which opens in Los Angeles, July 2. Frank Cox, who for ten years had charge of the Mardi Gras parades in New Orleans, is the designing artist and technical director of construction and display of floats and pageants. He has in his charge not only the historical and symbolical floats, but the commercial floats as well. Thus artistic harmony is assured.

For more than twenty years Mr. Cox has been recognized as supreme in his special line of art. One of his first great successes was the National Peace Jubilee in Washington, D. C., in 1899, following the Spanish-American war, and from that time he has been almost continually engaged in civic or government pageants. During the World War he was employed in the National Liberty Loan campaign and at that time executed dramatic floats which added much to his brilliant record, for he has the highest dramatic and poetic gifts.

California lends itself to outdoor fiestas in a way that no other stage can boast and gives peculiar inspiration to the artist. Mr. Cox is now at work on designs for various counties that have requested him to submit drawings for approval. While cities and counties are at liberty to design and produce their own floats, there being no obligation placed on them by the exposition management, most of the entrants are desirous of employing Mr. Cox. As there will be displayed every evening on the great stage of the coliseum many original floats the aggregate for the five weeks of the exposition will tax the originality and ingenuity of the artist.

Plans for the historical revue are well under way and they promise pageants of the most wonderful magnitude and most beautiful conception. Hundreds of actors and actresses will be mobilized for this part of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial celebration.

Work on the Spanish-Colonial city, which will house the exposition is progressing rapidly. A number of the exhibition bungalows are nearly finished and they give promise of the most unique and most picturesque setting.

KANE TELLS CUBA 1923 WILL BE BIG YEAR

Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, carried the gospel of motion picture prosperity to Cuba on his recent southern trip. With Arthur S. Kane, Jr., he deserted the beaches and golf courses of Florida long enough to go over to Havana for a few days and there he was feted in a manner becoming an American magnate.

Mr. Kane and his son were met at the dock by a party including Rafael Martinez Ybor, Instructor of Consuls; Henry Weiner, General manager of United Artists Corporation in Cuba; Roderick Ross, of Chicago, and Paul de Outo, Cuban manager for Universal.

Under the heading, "Sport Writer is Movie Magnate," the Havana Telegram said: "An interesting figure among the recent arrivals in the capital city is Arthur S. Kane, head of the New York film organization which bears his name, and of Associated Exhibitors. Through these organizations the releases of pictures starring such screen celebrities as Charlie Ray, of rural role fame, and Harold Lloyd, the goggled comedian, are handled.

"Mr. Kane is authority for the statement that the motion picture enterprise as a whole enjoyed its most prosperous year in 1922, with every indication pointing toward even greater success during the present season. Over 700 feature films were released last year—a record for the industry.

"Charlie Ray now has in course of production a film which will carry the title, 'The Courtship of Miles Standish,' over half a million dollars will be spent in making this picture, the most elaborate of any in which the master of rural interpretation has appeared.

The Havana Post published an interview in which Mr. Kane spoke enthusiastically of the possibilities of successful picture production in Cuba

CONSTANT THRILLS FOR CONSTANCE IN YOSEMITE

Yellowstone National Park, the famed wonders of which draw thousands of beauty seekers from over the world each year, has been worked into the setting of "Dulcy," the latest comedy which Constance Talmadge is making for Joseph M. Schenck Productions.

Miss Talmadge and her company spent a week shooting the inspiring scenic splendors of the park as part of a honeymoon trip called for by the script. One of the most magnificent settings ever caught by a camera is said to be that in which Miss Talmadge, as "Dulcy," stands at the brink of the "Bridal Falls" on the verge of making a leap into its swirling descent.

The trip, which was made with Director Sidney Franklin in charge, was reported to be one of mixed delight and discomfort, due to freakish weather conditions. From hour to hour the members of Connie's troupe could not tell whether they would have sunshine, rain, snow or clouds. On one day the filming was interrupted by three different storms. Each time that the members started back to their quarters the sun came out and Franklin ordered them back to work, only to have the weather change again.

Miss Talmadge suffered somewhat from the flooding of her tent by rain when the company left the hotel for location in a remote part of the park.

An unusual engineering feat was accomplished by the technical staff. The falls were supposed to represent Niagara. In order to increase the volume of the Yosemite waterfall the flow from some of the rain-swollen streams nearby were temporarily diverted. Permission to do this was secured from Park authorities.

GEORGE LARKIN TO STAR IN NEW RUSSELL FILM

Russell Productions, Inc., are to present George Larkin as the star in another feature story, temporarily titled, "The Valley of Unrest." This will be the seventh picture in which the company has given Larkin the stellar role. Actual filming of the picture will start this week under the personal direction of Bernard D. Russell, an official of the company, who reports that his pictures starring Larkin are proving popular with state rights buyers.

PLAYCRAFTERS TO TRY NOVEL PLAN

The usual Monday night meeting of The Playcrafters had at the last session, April 23, the unusual feature of hearing L. M. Buell of the University of California. Southern Branch, give a talk on aspects of Greek drama and its influence on modern productions. The speaker proved himself entirely familiar with the history of the stage, and made many interesting comparisons between the old plays and those of today.

The second half of the evening was given over to the reading of Gemma Houston's one-act sketch, entitled, "The Cloak of Dreams." Criticism followed, for the most part favorable. However, good as the manuscript was as a literary product, the listeners disagreed on its acting possibilities. One of the first principles this organization supports is that a play must have enough conflict, mental or otherwise, to take it beyond the narrative stage into the dramatic.

A previous play by Mrs. Houston, "The Devil Was Sick," is being put on in the East by The Threshold Players.

On May 16 The Playcrafters take a new step in the way of a workshop theatre. Once a month an evening's program of members' work will be put on—either a full-length drama, or four or five one-act plays. Each writer is to sponsor his own production,. secure the actors and direct the rehearsals. The organization will then vote on which numbers are the most suitable for public presentation. In this way many weak points will be eliminated.

Anyone interested in drama construction may visit the Club, which meets each Monday evening at The Denishawn Studios, 932 South Grand Avenue. Two one-act plays are to be passed on at the next session.

ASSISTANT DIRECTORS AT FOX WIN PROMOTION

Promotions are in order at the William Fox studios! During the past few days two assistant directors, William Wellman and James Flood, have been elevated to the ranks of directors. Wellman will direct the Dustin Farnum pictures, while Flood will wield the megaphone for William Russell features.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Ince Buys Big Drama

Thomas H. Ince has purchased screen rights to "Ann Christie," Eugene O'Neill's big drama which had a sensational run in New York City last year and was awarded the 1922 Pulitzer prize for the drama of the year which would most advance the cause of American literature. Bradley King of the Ince writing staff is at work on the screen adaptation which will go into production shortly under direction of John Griffith Wray. Mr. Ince personally will supervise the screening of the "special" which he is planning to make one of the biggest features of his fall releasing program.

Title for Novel Chosen

"The Cloak of Morality" is the title which has been chosen for a new novel on which Talbot Mundy, well known author, and Bradley King of the Ince writing staff, are collaborating. The story, which later will be adapted for an Ince screen special by Miss King, deals with the modern code of morals from an unusual angle and a certain famous American "reformer" who convicted himself of hypocrisy is the "villain" of the tale. Mundy and Miss King have just completed work on "The Devil's Own," a novel dealing with the power of the American press, which is being published by the Bobbs-Merrill company. Miss King has adapted it for the screen under the title, "Her Reputation."

Ray With Technicolor

Ray Rennahan, well-known cinematographer, is again with the Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, now at the National studios on Lodi street. Rennahan recently returned from the east, and was re-engaged by Technicolor before his return. He was with them nine months last year.

Arrived From Boston

C. A. Willat, J. A. Ball, Ray Rennahan and staff have arrived from Boston and are now established at the National studios. They are handling the Hollywood business of the Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, and will engage in commercial color photography, and produce a feature in colors in the near future.

Ince Has New "Find"

Thomas H. Ince has made a new screen "find." Lucile Rickson, a fourteen-year-old beauty who plays an interesting character "bit" in Mrs. Wallace Reid's anti-narcotic film, "Human Wreckage," has signed a three-year contract with Mr. Ince. Her first appearance under the Ince banner probably will be in "Country Lanes and City Pavements," the big "special" featuring Madge Bellamy which will be directed by Mr. Ince in person. Production work on the new feature will begin as soon as Miss Bellamy returns from her cross country "camera tour." In the meantime Miss Rickson has been loaned to Marshall Neilan to play a part in "The Rendezvous."

Elephantine Appetite

Two hundred and eighty-three pounds of lump sugar were consumed by "Oscar," the elephant star in Thomas H. Ince's screen novelty, "Soul of the Beast," during his engagement with the Ince film company. Oscar had his fits of temperament like every other screen celebrity and unless a five-pound a day sugar lump ration was forthcoming at frequent intervals he went on strike. Sugar kept him in good temper until Madge Bellamy, who stars with him in the novel production, fed him some ice-cream. Oscar thereafter required a dish of ice-cream hourly until his work hours were over. The picture will be released shortly by Metro Pictures corporation.

Ralph Gets Facetious

"Yes, I'd like to be a leading man, and I probably will be soon—leading a horse around the studio." This wise crack from Ralph Cloninger, who by the way is one of those furthest from such a calamity. He is playing a big part in Dustin Farnum's "The Twins of Suffering Creek" at the Fox Studios.

Otto's Past Revealed

Otto Matiesen, who recently finished the part of Phillipe de Vilmorin in Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche," is best remembered for his interpretations of Ibsen, Shakespeare and Washington Irving. He is a Dane by birth and has played before many of the crowned heads of Europe as well as most of the prominent people of this country.

Mickey Was There

Yep, Mickey was there in all his glory! Young Mr. McBan was an important factor in the presentation of the thirteen Baby Stars at the Wampas Frolic, and was accorded a very appropriate introduction by Fred Niblo, master of ceremonies.

Returns From Show-fest

Shannon Day, who left the Ziegfeld Follies in the lurch when she turned her attention to the flickering celluloid, has just returned from New York where she went to visit her mother after a three years' absence. While in the eastern metropolis she reviewed every stage play in town, and we'd advise anyone who wants the "low down" on what's what there to consult her, as she's all fed up on musical comedy, "mellerdramer," etc.

Welsh Still Free-lancer

Contrary to the general impression Niles Welch, well known screen leading man, is not under contract to Universal. The report that Welch had signed on the dotted line to appear exclusively in Universal productions has arisen no doubt due to the fact that the actor has been working steadily for that company for the past few months, playing leads in "What Wives Want," "Sawdust" and others. While he is still facing the grinding camera at Universal City, Niles Welch states that he is his own boss and a free-lance player. He is now finishing up on a picture of circus life being directed by Jack Conway.

The More the Merrier!

Hollywood reports an influx of noted New York character actors to the films. First Holbrook Blinn signed to play with Mary Pickford; then Emmett Corrigan was signed by Marshall Neilan, and then Jane Murfin brought Harry Mestayer across the continent for an important part in the screen adaptation of her play, "The Sign," which is now being filmed at the Ince Studios.

Actress Burned

Martha Franklin, playing the role of Mme. Vinard, in Richard Walton Tully's all-star production of "Trilby," was painfully, though not seriously burned during the taking of a scene this week. She was carrying a plum pudding covered with flaming alcohol on to the set and the liquid ran over on her hand and arm. Undaunted, however, she continued her work.

Jackie Saunders Back

Jackie Saunders, who recently returned from the East after a successful vaudeville tour, is now with the Rellimeo Company, playing one of the principal parts in an all-star picture, "The Man Behind," a special feature being made at the Universal studio under the direction of Louis Wm. Chaudet from the pen of Grace M. Sanderson. Others in the cast are Monte Blue, Irene Rich, Russell Simpson, Tully Marshall and James Gordon.

Welsh Has Hobby of His Own

Golfing or tennis hold no lure for Niles Welch, popular screen actor who is now playing one of the leading roles in the Universal production, "Sawdust." Niles' hobby is raising old English bull dogs, and in the back of his home he has a kennel of these champion canines and a showcase full of blue ribbons and cups.

Wants to Build an Asylum

Wm. P. S. Earle, directer and producer who is now at work on the screen version of the novel "Tutankhamen," says that one of his pet ambitions is to endow an asylum with padded cells for directors who have gone crazy trying to make the movies perfect enough to satisfy all the various types of theatregoers in the country. It's quite a job, according to Director Earle.

Speed Boat Christened "Bebe"

During the filming of scenes for her latest Paramount picture, "The Exciters," Bebe Daniels was called upon, for the first time in her life, to drive a speed boat. It so happened that Bebe was the favorite picture star of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Steadman Wheeler of Boston, who were wintering at their Miami Beach home, and they insisted that she use their 150-horsepower speed boat, "Live Wire," in the picture. Since meeting Miss Daniels personally the Wheelers decided to rechristen the boat "Bebe." The rechristening took place at Miami Beach and as a tribute to Florida, grape juice was substituted for ante-prohibition wine.

Ince Directs Dalton

Ralph Ince has begun production of a new picture starring Dorothy Dalton at the Paramount Long Island studio. It is a French story adapted by J Clarkson Miller from the play, "Leah Kleschna," by C. M. McLellan. Miss Dalton will have the support of James Rennie, Alphonse Ethier, Walter Percival, Frederick Lewis and others who have not yet been selected.

Estelle Taylor Busy

Estelle Taylor, who has the feminine lead in Richard Thomas' current production, "Other Men's Money," has been cast in C. B. DeMille's "Ten Commandments," which will go into production immediately after Miss Taylor concludes her engagement with Mr. Thomas, or about May 8th.

Worsley Going Abroad?

Wallace Worsley, who is directing "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" for Universal, is planning to take a company abroad for two years for the filming of four feature stories. At any rate, this is the report received from his press agent so you can believe it or not. The announcement further states that the company will "film dramatic, historical features for theatres, schools, churches and the home."

RUPERT JULIAN IS THROUGH AT U, REPORT

According to announcement, Rupert Julian has terminated his contract with Universal.

The noted director of "Merry Go Round" left that company April 25th, on the fulfillment of his agreement.

Julian has completed the editing and titling of the Viennese spectacle, after fifteen weeks of hard work at this task. The picture has been reduced to ten reels from over 200,000 feet of film.

When interviewed, Julian said that he had under consideration a number of offers from film producing companies, including one from Universal, but that he would make no decision for the present.

"My engagement with Universal was a most pleasant one," said Julian. "The treatment accorded me by Mr. Laemmle and other studio executives was wonderful, and I hope I have repaid them by producing a picture that will be a big success, both artistically and financially.

"The taking over of 'Merry Go Round' was a tremendous task. I have been at work on the picture more than six months, and I think I deserve a short rest. Several of the leading companies have approached me with offers and Universal has made me an excellent proposition to remain with them. But I shall make no decision for a few days. Universal has assured me that the negative of 'Merry Go Round' will receive proper care in the cutting of it in New York, so I shall not make the trip east to supervise the work."

Julian, who began his film career with Universal more than ten years ago, has made more than sixty feature productions, several of which have grossed more than $800,000, and one, "The Kaiser, The Beast of Berlin," more than two millions. He has been rated as one of the few directors able to consistently make financial successes. Julian retired from motion pictures in 1920, but was persuaded to return to Universal last fall to take over the "Merry Go Round."

MORANTE TO BE STARRED IN NEW COMEDY SERIES

Milburn Morante, who co-starred with Gale Henry and Billy Franey in the old "Joker" comedies produced a number of years ago by Universal, has again entered the comedy field, this time as the featured player in a series of two-reel situation comedies to be made at the Russell studios under the direction of Tom Gibson. Eddie Barry and Olga Gordon have been engaged, among a number of others, to appear in his support.

"KIPPS" GETS THERE IN AMERICA IN TWO CLIPS

George K. Arthur, who for two years was starred in feature films produced by Stoll Films, Inc., in London, England, and who is one of several artists from England to recently enter film work in Hollywood, has hung up a record which is going to be hard for some of our "home talent" to beat.

George K., who became widely known as "Kipps" throughout England and other foreign countries where his pictures were exhibited, finished his contract with Stoll Films last January and owing to the inclement weather, heavy fogs and rains, which prevail in his native land during the first few months of the year, young Arthur decided it would be a great time for him to make a trip to Southern California, a trip he had eagerly looked forward to for some time. In Southern California, he figured, he would spend a few weeks basking in the warmth and sunshine, he would give American film production methods the twice around and then, after an enjoyable vacation, would return to England to resume his screen activities.

Fate, however, played her hand in a manner quite agreeable to the actor!

Two days after becoming a resident of Hollywood young Arthur stepped over to the Fox studios. Here, he thought, he could gain admittance to the studios and gather data on how pictures are made in this country. Like all other visitors, however, he was denied permission to enter the plant. He had expected that Hollywood studios were like English studios in some respects, at least, that they would allow people to go through the studio. As he retraced his steps toward the street he heard someone talking to the casting director.

"Perhaps I can get a studio pass from Mr. Casting Director," said young Arthur to himself. As he approached, the c. d., who had been closely observing the youth, said, "You're just the fellow I can use in one of our pictures. Come with me, please."

Young Arthur had not been given a chance to ask for the pass ,the c. d. apparently taking for granted that the actor was seeking employment.

Failing to disclose the purpose of his visit to the studios, young Arthur accepted a part which the casting director offered him in Shirley Mason's latest feature, "The Eleventh Hour," thereby scoring his first record —only two days in Hollywood and given a part in a motion picture.

After his work in the Fox picture was completed Arthur was assigned the juvenile lead, the role of "Lem" in "Hollywood," which Lasky is producing under the direction of James Cruze.

And now, with the actor a resident of Hollywood for only eight weeks, he has scored his greatest record—P. A. Powers of the R.-C. studios has given him a contract which calls for his services as the star in a new series of stories, dealing with small-town life, which the company is to produce. Work on the first story is to commence shortly, as soon as a suitable vehicle has been found.

One of George K. Arthur's greatest friends in Hollywood film colony is Charlie Chaplin, whom he met when the comedian was in England recently. In presenting young Arthur with a photograph of himself, Chaplin inscribed thereon, "To George K. Arthur. One of the greatest assets to an actor is personality. You have it." Coming from so great an actor as Chaplin, young Arthur values the photograph highly.

Having met with success in pictures here within such a remarkably short time, Arthur has established his permanent residence in a bungalow in the Hollywood foothills, declaring he has found this country superior in many ways to his native land and hopes to remain here indefinitely.

He has already had his English bride, Milba K. Lloyd, transported to Hollywood, and she, too, is actively engaged in film work here, serving as sculptress at the Lasky studios.

LOUISE FAZENDA CAST IN STAHL FILM, "THE WANTERS"

Louise Fazenda, the famous comedy queen, has been added to the all-star cast of the John M. Stahl special, "The Wanters," now under production at the Louis B. Mayer studios for First National. The role is said to be especially adapted to Miss Fazenda's unique kind of fun making. The comedienne's most recent work was in "Main Street," where she enacts the role of Bea Sorenson, Swedish maid. She finished work recently as a factory girl in "The Fog," a Max Graf production for Metro.

ROY DEL RUTH FINISHES NEW COMEDY FOR SENNETT

Roy Del Ruth has completed "Skylarking," an all-star Mack Sennett comedy to be released through Pathe, which was started under the working title, "Mud Pies and Puddles." The cast includes Harry Gribbons, Alberta Vaughn, Kewpie Morgan, Lila Leslie, Josephine Adair, Jack William Lucas and Teddy.

Del Ruth started today on another comedy production in which Harry Gribbon is to play a featured role.

GOLDWYN GETS BIG COSMOPOLITAN OUTPUT

According to telegraphic advice from New York to the Goldwyn Studios, fifteen pictures produced by Cosmopolitan Productions will be placed on the market next season by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, in connection with the Goldwyn output.

This announcement follows that of the merger for distribution recently consummated by William Randolph Hearst and F. J. Godsol. The pictures include "Enemies of Women," by Vicente Blasco Ibenez, now enjoying a successful run at the Central Theatre in New York, and at the Rialto Theatre in Los Angeles, with a cast including Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens. The picture was directed by Alan Crosland.

Following this will be Marion Davies in "Little Old New York," written by Rita Johnson Young and directed by Sidney Olcott; "The Daughter of Mother McGinn," by Jack Boyle, directed by Frances Marion and George Hill; "Unseeing Eyes," by Arthur Stringer, directed by E. H. Griffith, with Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen; "Under the Red Robe," by Stanley Weyman, directed by Alan Crosland, with Robert B. Mantell, John Charles Thomas and Alma Rubens.

Also included in the schedule are Marion Davies in "Ysolde," by Charles Major; "The Flaming Forest," by James Oliver Curwood; "Alias the Lone Wolf," by Louis Joseph Vance, with Bert Lytell; "The Temptress," by Vicente Blasco Ibenez; "The Country Beyond," by James Oliver Curwood; "Vendetta," by Marie Corelli; "A Gentleman of France," by Stanley Weyman, with Bert Lytell; Marion Davies in "Alice of Old Vincennes," by Maurice Thompson; "The Helmet of Navarre," by Bertha Runkle, with Bert Lytell; and "The Garden of Peril," by Cynthia Stockley.

"ALAN" IS POPULAR NAME IN JACKIE COOGAN CAST

This is a tale of the three Alans! Despite the title, it does not concern a vaudeville act, but merely states that three young men who bear the proud name of Alan are prominent in Jackie Coogan's support for "Long Live the King." There is Alan Forrest as Nikky, the Lieutenant of the Royal Guards and Jackie's own aid de camp; Alan Hale, who will play bluff King Karl (no relation to the equally bluff King Cole), and Alan Sears who will play the role of the American boy's father in this Mary Roberts Rinehart story.

From U to You

By BEN WESTLAND

Laura LaPlante has been cast for her third leading feminine role in support of the popular Hoot Gibson at Universal City.

The latest Gibson feature in which Miss LaPlante appears is "Out of Luck," an original story of a cowboy who joins the navy, by Edward Sedgwick, who is directing the picture.

Other plays in which Miss LaPlante appeared with Gibson were "Dead Game" and "Shootin' for Love," both typical western features of the type that has made Gibson so popular with the motion picture public.

Her latest appearance before the camera was made in support of Roy Stewart in "Burning Words," a story of the Northwest Mounted Police.

Miss LaPlante is one of the most popular of the younger screen actresses and was chosen by the "Wampas" as one of the thirteen baby stars for the coming 1923 season.

Production has just been completed at Universal City on "Burning Words," a story of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, starring Roy Stewart. The picture was directed by Stuart Paton.

"Burning Words" was written especially for Stewart by Harrison Warren Jacobs and formed the vehicle for Stewart's first appearance as a star in a feature production under his new starring contract with Universal. Previous to his new contract he was starred in chapter plays and two-reel westerns, and cast in all-star pictures.

Supporting him in the cast were Laura LaPlante, Harold Goodwin, Edith Yorke, Alfred Fisher, Noble Johnson, William Welsh, Harry Carter and George McDaniels.

The world's youngest film star has "arrived." She's not quite four years old yet—but she's now a "great big star," with one of the best known directors in filmland. She won it all through clever acting.

This is the news from Universal City, with the announcement that Baby Peggy is to make her debut in a big feature play. Baby Peggy's comedies have been famous for some time. Her "Jack, the Giant Killer" and others have made her the best known baby in the world.

Wherefore Carl Laemmle has decided that she is a star of the first magnitude. Raymond L. Schrock, scenario editor at Universal City and King Baggot, famous actor and director, are now engaged on the story in which she is to play, and King Baggot, himself, will direct the offering, to be released as a Universal-Jewel photoplay. The title has not been announced yet. A big cast of well-known "grown-up" actors and actresses will support the diminutive star in a seven or eight reel elaborate special.

Jack Hoxie, veteran cowboy and trick rider of the screen, has ridden, roped and shot his way through his first starring feature for Universal, "Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande," a story of the great southwestern cattle country.

The story was adapted to the screen from a magazine story by Stephens Chalmers and was directed by George E. Marshall, who will also direct Hoxie in his next Universal western feature, "Where Is this West," an original story by George C. Hull.

Hoxie has been signed by Universal to do a series of feature productions built around the western cattle country. In the Hoxie unit at Universal City are a dozen grizzled veterans who have ridden the range from the Mexican border to Alberta, old friends of the cowboy screen star, some of whom knew him when he was just a youngster on his dad's cattle ranch in Oklahoma. They lend realistic atmosphere to his productions.

Clarence L. Brown has been signed by the Universal Pictures Corporation.

Brown directed "The Light in the Dark," and other notable screen successes and is regarded as an artist of firm standing. His contract with Universal calls for the making of four productions of unusual calibre.

The first of these will be "The Acquittal," Rita Weiman's famous stage play which has been a sensation in New York and is just now opening a run in London which is expected to rival its success in New York.

Priscilla Dean, star of "Under Two Flags," "The Flame of Life," and "White Tiger," one of the foremost emotional actresses of the film day, will star in "The Acquittal." For the supporting cast Brown is conferring with Fred Datig, casting director at Universal City, in the selection of players of proven ability. The role of the woman in "The Acquittal" is as intensely dramatic as anything Miss Dean has played and should afford her an excellent opportunity.

"The Acquittal" tells the story of a man twice tried and finally acquitted on a charge of murdering his benefactor, but whose guilt is discovered by his wife and a newspaper man who, to uncover the facts, secreted his own sister in the defendant's home as a maid. All the roles are strongly dramatic.

Jules Furthman, a scenario writer of high standing and an ex-newspaper man himself, is adapting the story to the screen. Some of his previous adaptations were "The Queen of Sheba," "Victory," and "Treasure Island," three outstanding pictures.

William Welsh, veteran character actor of the screen, last week presented Hollywood with five reasons why he appears so much at home in the role of a family man.

The reasons: Mrs. Welsh, Mary, Bessie, Marjorie and Gloria, his wife and four daughters, who have, until recently, made their home in New York City.

Welsh has been playing character leads for Universal for twelve years, but he played the greatest role of his screen career the other morning at the breakfast table as a real dad in his own home.

Two of his daughters, Mary and Bessie, have appeared in pictures and after they become established in their new home, expect to continue in work before the camera.

Welsh is the oldest character actor, in point of service, with the Universal company. He was a member of the old Imp company that was first organized by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal.

His biggest roles have been as the character lead in "Traffic in Souls," "Reputation," "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," Father Neptune in "Neptune's Daughter," and the father in "Over the Hill."

ELMO LINCOLN SIGNED FOR "THE RENDEZVOUS"

Elmo Lincoln, famous strong man of the movies, whose characterization of brutal types has won him the distinction of being the most cordially hated character actor in picture, has been engaged by Marshall Neilan to appear in one of the leading parts in "The Rendezvous," soon to be started.

In the forthcoming Neilan production at the Goldwyn studio, Lincoln will portray the villainous Russian, a "heavy" in every sense of the word. Lincoln's characterization in this film is expected to prove one of the various sensations promised in the visualization of the tragic romance by Madelaine Ruthven.

The engagement of Lincoln follows on the heels of Mr. Neilan's selection of Conrad Nagel, who is coming on from New York to play the leading role. Other players of equal fame are now under consideration for the different parts and the cast will be completed within the next few days.

The film will mark a departure for Neilan in that it is entirely different from any story he has picturized in the past. Work on the sets is now under way and actual shooting will be started within the next week at the Goldwyn Studio.

NIBLO WILL PERFORM FOR LETTER CARRIERS

Fred Niblo will be one of the interlocutors in the minstrel first part, which will be one of the features of the Musical Revue, to be staged by the Letter Carriers' Band at the Philharmonic Auditorium, for three nights, beginning May 8th. Jack Daugherty, Hollywood screen actor, will alternate with Mr. Niblo.

According to Joseph C. Fallon, manager of the band, rehearsals for the revue are progressing nicely and Monte Collins, Jr., under whose direction the revue is being staged, promises a full evening of enjoyment.

An added attraction will be an "old timer's number," presented by Monte Collins, Sr., and in which a large number of old time favorites will take part.

VETERANS ARE RUNNING AMBASSADOR'S THEATRE

The Ambassador Hotel Theatre under the management of "Uncle Bill" Haas, formerly of the Strand in Pasadena for a number of years, has been climbing up from day to day and week to week. Old "Bill" scratches his head quite often in securing one complete change of pictures every night of the week. He says 365 pictures are "a plenty" for any one year and he has to make it 366 next year. Only pre-views from recognized producers are shown occasionally, all of the Thomas H. Ince productions being shown and a number of the First National and Universal pictures. George Hayes is the organist and Harold I. Huff is propectionist. Both are about as old as "Bill" in the business.

FIRST NATIONAL WILL RETAIN "BLACK OXEN"

Denial is made at the studio office of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., that the company is negotiating the sale of the screen rights to Gertrude Atherton's widely discussed novel, "Black Oxen."

A report to the effect that the company was to sell the story at a profit of $100,000 was denied this week by John McCormick, Western Representative, who admitted, however, that an offer had been made by a certain producer who asked for the privilege of purchasing the film rights at a price $100,000 more than was paid.

McCormick stated he was aware that in "Black Oxen," First National had the biggest possibility of the coming season, but said that under no consideration would his company sell the rights to produce it.

COURTENAY STAGE HIT TO BE FILMED

John W. McDermott, former director of Universal, Fox and Christie comedies, has been engaged by First National to direct a picturization of "Her Temporary Husband," the famous farcical comedy stage success in which William Courtenay is now starring in the East.

"Her Temporary Husband," is to be the fourth in a series of stage and book successes which are to be filmed at the United Studios, under the production counselship of Richard Walton Tully.

The play which is from the pen of Edward A. Paulton, has been adapted to the screen by F. McGrew Willis. As a stage production it ran in New York for three months and since then has been played in most of the big cities in the East. It is acclaimed the best stage farce since "Are You a Mason?"

McDermott, who will handle the directorial reins during the production of "Her Temporary Husband," is looked upon as one of the foremost directors in the comedy field.

He has been in the motion picture field for ten years, first coming into the profession as an actor. He played both comedy and dramatic roles with the old Kalem and the Universal companies and then he engaged in directing.

He is the author of a hundred or more original film stories, many of which he directed personally. During the last year he wrote more than a score of "originals," the most notable of which were "The Mollycoddle," a Universal picture and "Just Pals," a Fox production.

WINS APPOINTMENT ON ARTHUR JACOB'S STAFF

According to announcement made last night by Arthur H. Jacobs, producer of Frank Borzage Productions, Mary O'Hara, well known scenarist, has been added to his staff and will commence immediately adapting the next Borzage picture.

Miss O'Hara has just completed "The Merry Go Round," and was previously identified with Metro, more recently having written the scenario for Rex Ingram's, "The Prisoner of Zenda," and Laurette Taylor's, "Peg O' My Heart," in addition to writing scripts for many other notable picture plays.

Miss O'Hara's initial work for Frank Borzage Productions will be the adaptation of "Dust in the Doorway," recently published in McClure's Magazine. Borzage starts casting this new story next week at the United Studios where Miss O'Hara will also make her headquarters. This vehicle is to have an all-star cast ,with several of the best known plays of the screen in the principal roles.

THIS SHOULD INTEREST FILM SCANDAL-MONGERS!

Believe it or not, it's the truth!

Jack Lloyd, comedian with the Educational-Mermaid organization, hasn't smoked, taken a drink, or used a cuss-word for the past three years!

Members of the Mermaid organization marvelled at this display of virtue and wondered what the reason was, and last week the reason came out.

It was in the person of Miss Irene Vernon, twenty-two-year-old New York stage beauty, who for the past three years has been Mrs. Jack Lloyd. On her arrival in Los Angeles the Lloyds revealed their marital bliss.

They met while both were members of the cast of "The Flirting Princess" in New York about four years ago, and after a few months, eloped to Jersey City and were secretly married. Lloyd entered pictures, made good with Vitagraph, and came to California, where he joined the Mermaid organization. But not a word did he tell of his bride in New York. Mrs. Lloyd continued in musical comedy in New York, appearing in "See Saw," "Chu Chin Chow" and other productions under the direction of Henry Savage and Flo Ziegfeld.

PRISCILLA DEAN BUSY WITH NEW HOME DUTIES

Fans who like to think of their screen favorites as being thoroughly domesticated and fond of the normal pleasures of life would surely enjoy seeing Priscilla Dean these days.

Miss Dean finished "Drifting," her latest Universal-Jewel vehicle, about seven weeks ago. Since that time she has been the busiest housewife in Southern California. Having just built one of the most beautiful homes in the exclusive section of Beverly Hills, a big colonial type house on an acre-and-a-half lot with swimming pool, tennis court and all other delights of a permanent home, she has been spending the last seven weeks in learning how to get the most out of a home on twenty-four hours a day.

In a few weeks though she'll end this quiet domesticity and return to work before the camera at Universal City as the star of "The Acquittal," the famous stage play written by Rita Weiman, for which Universal paid a record price and which will be one of the most unusual productions of that company for the coming year. Clarence L. Brown will direct her.

Screenland Moves to N. Y.

Screenland Magazine has moved its office to New York City and is leaving John Cornyn, formerly its advertising representative in Los Angeles, as western advertising representative, with offices at 5540 Hollywood Boulevard.

UNIVERSAL RELIEVED BY CAPTURE OF FUGITIVE

Now that Clara Phillips has been spotted by the eagle eye of the law and her liberty considerably reduced by the introduction of iron bars into the decoration scheme, Universal City breathes more freely.

Not that Universal City has ever feared the hammer murderess because of any threats or acts on her part.

But about eight hundred and seventy-nine times, more or less, on the spectacular mob sets of Lon Chaney's starring vehicle, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," Clara has been found. Occasionally, being a democratic soul, she has allowed herself to be located on other sets, but because of the great number of extras on the "Notre Dame" sets that has been her favorite hiding place.

The discovery of some extra girl in the mob of hundreds who happened to bear a physical likeness to the missing "heavy" of "The Day's News" has occurred so many times at Universal City that even the sheriff's office fails to get a morning smile out of it. Now that Honduras has been definitely identified on the map as Clara's present home, one exciting detail of an interesting life has been lost.

GLADYS BROCKWELL CAST IN BABY PEGGY FEATURE

The statement of Universal officials that Baby Peggy is to be supported by an all-star cast in her new Universal-Jewel production, took definite form this week in the announcement that Gladys Brockwell has been signed for one of the important roles in the production. Miss Brockwell has just completed an important role as the mother of Esmeralda, the gypsy girl, in the Universal super-Jewel production, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

The play in which Baby Peggy will star was written jointly by King Baggot, who will direct, and Raymond L. Schrock, head of the Universal scenario department.

The cast will include some of the most prominent players of the screen.

Special Dances For Film

Ernest Belcher, "the ballet master of the cinema," just completed the arranging and staging of a number of dance scenes for Edwin Carewe's First National production of "The Girl of the Golden West." The Berlin Polka, the heel and toe polka, the schottische, and other dances prevailing in the '49 period were revived by Belcher for this production. To the tunes of swaying polka music more than fifty players danced before the camera in those favorite steps of long ago. A special number for J. Warren Kerrigan and Sylvia Breamer, two of the leads in the picture, was created by the ballet master.

CALNAY TO GIVE SCREEN NEW FACES

James Calnay, author and producer of "Why Do We Live?" the seven-reel problem picture soon to be completed, is introducing several stage celebrities in the principal parts of his new production and all are entirely new to the screen.

"The public is constantly asking for new faces," said Mr. Calnay, "and successful producers must heed the public demand. Although we number six popular screen celebrities among the leading characters of 'Why Do We Live?' we also have several equally prominent stage players in the picture who are making their screen debut in this production. We are confident, however, that shortly after our picture is released their names will become as popular as if they had been on the screen for years.

"Madge Holmes, who recently arrived here from her Russian stage tour, is playing one of the character leads, while Frances Cole, the heretofore popular vaudeville dancer, is playing the ingenue character opposite Don Armando, the Spanish nobleman. Madge Holmes is one of the most beautiful and talented actresses who ever came to America from across the sea, and her career on the screen is bound to be a success, while Frances Cole needs no introduction because her wholesome beauty and cleverness have made her popular with American vaudeville audiences everywhere, and will no doubt win her the love of the movie fans as well."

The male performers recruited from the stage, as was previously mentioned, are Don Armando and Arthur Beckman, both with long lists of previous successes to their credit.

SCREEN "VAMP" PURSUES HIGH CLASS LITERATURE

Madeline Hurlock, playing a vampire with Ben Turpin in his new Mack Sennett comedy satire, "Pitfalls of a Big City," prefers the writings of Conrad, Tourgenief, Tolstoy, Hauptman, and Cabbell to popular fiction and magazines. Away from the studio Madeline is seldom seen in public. She prefers reading and studying.

Duncan Starts Work at U

According to the Universal production schedule, William Duncan and his co-star, Edith Johnson, will begin serial work there April 30th. "The Steel Trail" is to be the first chapter play produced by Duncan under his recently signed contract with U. The star is to direct his own pictures.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Hank Mann has signed to play one of the comedy roles in "Lights Out" for F. B. O.

Patsy O'Byrne has finished her work in support of Stan Laurel at the Hal Roach studios.

Floyce Brown, Katherine Bates and Mabel Shoulders are working at the Fox studios in support of William Russell.

Jimmy Horne finishing "Blow Your Own Horn," with Warner Baxter, Ralph Lewis, Derelys Perdue and others, at Powers lot.

Fred DeSilva has been signed by Vitagraph to appear in support of William Duncan and Larry Semon in their respective pictures.

Ethan Allen has been signed by Charles R. Seeling to play "Doc Benton" in "The Rider of Devil's-Hoof," starring Big Boy Williams.

Margaret Landis is Harry Carey's leading woman in his latest production for F. B. O., "The Miracle Baby," being filmed under the direction of Val Paul.

Eleven tons of cement tiling were made at the Metro studio for the flooring of the castles and chateaux in Rex Ingram's production of "Scaramouche" for Metro.

Otto Matiesen, practically a newcomer to the screen, has been selected to play the part of Philippe de Vilmorin in "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's production for Metro.

Edward Everett Horton has been cast as Vincent Platt in "The Sign," a Trimble Murfin Production, which is being directed by Mrs. Murfin and Justin H. McCloskey.

George O'Hara has finished "When Gale Meets Hurricane," and has now begun "Judy's Punch," twelfth of the Witwer "Fighting Blood" series in which he is starring.

George K. Arthur, better known in England as "Kipps," has signed with F. B. O. to play leading roles. He is at present engaged in "Hollywood" at the Lasky studio.

Al. Murphy, who plays "Andy Gump" in the new Gump Comedies at Universal City, has an idea. He wants to play "Andy at Universal City," and have Andy meet Priscilla Dean, Virginia Valli, Mary Philbin, Reginald Denny and the rest of the stars. If he puts it over he'll have the biggest all-star cast ever seen in a comedy.

Julia Brown scored such a great hit in a recent "Our Gang" comedy that she was re-engaged last week by Director Bob MacGowan for a part in the latest picture of the series.

Al. Santell has begun work as director for F. B. O under terms of his new contract. The first production, "Lights Out," by Paul Dickey and Mann Page, has a moving picture studio background.

Duke R. Lee, who plays "George Washington" in "Daniel Boone," being filmed at Unversal City, is at work on a scenario. Lee has been engaged on his story for some time. It is a big Western tale.

"Happy" Arthur, portrayer of comedy characters, has been cast in Capt. Leslie Peacock's latest production, which entered filming last week at the Horkheimer (formerly Balboa) studios in Long Beach.

Harry Lamont, well-known character actor, has completed a six week's vaudeville engagement in and around San Francisco on the T and D circuit and has returned to Hollywood to resume his activity before the camera.

Pretty little Josephine Adair has been re-engaged by F. Richard Jones, supervising director of Mack Sennett productions, to play a little boy part in the new Sennett all-star comedy to be directed by Roy Del Ruth, with an all-star cast.

Willis Goldbeck, who wrote the continuity for Rex Ingram's production of "Scaramouche" for Metro, is one of the latest discoveries of the Metro director. Mr. Goldbeck was formerly Mr. Ingram's personal publicity representative.

Music hath charms to speed a wild serial. So Ruth Royce, one of the principals in "Daniel Boone," being filmed at Universal City, opines. She has a small portable phonograph, and plays it "on location" with the Daniel Boone company.

Carrie Clarke Ward, who probably has played more character roles than any other woman in motion pictures, is the Mme. Benoit in "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's newest Metro production. J. Edwin Brown, also a skilled character artist, was cast for the part of her husband, M. Benoit, in the same picture.

Rex Ingram did not know when he selected them for the cast that they are related. J. Edwin Brown is the twin brother of Sedley Brown, Miss Ward's husband in real life.

Emory Johnson, creator of F. B. O.'s "The Third Alarm" and "Westbound Limited," is receiving congratulations upon the birth of a daughter. Mrs. Johnson, who is professionally known as Ella Hall, is doing well. They have two other children, both boys.

Ashley Cooper has returned from San Francisco where he played the character part of Bill Meade in "A Pair of Hellions," a Saturday Evening Post story. The production was made at the Pacific studios, San Mateo. Mr. Cooper reports great activity at this studio.

Malcolm McGregor, Metro featured player, is to judge the diving contests to be held at the Ambassador Hotel swimming pool, during the last week in April. Mr. McGregor formerly held the Metropolitan diving championship and was also a member of the Yale swimming team for two years.

Edward Sloman who is to direct "The Eagle's Feather," the first of six all-star specials to be made by Metro during the coming season, handled the megaphone for two of the Jack London stories filmed by Metro several years ago. They were "Burning Daylight" and "The Mutiny of the Elsinore."

Marvel, well-known vaudeville dancer, whose Spanish dance is one of the high lights of "In Old Madrid," Clara Kimball Young's newest Metro starring picture, is said to closely resemble Rodolph Valentino. While in Theodore Kosloff's company Marvel's dancing partner was Natatcha Rambova, Valentino's present wife.

Gerald Beaumont, noted author, whose magazine stories are to be filmed at Universal City, has returned after a motor trip to Oakland to bring back his family. Beaumont, on his arrival, was so charmed with Los Angeles that he closed his home in Piedmont and has taken a bungalow here.

In line with the announcement made by him recently that no expense would be spared on the production of his new Pathe comedies, Mack Sennett is having built for a sequence of scenes in the new Ben Turpin comedy "Pitfalls of a Big City," one of the most elaborate modern interiors ever conceived. It is of semi-futuristic design, with enough silk and satin drapes, batiks, pillows, and tapestries to delight the heart of a Fifth Avenue debutante.

Victor Saville, a leading producer and distributor of England, has been a visitor at the Metro studios during the past week. Mr. Saville has been especially interested in Rex Ingram's production of "Scaramouche." He will return to England next week and with him will go Betty Compson, who is to be starred in his next picture to be made abroad.

Fred Stanton, well-known actor of the legitimate stage, and better known for his character portrayals on the screen, has been engaged by Mack Sennett to play the "heavy" in "Pitfalls of a Big City," in which Ben Turpin is being featured. This is the comedy which is now under filming as a sequel to the just completed Turpin satire, "Where Is My Wandering Boy This Evening."

Margaretta Curry, who played in "Climbing" at the Majestic Theater recently when that production was given its first performance on any stage in Los Angeles, has been cast for a prominent part in the new Mack Sennett all-star comedy with Harry Gribbon, Billy Bevan, Alberta Vaughn and Kewpie Morgan. The comedy will be directed by Roy Del Ruth. At the present time its title is "Number 115."

Real cavalrymen eclipse actors any day for army scenes—because their riding is less spectacular. So says Edward Sedgwick, who directed Hoot Gibson in "Pure Grit," adapted from Gene Markey's "Blinky." A border cavalry troop furnishes thrills galore. "Their riding is all the more remarkable because it's done as routine," says the director. "Maybe I'm prejudiced, because I love the army so—but in this case I think the film bears me out."

Julia Gordon Here

One more screen player has wended her way westward—Julia Swayne Gordon, has arrived in Hollywood to play a part in Rex Ingram's production of "Scaramouche" for Metro. During all the time Miss Gordon has been identified with motion pictures, which covers a period of many years dating back to the early Vitagraph days, this is her first trip to California.

Youngster Forging Ahead

Dorothy Seay has been engaged by the Rockett Film company to portray the role of Lincoln's step-sister in its latest feature production, "The Life of Abraham Lincoln." This is the eleventh picture in which the youngster has appeared since coming to California eight months ago.

HEYL HEADS NEW COMEDY UNIT HERE

The field of comedy producing was this week invaded by a new organization to be known as the Forrest Film Manufacturing company. The new company, which is backed by well known eastern film men will specialize in the highest type of two-reel comedies according to Martin J. Heyl, who has come here to organize the production talent for making the fun films. It is understood the comedies will be distributed by Educational, and that plans are already under way to start production on a series of twelve of the comic cinemas.

The productions will be made both here and in the east. They will be made at the famous Betzwood studios near Philadelphia in the summer and this November the second series will be put into production here.

Heyl, who has opened headquarters at 6047½ Hollywood boulevard, states he expects to take a battery of directors, assistant directors, cameramen, technical advisors, gag and scenario writers east with him at an early date.

"Practically all the comedies have been made in the west for a long time," says Heyl, "And Los Angeles streets are familiar to every fun film fan. We plan to make our first comedies in Philadelphia and can run over to Atlantic City and other eastern seaboard resorts any time we want beach stuff.

"California is the ideal place to make films in winter and we will come back here next November, but we believe comedies made in the east will have an appeal to easterners. We expect to put out only the highest type of clean, wholesome mirth productions and have gone into this venture after studying the market carefully. All of our board of directors and officers are seasoned film executives, who see a ready outlet for more short reel offerings."

Lewis Likes Role

Ralph Lewis is highly pleased with his first role under his new starring contract with R.-C Pictures Corporation. In "Blow Your Own Horn" he has an opportunity of injecting a high class, dignified comedy touch with his characterization that gives him great satisfaction. "How well the actor can blend the humorous with the pathos is the crucial test of the artist's ability," said Lewis.

Players Engaged

J. Warren Kerrigan and Anna Q. Nilsson are among the players who have so far been engaged for the principal roles in the new Universal production, "Havoc," which Harry Garson will direct.

DON'T CRITICISE 'TUTANKHAMEN' FOR FALSE BEARDS

When "Tutankhamen," the screen version of the famous Pharoah and ancient Egypt, which is being produced by William P. S. Earle, is finally viewed on the screen the spectators are going to be greatly perplexed by the obviously false looking beards which many of the characters are adorned with. The spectators in fact would be quite apt to laugh, and properly so, if a certain fact were not clearly explained to them, for the chin whiskers worn by Sam de Grasse and other members of the cast are queer looking arrangements that somewhat resemble the affairs used by Dutch vaudeville comedians. The beards worn by the actors in "Tutankhamen" 'are not supposed to be real looking because if they were it would be a directorial blunder and not true to old Egyptian life and times. It seems that in the days when King Tut ruled the Nile country it was the custom for important men of state and church affairs to have not a set of whiskers but a variety of facial adornments that could be changed at will. On one day they would wear one set and on another day they would change to a new set according to the particular whim of the day. These beards were simply worn over the chin and made secure by cords which were tied behind the head. No effort was made to make them appear genuine and therefore Director Earle, in spite of the fact that he realized they would appear obviously false on the screen, ordered the actors to abide faithfully to the ancient custom even if it did seem a little odd to spectators of the film.

EDUCATORS TO AID IN STAGING EXPOSITION

To determine just what episodes shall be represented in the historical revue, which will be an integral part of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial, a commission of prominent westcoast educators has been selected. Their willingness to serve guarantees an accurate pageant which will graphically picture the successive steps in the making of America, from its discovery down to the present day.

Those who have agreed to serve on this educational commission are Dr. Rufus B. von KleinSmid, president of the University of Southern California; Dr. Ernest C. Moore, dean of the University of California, Southern Branch; Dr. J. A. Blaisdell, president of Pomona College; Dr. Remsen D. Bird, president of Occidental College; Dr. Ray L. Wilbur, president Leland Stanford, Jr., University; Dr. Amelia H. Reinhardt, president of Mills College; Dr. Tully Knowles, president of College of the Pacific; Dr. Harry N. Wright, Whittier College; Dr. Victor L. Dukes, University of Redlands; Arthur H. Fleming, California Institute of Technology; Mark Keppel, superintendent of Los Angeles County Schools; Mrs. Susan B. Dorsey, superintendent of schools, city of Los Angeles; Mrs. Martha Nelson McCan, president of Los Angeles Board of Park Commissioners.

At its first session, this commission found there is so much dramatic material in the history of the United States since 1492 that to reproduce anywhere near all of it would require more than a year and permit of a different pageant every day. As the Monroe Doctrine Centennial will last only thirty days, it means that merely the highlights can be presented, although the program will be changed daily.

The revue will be put together in such a manner that all who see it will have a comprehensive idea of the more important episodes in the story of their country's life in the last four hundred years. As the Monroe Doctrine Centennial is being put on under the auspices of the motion picture industry of Southern California, it has at its disposal all of the skilled directors, technicians and mimetic workers. No other group could undertake a project of this magnitude so fittingly. Wherefore it is certain that the historical revue will be carried out on the scale that it merits.

Several interesting outlines have already been presented for this phase of the big display which will be held in the new coliseum that has just been completed by Los Angeles in Exposition Park. When the educational commission has made its selection, the plan will be turned over to a pageant-master of national reputation; and he will be supplied with a small army of designers, artists, costume-makers and other workers to externalize the plans.

Because of this permanent record, members of the educational commission are taking more than ordinary interest in the historical revue, because they see in it another important aid to the teaching of American history. The schools—graded, high and collegiate—will find it a valuable supplement to the printed textbooks, wherefore special emphasis will be made to guarantee the accurate representation of each incident that is portrayed. In this way, Los Angeles hopes to make its forthcoming exposition render a service to the future.

BUSTER BLOSSOMS FORTH WITH A BIGGEST SET

It is a far cry from a custard pie to the Colosseum of Rome, but that, literally speaking, is the measure of progress made by Buster Keaton in his graduation from the two-reel slap-stick to the feature length comedy.

Instead of juggling custard pies and other venerable implements of the comedy man, Buster has a real Colosseum to play with in his "Three Ages," the initial six-reel comedy he is making for the Joseph M. Schenck Productions. Incidentally, the Colosseum is the largest set ever erected for a motion picture comedy, and, in general, is one of the largest ever built for a photoplay.

It is a replica of the Colosseum of Rome, which was 615 by 510 feet. A two-thirds circle, to scale, and rising to a height of 150 feet, the set was photographed internally and externally. It took 500,000 feet of lumber—30 carloads—3 tons of nails, 8 tons of plaster to build the frame. One hundred and fifty carpenters, 50 laborers and 20 painters furnished the labor. Twenty-five property men were required to "dress" the set.

The mammoth amphitheatre was used for the filming of much of the action in the Roman sequence of "Three Ages." The other two sequences are the prehistoric and modern.

Eddie Cline directed "Three Ages" and members of the cast are Margaret Leahy, Wallace Beery, Joe Roberts, Lillian Lawrence and Horace "Cupid" Morgan.

VARSITY CLASS SEE A KING IN FILM ACTION

History classes at the University of Southern California were adjourned recently by Dr. R. B. Von KleinSmid, president of the University, to permit the history students to watch the filming of a number of big scenes for "Richard the Lion-Hearted," which is being screened by Associated Authors at the Thomas H. Ince studios. Frank Woods, Elmer Harris, Thompson Buchanan and Clark Thomas were hosts to the students who were introduced to Wallace Beery, who is playing the title role of the production; Kathleen Clifford, Marguerite de la Motte, John Bowers and Tully Marshall. Dr. A. A. Woods, period expert, who did the research work for the big historical production, gave the students a short talk on the detail work required in preparation. University officials declared that a vivid lesson was impressed upon the students, through the courtesy of the producers, which never would be forgotten.

HINES IS APOSTLE OF AMERICAN "PEP"

A new film comedian has appeared on the horizon of stardom in Los Angeles. He is Johnny Hines, who has within the last two years hoisted himself from comparative obscurity to the enviable position of one of the movies' leading comedians.

Hines, who heretofore has confined his work to New York, has recently stepped to the fore in his production of "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" and "Sure Fire Flint." He has arrived on the coast to appear for the Warner Brothers in their production of George M. Cohan's play "Little Johnny Jones."

"When we purchased 'Little Johnny Jones' and 'George Washington, Jr.' from Cohan," says J. L. Warner, "the problem of finding an actor with the ability to put Cohan on the screen arose. About the time our search began to look futile, every critic in New York broke forth with two assertions that a comparatively unknown film star was 'The George M. Cohan of the movies,' so immediately our office there got busy and after viewing two of Johnny Hines' latest films, we agreed with them.

"He is certainly George M. Cohan minus the American flag. He is 'pep' itself. One of the first things he did upon arriving at the studio was to lay the rule down that no one was to sit down on any set where he was working and that only the chairs required in the set, which would be few, were to be there. According to Hines, this doesn't give anyone an opportunity to loaf and it keeps the speed up, and another thing, he refuses to work his people too long, as it is bound to show in the picture. From what we have seen of Hines, he is not only a George M. Cohan in action, but has just as many ideas as this famous stage producer."

M. NEILAN TO START NEW PRODUCTION THIS WEEK

Marshall Neilan will start his third production for Goldwyn the latter part of this week following the completion of "The Eternal Three," in which Hobart Bosworth, Claire Windsor and Raymond Griffith portray the principle characters.

Neilan's newest production, a picturization of Madelaine Ruthven's "The Rendezvous," will offer a dramatic Russian romance, a story unlike anything this director has produced in the past. Among the well known players engaged are Conrad Nagel, who has just arrived from New York to play the part, and Emmett Corrigan.

Franklin Quits Stage

Sidney Franklin has returned to Hollywood after fulfilling a 57 weeks' engagement with the "Abie's Irish Rose" company in the north and east. He rejected offers to play in several other Eastern cities so he might come back to the celluloid realm, and the work of which he is so fond. On his way home he paid a visit to the petrified forest in Arizona, but evidently nothing there could stump him for he continued on his homeward way after several glances at this unique spot.

TOURNEUR'S FIRST COMEDY READY IN 3 WEEKS

Maurice Tourneur's "The Brass Bottle" produced by M. F. Levee, is nearing completion at the United Studios and will be ready for First National distribution within the next three weeks.

This production marks Tourneur's initial comedy. The story by F. Anstey is being elaborated to spectacular proportions with thousands of dancing girls, slaves, eunuchs, elephants, camels and mules in fantastic scenes. The trials and tribulations of the young architect, following his acquisition of the mysterious brass bottle from which he releases the trouble-making Jinee are expected to offer many laughs.

The early part of the production will take one back to King Solomon's time and will be staged with all the splendor of the period. Barbara La Marr is the latest acquisition to the all-star cast and will portray the part of the vampish Princess who instigates the cause for all the troubles which follow the brass bottle through the ages. Others in the cast are Harry Myers, Ernest Torrence, Tully Marshall, Charlotte Merriam and Aggie Herring.

Another feature in this production is the appearance of Maurice Tourneur as a screen actor. This marks the director's first appearance in pictures since his acting days in France.

Helpful Resurrection

When Wilfred Lucas, the famous character man, who is playing the role of "the Laird" in the forthcoming Richard Walton Tully production of du Maurier's "Trilby," was assembling his costumes, he remembered some old suits of his own, which he long since had packed away in mothballs and saved, merely for the sake of "auld lang syne." These clothes, tailored for him in Ireland and Scotland, years ago, were resurrected and Lucas will be seen wearing his own apparel, which fits perfectly into the "Trilby" period.

Finishing Desmond's Latest

Big Bear, California, scene of some of Nature's greatest achievements in "scenic effects," is the location for the last few scenes of William Desmond's Universal vehicle, "McGuire of the Mounted," which Richard Stanton is directing. The Harrison Jacobs story is of the Northwest Mounted Police and the atmosphere is the big woods. Louise Lorraine, leading woman of many past features and serials at Universal City, is the chief feminine figure of "McGuire of the Mounted."

ENGLISH ARTISTS FLOCKING TO HOLLYWOOD

For the past few weeks Hollywood has been the center of an influx of actors, actresses and directors from the English stage and English film studios. They have been attracted to this city because of the great opportunity being offered at the present time to those who possess histrionic ability and who can successfully display their talents before the camera.

Among several artists of England who are now in Hollywood is Monte Moles, formerly one of the leading comedians on the London stage, who won wide recognition in European cities as a capable performer and a worth-while entertainer. Maurice Tourneur has cast him for the part of a London coster in his latest production, "The Brass Bottle," and several other engagements are open to him as soon as he finishes his work in this picture.

Higby in "Talisman"

Wilbur Higby, who will be remembered for his excellent work in all of Griffith's Triangle Productions has been engaged by Frank Woods for the important role of "DeVaux" in the production of "Talisman," now under way at the Ince studios. Mr. Higby has been on the stage and screen for 30 years and while playing the Mason Theatre here with the "Oh Look" comedy company, was signed by the Associated Authors. "Oh, Look" was playing New Orleans when Wilbur Higby received word to return to Hollywood and he started work at the studios the day after his arrival.

Kentucky Boy Busy

Arthur Trimble, six-year-old Kentucky boy star, has finished the first two of a series of two-reel comedies for his own company. Four additional stories have been purchased for his use, which are to be made by Director Jack Dawn, who produced Arthur's first two. The stories purchased are all by well-known short story writers.

WILL NIGH'S NEW FILM IS READY FOR PUBLIC

After four weeks of continual editing of Will Nigh's second special production for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, the feature has at last been cut down to exhibition length. The original footage was 90,000 feet. In its present form, excluding the sub-titles which Mr. Nigh himself is writing, the picture is in seven reels.

All trimmings have been cut out and from the flash of the first foot of film the action hits a fast pace which it maintains with increasing speed to the very end. No important scene has been omitted and it can safely be said the picture is as near to concentrated dramatic perfection as is humanly possible, the producer says. An outstanding feature of the production is the perfect registration of every star in the cast. Nigh has also succeeded in giving each important character predominance in his particular scene.

Tom Moore adds new laurels to his reputation as a light comedian in a versatile society part. Ann Forrest, who has rapidly been coming to the fore, works histrionic wonders, it is said. In the straight comedy line Tom Lewis comes out with flying colors as the burly, unconsciously funny "bon vivant." Harry T. Morey fills the serious sustaining role with his accustomed energy and reserve. Edmund Breese takes the father's part and Florence Billings, Shannon Day, John Goldsworthy and the two juveniles, Micky Bennett and Russell Griffin, round out the cast.

Andree Gets Kleig Eyes

Andree Lafayette, the girl with the sunny disposition and famous feet, suffered a slight attack of Kleig eyes, and has been forced to take a rest of a few days. There are very few scenes in "Trilby," the Richard Walton Tully production for First National, in which Miss Lafayette does not appear, and the constant grind in the blinding glare of the Kleigs, finally made necessary a few days of relaxation.

Loew Official Here

Lionel H. Keene, western representative of Loew's, Inc., arrived in Los Angeles yesterday on official business for his organization. He was accompanied by his wife, his mother, Mrs. Rosina M. Keene, of Baltimore, and his sister, Mrs. S. M. Strott, of Chicago. This is the first visit to this city of the executive's mother and sister and the party plans to remain here several days before leaving for San Francisco.

SYNTHETIC DIVORCE

the cleanly Lincoln Heights Jail is typical of modern penal institutions, and that if directors crave the good old days of rat and dirt infested cells they must join the ranks of the up-to-date highball hound, build oversized pockets on their trousers, and carry their own.

The philosopher who allowed that clothes didn't make the man may have been right. But, if screen standards are to be accepted, one's ornamentation goes a long way toward establishing him. Both director and players are in complete agreement on at least one belief—that the cut of a man's hair should should be absolutely in character no matter what else may be sacrificed in the interest of time or the actor's own personal preferences.

To prove that they are living up to this theory with a vengeance one has to note the recent sacrifices made for the sake of a head of hair. Bert Lytell, who submitted his wavy black locks to the blondine experts in order to become a yellow haired Rupert of Hentzau, is spendng his days endeavoring to regrow the wealth of thatch that once made him famous.

Lloyd Hughes spent approximately three months on vacation (but on pay) for the sole purpose of growing the long hair seen in "Scars of Jealousy."

But Kenneth Harlan, whose luxurious head of hair has caused so many feminine hearts to skip a beat, submitted to the most ignominious fate of all in the interest of art. He permitted barbaric clippers to mow his thatch to the common or garden variety of "dish hair cut" in order to lend color to his role in "April Showers." Fortunately, it is said that Kenneth will outgrow the role in a few weeks.

Directing the affairs of a rapidly growing organization from the seclusion of a jail cell is the unique distinction of Joseph Jackson, newly elected president of the Wampus, otherwise, The Western Motion Picture Advertisers.

For Jackson was the victim of one of the comedy stunts that usually are expected only on the screen. He was driving over a little used street in the outlying district of Los Angeles to keep a delayed appointment when he heard the motor of a car whose driver evidently was attempting to pass him.

The street was broad and there were no other machines in sight, so Jackson stepped on the gas. The driver behind was persistent. Jackson urged his machine a little faster.

In spite of the fact that the press agents' president was moving at a high speed (according to his own conservative admission) the pursuing machine drew up along side him. Then, to the chargin of Jackson, he recognized, not the triumphant face of a coworker, but that of an equally triumphant speed cop.

The judge who smiled at the recital of the case settled upon three days as a proper period in which, away from all earthly cares, he might consider the merits of a more leisurely pace.

Will the Pola and Charlie romance develop into a professional alliance only? At the moment of this writing intimates of the illustrious pair believe that such may be the case.

For Chaplin, who has completed his first directorial effort with Edna Purviance in the stellar role, is reported to have expressed a desire to show what he could do with Pola's undoubted, but as yet scarcely plumbed artistic, possibilities.

"The logical solution of their romance," said one close friend of the pair.

And, since the picture public probably would profit by it, why not?

The one and only Gibson of western fame has abandoned the galloping pinto for the galloping waves. He'll straddle the forward gun of the California, the greatest battleship of the Pacific fleet, and pipe all hands to the binnacle to see where he is going—in "Out of Luck," the picture upon which he has just started work at Universal City under Edward Sedgwick's direction.

LOW-DOWN ON HIGH-UP

A mop, a bucket of hot soapy water and a dirty floor.

A strange combination, indeed, to start anyone on the road to histrionic fame.

But it was such a combination that was the means of bringing Conway Tearle into the limelight as an actor.

This famed motion picture player told of his incongruous advent into the acting profession between camera "shots" at the United Studios, where he is appearing opposite Norma Talmadge in the First National production, "Ashes of Vengeance."

It was while Tearle was still in his teens. He had made more or less of a reputation as an amateur boxer and billiard player and he was then dividing his time between the squared ring in the Old Kent Road district of London and acting as billiard marker at the old Wyndham Hotel on the Strand.

To be a billiard marker meant that he had to be a player far above the average, for casual players who engaged in a game with the marker and won were not asked to pay for the games. Tearle was a profitable investment for the house for there were very few billiard players who came to Wyndham those days who could beat him.

"I guess I might still be chalking up the scores back in London if it were not for the mop and pail of water," the famous actor declared.

"On the day that I lost my job the janitor, who daily cleaned up the billiard room, was sick, or drunk—at any rate he didn't show up. The hotel proprietor ordered me to do his work, telling me to go down to the kitchen to get the neccessary paraphernalia so that I could mop up before the morning patrons began to arrive.

"Right then and there I renigged. I told him that mopping floor was just a little below my dignity. I refused to do it. He got peeved. And I got fired.

"Walking out of the hotel I ran into one of the patrons with whom I had often played. He was the stage manager of one of the big London theatres. I told him of the mop and pail incident and he instantly offered me a small part in a show, then in preparation. Naturally I accepted.

"After that I had no desire to go back to the old job.

"Later I had a good laugh on my old boss. Dressed in tall silk hat, morning coat, striped trousers—the habiliments of a London man-about-town—I strolled into the Wyndham billiard room.

"The proprietor was the personification of graciousness as he greeted me. But he didn't recognize me. I reminded him of the floor mopping episode and then, shaking hands with him, I thanked him for firing me.

"I considered that by kicking me out of the hotel he had done the best thing he ever could do for me."

Esther Ralston, popular Universal heroine of chapter plays and western features, will play the leading feminine role in "Thicker Than Water," Herbert Rawlinson's latest starring vehicle which is now being filmed at Universal City under the direction of Edmund Mortimer.

Miss Ralston's most recent appearancees before the camera were made in support of Willian Desmond in "The Phantom Fortune," a chapter play, with Hoot Gibson in "Blinky," a special feature built around the United States Cavalry.

"Thicker Than Water," was adapted to the screen by Charles Kenyon from Margaret Bryant's popular novel, "Richard."

Other well known players in the cast are David Torrance, Alfred Fisher, Lionel Belmore and Mike Donlin.

Cowboys, a Historical Curtain and a Definition

One by one the camp fires of the cowboys, the rugged cavaliers of the West, are flickering out. "Ma Pettingill's" boys, the roistering range riders of Owen Wister and Hough, are giving way as the mass of population creeps inland from the Pacific.

But the West of the cowboy days has not completely passed away. In a few spots it lingers in all its primitive colorfulness, with its habits and dress and manners unchanged.

The old West has found new converts in Norma Talmadge and the galaxy of film luminaries who are with her at the Mathewson Ranch, where they are filming scenes for her spectacular French historic drama, "Ashes of Vengeance," for First National.

Miss Talmadge and the big cast who accompanied her on location in charge of Director Frank Lloyd, have been delighted to discover a bit of this old West on the ranch where they are encamped fifty miles from Los Angeles. The owner of the ranch, who owns the biggest clock manufactory in the world, has two holdings of 15,000 and 70,000 acre extent.

Over the 15,000-acre Mathewson "front yard" the "Ashes of Vengeance" company, in their 16th century French costume, sweep and gallop in battle array, ambush their foe, abduct pretty women, make ardent love as Frank Lloyd directs and Tony Gaudio grinds his camera. And while they are a crowd of cow-punchers, in fleecy chaps and high Stetsons press around watching with wide-eyed interest.

To those who know that he has spent six months or more on some of his recent successes, it may come as a blow to know that in the early days of pictures Gasnier established a speed record for production, actually filming a complete picture a day for a year! It should be explained, however, that the pictures were of the length then in vogue, from two to three hundred feet in length, or about one-fifth the length of a single reel of a present day picture.

PEGGY BROWNE

JOHNNIE WALKER

John S. Robertson, the producer of "The Bright Shawl," a First National picture, in which Richard Barthelmess is being starred, has brought a touch of sentiment that will appeal to old theatregoers who remember the days of the glory of Daly's theatre in New York City. Memories of the stage are incomplete without some incident that bring back to the mind the great Augustín Daly, who will always be remembered as the great American drama producer.

The reminder of Daly's in the screen version of Joseph Hergesheimer's celebrated story, "The Bright Shawl," is the famous curtain, which, when hung in 1889, created a sensation throughout the entire world.

"We used this curtain in this production in the big theatre in Havana where the negroes held their famous ball annually," said Mr. Robertson.

Only one other curtain in New York City is as famous as the Daly curtain, and that one is now in the Metropolitan Opera House. In Judge Daly's life of his brother, Augustin, the curtain is described in this way:

"Daly's theatre was now (1889) enriched by a curtain embroidered in silk, representing the 'Crowning of Comedy,' by Garibaldi. The needlework was done in Milan under the direction of Garibaldi, who wrote: 'Never a piece of work like this was attempted before,' and added, 'What an undertaking! What a work! What a cost!'"

What are these things you've heard of so often in connection with motion pictures—drama, conflict, suspense, and surprise? Of course, any "fan" knows their general definitions, but that dealing with their peculiar use in motion picture entertainment isn't to be found in Webster.

The Palmer Photoplay Corporation, which is soon to release its first feature production, "Judgment of the Storm," believes that even a little knowledge of the technique of photoplay building contributes to the enjoyment of seeing good screen offerings, so the instructors of its educational department give the following definitions:

Drama is the structure or method of depicting emotion-provoking events most effectively. Stage and screen drama differ radically. Conflict, suspense and surprise are the greatest elements of drama. Conflict may be physical or mental, between two or more opposing human wills, or a struggle within one person. Suspense, based upon the principle that anticipation is greater than realization, builds a foreboding or uncertainty about the outcome of a situation, and surprise fittingly caps the climax of suspense by bringing an unsuspected outcome.

How many times have you said, "That plot's so illogical" when you meant "so absurd?" A plot may be perfectly logical if it is so constructed that one step of thought leads naturally to another, and yet the whole may be an utter absurdity. And did you know that "melodrama" originated from "melody-drama," an ancient form of musical comedy or tragedy?

The first of the Zane Grey productions for Paramount, directed by Victor Fleming, is scheduled to begin in the near future. It will be "To the Last Man" and was adapted by Doris Schroeder. The production editor is Lucien Hubbard. The latter, with Victor Fleming and Zane Grey, returned recently from Tonto Basin, Arizona, where the picture will be made in the original locale of the story. The cast and other features are to be announced shortly.

Noted Impressario To Rule Film Exposition

With the arrival of R. H. Burnside in Los Angeles Thursday, officials of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition pulled the bell cord for the "full speed ahead" signal.

Mr. Burnside will have charge of producing the historical revue, from July 2 to August 4. He has been producing head of the New York Hippodrome for the past eleven years, and his coming here insures the biggest show in the history of Los Angeles this summer.

The engagement of R. H. Burnside was officially announced at a luncheon given at the Biltmore in New York, just a week ago, by Charles H. Christie of the Christie Studios. The announcement aroused untold enthusiasm among Gotham newspapermen, trade journal representatives and motion picture producers, distributors and exhibitors. All pledged their unqualified support, and many indicated that they would come to the Pacific Coast for their vacations this summer, to attend the exposition.

Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Motion Pictures Owners of New York State and the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, promised co-operation on behalf of the 1300 exhibitors of the Empire State for Los Angeles' forthcoming motion picture exposition. They will all use trailers and slides to advertise the American Historical Revue; and the project is to be officially endorsed by the next state convention.

That the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, of which Will H. Hays is chief, is back of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial was made very plain by Cortland Smith. Garrett Graham outlined the plans that are now being worked out in Exposition Park, creating a large degree of enthusiasm in reporting the progress that has been made to date.

Ruth Roland, who has been making a swing around the circle in the interests of the exposition, told of widespread interest; and she also pledged the unqualified support of the active workers in the industry, from extras to stars. Other informative talks were made by Frederick H. Elliott and E. H. Allen.

The introduction of Mr. Burnside, as impresiario of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial, was the signal for an ovation. He promised the supreme achievement of his theatrical career, saying that this was just the sort of opportunity for which he had been looking for many years.

Mr. Burnside is to have full charge of producing the spectacular revue of American history that has been outlined by the commission of thirteen California college presidents and educators. It is to be put on in the largest way possible, because it will be the opening event in the new coliseum that seats 80,000. Mr. Burnside's handling of masses and getting big effects in the Hippodrome for the last ten years qualifies him better for this production than any other man in America.

"If anything further were needed to insure the success of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial," says President Walter J. Reynolds, "we have achieved it by enlisting the co-operation of R. H. Burnside. He is sure to give the people of Los Angeles and all who come here this summer the best entertainment of its sort that has ever been staged anywhere. In the minds of many, the mammoth spectacles that used to be put on by Imre Kiralfy have never been equalled; but I predict that they will be surpassed here this summer by Mr. Burnside. He will be given every possible facility to make the American Historical Revue the feature of the exposition."

World-Wide Survey Reveals Forthcoming Prosperity

It promises to be a big picture year—for the theater-goer.

The amusement seeker who leaves his admission fee at the box office during the coming twelve months will get more entertainment for his money than ever before in the history of the screen.

Such, in brief, is the optimistic forecast of B. P. Schulberg, independent film producer who has just completed a world wide survey of conditions involving the screen and those interested in it, either professionally or from the standpoint of the average theater-goer.

Mr. Schulberg has just returned to his Los Angeles studios after a five-week stay in New York, where he met Al Lichtman, head of the distributing forces of the producing body of which Schulberg is president. Mr. Lichtman has returned from a tour of Europe that included every important capital.

"The outstanding development of interest to theater-goers at large, is the fact that there will be an increase of approximately forty per cent in picture production this year," said Schulberg. "That means an opportunity for the exhibitors to select only the best for their audiences.

"Consequently, that will mean better pictures. Barring the isolated cases of bad judgment on the part of the theatre owner, which are not as frequent as one might expect, only the best pictures will be shown. The mediocre or actually bad film will die a natural death.

"Of course this situation will not add to the profits of the producer. But it will result in an immediate increase in the quality of productions made and that, in the long run, cannot help but prove beneficial to the screen, the producer and the public."

In answer to the oft-repeated query, "Why not write directly for the screen?" it may be said that this is the trend of the big producers on the West Coast. Writers who have learned screen technique and are ambitious to learn more of it—not simply the possessors of names that might be expected to possess a box office value—are moving toward the coast.

Larry Evans, whose keen dramatic sense and whimsical humor have endeared him to magazine and fiction readers in every English-speaking country, has joined the forces of Preferred Pictures and is enroute to Los Angeles, typewriter in hand.

Evans, incidentally, has turned the tables on every writing tradition. When he wrote "Are You A Failure?" his outstanding screen success, he prepared it first for the screen, then as a magazine story, and now has it under preparation for a New York stage production. That is to be his method of procedure in future plot writing.

"Any really successful screen story has the elements of the successful fiction story or stage production, while all successful stage productions and fiction stories cannot be translated into the language of the screen," says Evans. "Why not approach the writing business from this angle and address the picture, fiction reading and stage following public simultaneously?"

John Russell, author, explorer and war correspondent, has again joined the ranks of screen writers on the West Coast. After a year in New York, during which he aided in the picture production of his story, "Where The Pavement Ends," he has returned to Los Angeles under contract to write original stories for Fox.

Stuart Holmes, known to every screen fan since the first flicker of the original screen drama as a picture "bad man," is introducing himself all over again in a characterization as remarkable as any undertaken by Lon Chaney, recognized master of picture makeup.

In "Daughters of the Rich," Holmes has dropped his mask of wickedness and become a Russian Duke whose face promises to live in celluloid long after his true features are forgotten. Incidentally, Holmes has offered an explanation of his bizarre characterization as interesting as the role itself.

"I never have seen a Duke who looked or acted just as I have done," he said. "It may be that there is no such Duke and never has been one. But there are certain

A TRULY GREAT ACTOR

Arthur Edmund Carew, whose characterization of Svengali in Richard Walton Tully's production of "Trilby," stamps him as one of the greatest, most brilliant exponents of the silent drama of his time.

Pola, Her Third, and, Those of Lasky's Others

The start of Pola Negri's third American-made picture for Paramount, "The Spanish Dancer," is awaited with keen interest because of the undoubted magnitude of the production planned and the numbers of people and important scenes to be used. It will be a Herbert Brenon production and the latter is now in New York gathering data for the picture which is scheduled to start about June 1, at the Lasky studio. The scenario is the joint work of June Mathis (author of the screen version of "The Four Horsemen," and "Blood and Sand") and Beulah Marie Dix, and is an adaptation of "Don Caesar de Bazan" by Adolph D'Ennery and P. S. T. Dumenier.

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of Famous Players-Lasky, in his announcement of the production stressed the brilliancy and elaborateness of the forthcoming picture. The efforts put forth in the making of Miss Negri's two previous pictures. "Bella Donna" and "The Cheat' is a forecast of what will be done with "The Spanish Dancer" and inasmuch as it is a period picture with costuming an integral part of the quality which is so essential to a drama of this character; there will be great opportunity for beautiful effects. Unquestionably this will be one of the biggest pictures ever made by the organization, with splendid acting opportunities for the lovely star.

Big pictures, however, are the order of the day with Paramount. Take, for example, "Hollywood" which is now being completed by James Cruze, producer of "The Covered Wagon"—the greatest success in cinema history. "Hollywood" is a screen version of Frank Condon's short story and was adapted by Thomas J. Geraghty. In it will appear a galaxy of the best known star and leading people, though, oddly enough, the leading roles in the story are portrayed by screen 'unknown.' A dream sequence in this film is said to be one of the most elaborate ever made—a veritable Hippodrome show in itself. Walter Woods is production editor of this film.

Then there is "Salomy Jane" a George Melford production with a cast of featured players, Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett, and Maurice Flynn being named as the headliners. Waldemar Young adapted the story by Bret Harte and play by Paul Armstrong and it is being made in locations where the original story was laid, in Northern California. Here the days of the gold rush and thereabouts are being reinacted with startling fidelity.

To the Tonto Basin, Arizona, Victor Fleming has taken his company making "To the Last Man" first of the Zane Grey productions for Paramount. Featuring Richard Dix, Lois Wilson, Noah Berry, Robert Edeson and Frank Campeau, this picture promises to be one of the most powerful dramas of the open spaces since "The Covered Wagon." The tale of the deadly feud in an almost uncivilized region, it brings into play all the vital forces of life and nature, with unexcelled chances for strong dramatic action. Doris Schroeder adapted the story; Zane Grey is personally co-operating in its production and Lucien Hubbard is production editor.

Sam Woods has just completed—or virtually completed—a brilliant social drama, involving divorce and love and high society. It is called "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" and was adapted by Sada Cowan from the Charlton Andrews adaptation of Alfred Savior's French play. Gloria Swanson is the star and never has she had greater moments in a play, never a chance to appear in more exquisite garb, surrounded by every facility in sumptuous settings and costume effects. While a modern play it involves several costumic effects such as a big Egytian fete scene, etc., Julia Craeford Ivers is production editor.

"Children of Jazz" which Jerome Storm is directing, is another picture with a cast of featured players including Theodore Kosloff, dancer, artist, actor and writer; Ricardo Cortez, Eileen Percy and Robert Cain. Contrasting scenes between the young people and their exploits—today and yesterday—render this picture unique. It is an adaptation of a play by Harold Brighouse and the scenario is by Beulah Marie Dix.

Charles Maigne is producing "The Silent Partner" with Leatrice Joy, Owen Moore, Robert Edeson featured. Here is a story of modern life in New York, contrasting wealth and penury, having to do with the stock market and love—two qualities not always separate in human affairs. Ralph Block is production editor and the story is by Maximilian Foster, adapted by Sada Cowan.

For comedy relief, so to speak, Walter Hiers is doing "Fair Week" under the direc-

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

San Francisco, April 30.—J. Hesser Walraven, efficient publicity man with the Graf Productions, has been confined to his bed by illness for two weeks, but is so far recovered now as to be able to be back in the office again.

Ray Moore, well-known member of the Goldwyn forces, and Victor Seastrom, director, spent the week-end in San Francisco looking for possible locations to be used in the forthcoming production by Goldwyn of "Masters of Men."

The Belasco Productions of this city have sold the state release rights on their first picture "Her Accidental Husband," and the picture will be shown here at the Granada Theatre within the next few weeks, also at one of Los Angeles' leading theatres. The reports on the picture show most unusually successful showings all over the country.

Caesare Gravina has finished his part in Erich Von Stroheim's production of "Greed" from Frank Norris' great American classic, "McTeague," and left for Los Angeles last Thursday evening. Hughie Mack arrived this morning to join the company, and Mrs. J. E. Jewell and two children, who are to play the twins in the picture, came yesterday. Work on the production is making steady and most satisfactory progress, and it undoubtedly will be one of the really great pictures of the year.

Robert E. Bruce, of scenic fame, will arrive in San Francisco tomorrow to complete his arrangements for the making of some new scenics near here, and farther north.

Dan Mason has left New York and is enroute for San Francisco. From present indications, it looks as though Dan would be featured in a five-reel comedy drama, to be made at the Gerson studios here, before the new series of Plum Center Comedies is started.

The Fisher Production's picture, "Youth Triumphant," is making most satisfactory progress, and they expect to finish it about May 6.

Hugh Wiley, beloved of all Saturday Evening Post readers for his stories, left for Hollywood one day last week, for some business calls on some of the studios. Mr. Wiley says if all goes well, his "Wildcat" and "Lily, the Goat" will soon appear on the screen.

Al Christie, Vera Steadman and Neal Burns spent the week end in San Francisco on their way south from Westwood, a lumber camp in the mountains, where they have been doing location work for the next Christie Comedy.

John Stout, cameraman for the Famous-Faces," and Jimmie Howe, cameraman, had tried and flailed to get them a week ago. Players-Lasky company, and A. C. Cuttybach, an air pilot from the Varney Fying field at San Mateo, came to grief yesterday while trying to shoot some scenes of San Quentin prison from an airplane. The shots were to be used in "The Woman With Four So Stout came up on Saturday with Harold Schwartz, assistant director, to try his luck. Stout got the plane at Varney Flying field and flew up to San Quentin, and had flown over the prison several times, which is strictly against the rules, when, as they didn't heed the warnings of the guards, they fired on them. The plane wasn't hit, but was forced to come down in a nose dive in the soft earth of Baltimore Park, not far away. The plane was damaged, but both men escaped unhurt.

Two old friends met in San Francisco the other day who hadn't seen each other in years. Fanny Midgley, playing in Erich Von Stroheim's production of "Greed," and Flora Moore, of the "Pair of Hellions," cast, being shot by the Stereoscopic Productions. Their friendship dates back to the old days on the stage when Flora Moore was an ingenue and Fanny Miggley was playing child parts in the same company, so they had many old friends and old times to talk over.

The Kenmat Productions have decided to change the name of their first picture from "Crossed Wires," as announced last week, to "Tipped Off." The few friends who saw the private showing of the film the other morning were much pleased with it, and Harry McKenzie, head of the organization, will leave for New York with it next week to complete arrangements for release. The company has picture rights to a number of good stories, and expect to continue production on quite a large scale at the Pacific studios at San Mateo.

The Sterescopic Productions have finished the filming of "The Pair of Hellions," the picture is being titled and cut, and will soon be ready for release through the American Releasing Corporation.

Within Filmland's Inner Portals

Some motion picture artists have trouble getting engagements. With others it is a case of not being able to accept all offers. Virginia Brown Faire is among those in the latter class. Since starting work as the leading woman in the Universal feature, "The Sky-Line of Spruce," starring Bill Desmond, the actress has signed with two other producers to head the all-star cast in forthcoming productions, with arrangements being made to film these pictures one month apart. New plans have now been made that call for each picture entering production the same day. Consequently, Miss Faire will not be able to appear in both pictures, despite the fact that she has agreed to put in night work in order to play both roles.

Helen Ferguson, having returned from Fresno where, as a representative of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition, which is to be staged in Los Angeles beginning July 2nd, she was one of the principal speakers at the "Raisin Week" convention, is now assembling a new wardrobe for her work as the featured player in a new series of special productions to be made by George Perry, associated with Mae Murray productions, at the Goldwyn Studios in Culver City. Actual filming of the first story "The Unknown Purple," will start on May 14th.

After playing detective roles in thirty-six well known film productions, B. Wesley Borman, who has come to be recognized as a foremost portrayer of this type of role, the other day proved himself to be as efficient a detective in real life as he is on the screen. Three times within a week a new house the actor is building in Hollywood was broken into and electrical fixtures of great value were stolen. This not only proved annoying to him but easily as well so he decided to do a little sleuthing of a kind that has made him popular on the screen. After watching the house each night for two weeks Borman caught the robber band, consisting of three fellows, each of them is not over 21 years old. As a result of their capture the actor is to be fully reimbursed for the stolen fixtures and during the next 180 days the thieves will have ample time to determine the burglar trade pays for they have been sentenced to jail for this length of time.

MELBOURNE SPURR

Norma Talmadge, one of the most photographed women of the screen, recently remarked: "I have had thousands of photographs made, but there never have been such wonderful likenesses made of me as those just finished by Mr. Spurr."

Melbourne Spurr, whose Hollywood Studios are known to all filmdom, claims the rare distinction of having photographed every Motion Picture Star in the industry.

Little Mother Spurr, who acts as hostess to Melbourne's guests, is as well acquainted with the stars as is her son, and, while engaged in discussing the relative merits of different types of photography, she is remarkably conversant with all affairs of Filmland.

May Allison, who is coming back to the screen

Another comedian from the Mack Sennett fun factory is fast gaining fame in feature pictures. He is Garry O'Dell, who in the old Keystone days was starred by Sennett in two-reel comedies and who within recent years has been playing the comedy relief in feature productions. His latest engagement with Richard Thomas productions in whose latest picture, "Other Men's Money," he portrays the role of "Spike Louis," one of the principal supporting parts. It is a most exacting characterization and one that requiries the fullest utilizing of his histrionic ability.

Craig Ward, scion of a wealthy Boston family, who as the hero in Reginald Barker's "Heart's Aflame," starring Anna Q. Nilsson, scored a decided hit with his brilliant performance, and who is acquiring the same amount of popularity with motion picture devotees that he enjoyed with stage audiences while acting as leading man for Margaret Anglin in many New York successes, has recently received an offer to return to the "legit" but he [illegible]

Some Studio Storiettes

Several years ago—not so long, though, at that—Mabel Normand starred in a picture, made by Mack Sennett, which was titled "Mickey."

Shortly afterward, a noted songwriter penned a song, called it "Mickey," and dedicated it to Miss Normand because of her splendid work in the picture.

Now comes Peggy Browne, from New York, and because of the success she already has achieved, and that which seems to be in store for her, friends are wondering when a new "Peggy" song will appear on sale in the music stores.

Miss Browne has just finished an important part in "McGuire of the Mounted," starring William Desmond, which Richard Stanton directed for Universal.

Before coming to Hollywood, she appeared in a number of comedy productions in New York, but has decided that she likes dramatic work most, and is directing all of her efforts in that direction.

"Do those who decry the jazz music of today realize their efforts to stifle it would result virtually in turning humanity back to 16th century bigotory?" asks Norma Talmadge.

Jazz music is more than the music of a restless age—it is the expression of the American people, Miss Talmadge says. Any attempt by self-constituted moralists to stamp it out is a restriction of free expression, almost class legislation, she holds. Miss Talmadge draws a parallel between the attempts to censor jazz music today and the musical restrictions of France in 1572.

"In reading up on the historic background of France for my next costume drama, 'Ashes of Vengeance,' which is to be released by First National, I found there was no music for the common class," said Miss Talmadge. "There was only the music of the Church and the Nobility. There was no such 'music of the people,' as today finds expression in the so-called jazz. Jazz is the music of the people, and those sour critics who assail it can only succeed in driving freedom of expression back to the 16th century extinction. In this free country they are doomed to failure."

One girl wanted a husband.

One girl didn't want a husband but had to take one.

The first girl wanted a husband so bad that she kidnaps one.

The second girl wanted to lose a husband so she marries a sanitarium invalid with one foot in the grave and the other on a banana skin.

These two characters, whose views on matrimony are so diametrically opposed, are the heroines in two distinct pictures now in preparation at the United Studios for Associated First National release.

In the first picture, "The Huntress," the heroine is a white girl, brought up as an Indian, who kidnaps "her man," holds him on an island and then marries him before he knows what it is all about.

In the second picture, "Her Temporary Husband," the heroine, forced to marry within twenty-four hours to win a legacy, weds a man she thinks will live scarcely long enough to see the marriage ceremony through.

These bright plots are the basis of two of the most amusing mirth-provokers to be screened for many months.

After two years in England, Director Donald Crisp has returned to Los Angeles, where he will remain until about the middle of May. He has signed a new contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and will be back in New York in June to direct Elsie Ferguson in "Declasse," the recent stage success which will be made into a lavish Paramount picture at the Long Island studio.

At the London studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation which has now been closed, he directed "The Bonnie Brier Bush," "Appearances" and "The Princess of New York."

Mr. Crisp enjoys the enviable distinction of being present at Buckingham Palace for the private showing to the royal family of his picture "The Bonnie Brier Bush," the exteriors of which were filmed in the beautiful Scottish countryside.

Gilda Gray, one of Broadway's most famous dancers, who performs nightly in the Ziegfeld Follies and early every morning at the Rendez-vous, will be seen in her South Sea dance in Allen Dwan's production of "Lawful Larceny," which he is now producing at the Paramount Long Island Studio with Nita Naldi, Hope Hampton, Lew Cody and Conrad Nagel in the principal roles.

The interior of the Rendezvous cabaret, which is one of New York's celebrated dance club, was reproduced in the studio as a background for Miss Gray's dance.

LON CHANEY AND IRVING CUMMINGS GREET YOU

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, MAY 5, 1923

LEVEE IS ON BIG STUDIO DEAL

A big deal involving the United Studios is pending and some important news may be expected from this source in the near future.

M. C. Levee, president of the studio company and producer of Maurice Tourneur Productions, has gone to New York where he will confer with several prominent motion picture men on the forthcoming transaction, which it is whispered, will make the United plant a more important factor in motion picture production than ever before.

While in New York, Mr. Levee will also confer with officials of Associated First National Pictures on the distribution and exploitation arrangements for "The Brass Bottle," his newest Maurice Tourneur picturization just completed. This photoplay marks Tourneur's initial comedy and offers an all-star cast including Harry Myers, Ernest Torrence, Tully Marshall, Barbara LaMarr, Charlotte Merriam, Ford Sterling and others.

Construction work at the United Studio will continue under the direction of F. E. Pelton, who will be in charge of the plant in Mr. Levee's absence. The erection of new buildings and the paving of roads at this big "lot" are now nearing completion and within the next two weeks will be ready for several new producing companies now waiting to start work here. Upon its completion the United Studios will offer one of the finest and most modern plants of its kind in the world. Mr. Levee will remain in New York from ten days to two weeks.

PROGRESS OF MACK SENNET LOT

The production of a big feature, such as "The Extra Girl," in which Mack Sennett is starring Mabel Normand, and four comedy stories now being filmed by various all-star casts and directors, all under the general supervision of F. Richard Jones, is keeping the big stages of the Mack Sennett Studios constantly occupied.

New Murfin Film Started

Jane Murfin has begun production work on her play, "The Sign," at the Thomas H. Ince Studios. May Allison has been signed up for the leading role, the cast also including Ethel Shannon and Rockliffe Fellows. Miss Murfin will direct her own production.

"Shooting" in Pasadena

Director James H. Horne has taken his company, which is filming "Blow Your Own Horn," to Pasadena for exteriors of a mansion. Warner Baxter, Derelys Perdue and Ralph Lewis are the featured players in "Blow Your Own Horn." Joseph DuBray and Pierre Collings are at the cameras, and many of the scenes already taken are said to be marvelous.

OIL ATTRACTS STARS OF SCREEN

Fritzi Ridgeway, the popular young star of "The Old Homestead" and who has just completed her work in the "lead" of the Universal picture, "Seeing Red," has just become financially interested in the C. C. Stall Oil Association and she is so proud of her business sagacity that she wants to tell all of the other interest holders and their friends just how she chose the company from among the great numbers of promotions which are continually brought to her attention. On next Sunday afternoon she expects to meet the people interested in oil at the Stall lease on Easy Street, Santa Fe Springs.

Monty Banks, the clever young comedian who has risen to first rank during the last few years, will entertain the same afternoon with several stunts with which to surprise the visitors to the lease.

Eileen, Josie and Edward Sedgewick, the three who have each attained success, Josie and Eileen as stars of numerous plays and Edward as a director for Universal, will be at the lease to meet visitors and to help Director Roy H. Klumb choose types for his production centering around the oil fields for which the first scenes will be taken Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Klumb is an independent producer and has chosen the C. C. Stall lease on which to center the action of his oil drama. His company will include many well-known actors and actresses who will work before the visitors. Volunteers will be asked to assist in several scenes.

"Lights Out" Progresses

"Lights Out," a Rex Taylor adaptation of the Paul Dickey-Mann Page stage play, is progressing rapidly at the Powers studios under the direction of Al Santell. "Lights Out" is being filmed with an all-star cast including Ruth Stonehouse, Walter McGrail, Marie Astaire, Theodore von Eltz and Mabel Van Buren.

WHO'LL MATCH PAULINE'S RECORD?

A top-notch price of $100,000 has been paid by Thomas H. Ince for film rights to "Anna Christie," the outstanding stage success of the past year which is now playing in London where people and critics alike have proclaimed it the greatest American drama in years. It will be released through First National.

Active work on the tremendous task of translating this big drama to the screen already is under way. John Griffith Wray has been selected to direct the production, the screen adaptation for which is being written by Bradley King. The next big job will be the selection of the screen actress who will play the title role.

Pauline Lord ,who created the character for the stage, has won for herself the name of one of the great emotional actresses of the day by her fine performance. The lucky screen star cast for the role in the Ince production stands an equal opportunity of climbing to the heights for, as the critic of the London Daily Telegraph declared, after witnessing the premier of the stage play in England:

"The character drawing of Anna is a magnificent piece of work and it is a vehicle for a magnificent piece of action."

Eugene O'Neill, the author of the play, which was awarded the 1922 Pulitzer prize as the best American drama of the year, has won international fame. Maurice Bourgeois is translating "Anna Christie" for the Paris stage as a result of the London triumph of the drama.

FATHER DODD TO STAGE EVENT

From every indication the Hollywood Woman's Club Auditorium will be filled to capacity on the nights of May 10th and 11th when "A Night in Dreamland," a musical extravaganza, will be presented by Rev. Neal Dodd for the purpose of raising funds with which to construct a new church for the motion picture people, to be known as "the little church around the corner."

Inasmuch as the affair is being staged in behalf of members of the motion picture industry, actors, actresses, directors and others from the local film colony have pledged their full support to the show and are working with untiring efforts toward making it the most successful event of its kind that has ever been staged in Hollywood.

"A Night in Dreamland" is the work of Jay Wellington, author and producer of many successes, who has coached more local talent productions than any other producer in that line of work. It is estimated that he has trained more than fifty thousand persons for his latest show, which is to be presented with a local cast of seven hundred adults and children.

Hundreds of persons are being attracted each evening to the rehearsals, which are being held in the auto sales rooms of the Wright Auto Service Company at 6250 Hollywood Boulevard. Mr. Wellington has extended a cordial invitation to the readers of "Camera"! to attend these rehearsals.

It is estimated that the first night audience will be composed entirely of motion picture people. Many of the stars have purchased a generous number of tickets to the show, which have been priced at from one to two dollars. A handsome souvenir program has been prepared, in the center of which has been reserved a motion picture people's pictorial section. Space in this section has been purchased liberally by many of the most prominent artists in filmdom, including Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, allowing them to express in a fitting manner their interest in the church venture.

Nearly thirteen years ago Director Wellington made his initial bow professionally as leading man in Denman Thompson's drama entitled "Our New Minister."

Sadie Campbell is playing an important bit in a current Universal-Jewel, as yet unnamed. Miss Campbell is a favorite protege of Gus Edwards.

Tommy Wonder, five-year-old dance wizard, appeared at the Big Brothers Benefit, recently. He repeated his captivating dance which he gave at the Wampas Frolic.

Neva Lynn, the beautiful show girl from New York, who is creating a sensation by her work in Gorham Follies, surprised the Little Brothers party recently by dropping in on the 200 boys and giving a dance.

Edward Martindel is nearing the completion of his contract at the William Fox studios, where has was engaged to play the leading character role in "The Eleventh Hour." The picture has been three months in the making and is declared to be one of the screen's most auspicious presentations of the year.

Miss Winifred Greenwood, well-know actress of "American Film" fame, is to return to the screen after a two years' engagement on the stage. Miss Greenwood will be seen in Zane Greys' "To the Last Man," to be produced by Lasky.

Jack Cunningham, who adapted Emerson Hough's "The Covered Wagon" for the screen, has started work on the adaptation of Peter B. Kyne's novel, "The Light to Leeward," which will be Thomas Meighan's next Paramount picture. Irvin Willat, who has just completed "Fog Bound," a Paramount picture starring Dorothy Dalton, will direct Mr. Meighan in the new picture which will be titled "Homeward Bound."

Hope Hampton has been engaged by the Warner Brothers to play the leading role in the screen version of the David Belasco play, "The Gold Diggers," which will be directed by Harry Beaumont. Miss Hampton is expected to leave early next month for the Warner studios in Los Angeles following the completion of her role in "Lawful Larceny."

Perry N. Vekroff, one of the best known screen story authors and directors in the motion picture industry, has been engaged by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., to write a film version of "The Lord of Thundergate," Sydney Hershel Small's famous dramatic story of American and Japanese life.

Marie Prevost will, in all probability, be starred in "Broadway After Dark," to be made by the Warner Brothers.

Irene Rich will be the featured player in the Warner Brothers picturization of Kathleen Norris' novel, "Lucretia Lombard." The production will be made by Harry Rapf, the producer of "Brass."

The direction of "Little Johnny Jones," the screen adaptation of the George M. Cohan play featuring Johnny Hines, has been assigned to Arthur Rosson. Hines is at present on the west coast, and the supporting cast is being assembled at the Warner Brothers studios.

Edward Connolly, character actor who has attracted considerable attention for his interpretations in Rex Ingraham productions, has been engaged by Director George D. Baker for the part of the Antiquary in "The Magic Skin," which is to be produced by Achievement Film Corporation. The casting of the Carmelita Geraghty's drawing room in the Cosmopolitan film "The Daughter of Mother McGinn," furnished the scene the other day of an innovation in pictures when Director Hill turned over all the arrangements of the set, even to the placing of a tea wagon, to Colleen Moore, star of the production and Miss Geraghty. In addition the girls supervised all the costumes to be worn by the guests at a "tea fight," and put on the final O. K. before a shot was taken.

J. Grubb Alexander, well-known scenarist and author, has been engaged by the Universal scenario department to write the screen adaptation of "Red 'Lock.' "Red Lock" is one of the present day "best sellers" by David Anderson. The screen play will be used as a starring vehicle for William Desmond, popular western star and hero of many of Universal's most thrilling chapter plays.

Charles Lapworth, English representative of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has been brought from London to the Culver City Studios to act as special assistant to Victor Seastrom, the great Swedish director, in the making of Sir Hall Caine's "The Master of Man." Mr. Lapworth will advise on English customs and manners. He is a close friend of the author and had a long conference with him regarding the picturization of the novel just before he left London.

Goldwyn has signed Georges Calliga, well known as leading man in Paris and London, who will work in his first American picture at the Culver City studios.

Julius Stern, president of Century Comedies, has left for New York. David Bader, his West Coast press representative, accompanied him to take over the entire publicity department which will be handled from the East.

medium for Miss Beaumont's "re-debut" on the screen as she has been devoting the last seven years to her stage career and has only recently come to Hollywood to resume picture activities. Among devotees to the spoken drama she is known as the champion mother of the stage, her forte being the enacting of maternal roles.

George O'Hara expects to complete next week "Judy's Punch," twelfth of the Witwer "Fighting Blood" series in which he is starring. Mr. O'Hara in this vehicle encounters many vicissitudes, and also dons the boxing gloves for a thrilling fight with Larry McGrath, who has acted as referee in most of the pictures. "Judy's Punch" finishes the first series of the "Fighting Blood."

In order that every detail of dental professional routing might be absolutely correct, Erich von Stroheim added Dr. Henry Smulson, well-known San Francisco dentist, to his staff as technical advisor in the filming of "Greed," the Goldwyn apaptation of Frank Norris' classic of American literature, "McTeague."

Mike Donlin, famous baseball player and vaudeville star, has been assigned by Fred Datig, Universal casting director, to a role in "Thicker Than Water," Herbert Rawlinson's next starring vehicle. "Thicker Than Water" is a screen adaptation of Margaret Bryant's novel, "Richard," and is being filmed under the direction of Edmund Mortimer.

The London Quartet, famous musical organization from England, in the United States on a concert tour, visited Universal City during their stay in Los Angeles, to inspect the filming of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." Members of the party were H. Waldo Mann, Thomas Petrid, Warrick Evans and Arthur Beckwith. Their visit to California was the last lap of their tour of this country. They will also visit Australia.

Carl Miller cannot get away from the make-up box. In addition to the leading male role he is enacting in Chaplin's "Public Opinion" Mr. Miller has begun rehearsals for the lead in a Hollywood musical revue "Smile Again" which will be given at the Hollywood Woman's Club, May 17-18.

For the first time in his brilliant screen career, Lloyd Hughes has a most artistic toe dancer for a leading lady. She is Gene Feiner who is playing opposite to him in the Universal special production temporarily titled "Grandpop." Prior to making her debut into the film world Miss Feiner was a highly successful toe dancer but she has developed an unusual natural talent for the silent drama and will hereafter probably concentrate all of her professional energies on this line of work in preference to tersichore.

Production work on the Victor Fisher picture entitled "Youth Triumphant," is rapidly approaching final shots at the Hollywood Studios. Lucy Beaumont who has one of the principal roles in this picture, expects to finish within the next two weeks or in time to begin another picture for which she is already contracted. "Youth Triumphant" will serve as a picture, which is taken from Balzac's story "The Wild Ass's Skin," is progressing rapidly. Others already in leading roles are George Walsh, Carmel Myers and Bessie Love.

"This make-believe life is surely the most paradoxical life possible," remarks Frances Raymond, the popular screen artist. "Here I find the meanest man in the world is one of the best men I ever knew." Miss Raymond has reference to Bert Lytell, playing the title role in the picture version of George M. Cohan's stage success, "The Meanest Man in the World." She is portraying the character of his mother in the picture and has had exceedingly close-up views of his acting in this particular part. Likewise, the natural social affiliations of the engagement has afforded her an opportunity to become better acquainted with Mr. Lytell's genteel personality and highly polished manners. "And although I have been an actress for many years I cannot understand yet how such a nice gentleman can ever be mean, even make-believe," she adds.

LOGUE WILL WRITE FILM CONTINUITY FOR "PONJOLA"

Charles A. Logue, noted screen author and director, has been engaged to write the film continuity of Cynthia Stockley's "Ponjola," which is to be the second James Young production for First National.

Logue, in discussing this famous story of the Rhodesian gold fields, declares "Ponjola," to be the most powerful dramatic story of its type that has ever been written.

"In my many years as a scenario writer and director I have never read a story that provides such 'fool proof' film material as does this thrilling and exciting story.

Its theme is one that is entirely different from anything ever screened before and there are a number of dramatic situations in it that are entirely new."

Logue is especially fitted to handle the adaptation of this celebrated African story. He has made a deep study of the life and customs of that country and he can be depended upon to produce a screen play which will rank among the best of the year.

He has written more than 25 produced original motion picture stories and has adapted more than a score of famous book and stage successes. He also won fame as a director. Two of his most notable plays in which he handled the directorial reins were "The Tents of Allah," and "The Woman Who Fooled Herself."

BACK TO THE STAGE THE HOLUBARS MAY GO

Allen Holubar and Dorothy Phillips, First National producer and star respectively, who in private life are Mr. and Mrs. Holubar, are considering returning to the legitimate stage following the termination of their present motion picture contracts.

Holubar is contemplating the building of a magnificent theatre in Hollywood—the initial "speakie" playhouse in the film capitol—and if his present plans materialize both he and his charming wife will take part in at least one of the plays to be produced in the proposed theater.

At the present time the Holubars are vacationing in the California mountains. Shortly they will return to their Hollywood home to resume the grind of the work-a-day world.

Carmel Myers is in her last scenes of Earle's "King Tut-Ankh-Amen," which will be followed by her appearance in the coquette role of Baker's version of Balzac's "The Magic Skin."

HIS LIFE IS JUST ONE ROLE AFTER ANOTHER

There are lots and lots of actors in Hollywood who have none of that "between-pictures" ailment from which other thespians suffer, every once in a while.

One of these is Paul Weigel, character actor.

No sooner does Mr. Weigel finish in one production, it seems, than he is cast immediately for an important role in some other picture.

For instance, Mr. Weigel was engaged, several days ago, in portraying the part of Gloria Swanson's father in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," which Sam Woods directed for Famous Players-Lasky.

He had not finished with that part before William P. S. Earle had signed him for an important role in "Tut-ankh-amen," now nearing completion at the Hollywood Studios.

Mr. Weigel quit work in his part at Lasky's one evening, and the following morning had donned his make-up and reported for duty with Mr. Earle's organization. He has just finished work in this part also.

Does it pay to be popular as a character actor?
Just ask Mr. Weigel!

BABY DOUBLES FOR HIS BROTHER IN CAREY'S PLAY

One of the oddest incidents which has occurred in motion picture making happened during the filming of Harry Carey's latest F. B. O. production, "The Miracle Baby."

As the title suggests, a baby plays an important role in the picture. It happens that the child playing this part is one of a pair of twins. With his nurse he journeyed to Truckee where exteriors of the production were filmed. On the return to Hollywood with the company, the baby became ill, threatening to delay the completion of the picture. There was consternation on the lot until it was suggested that the twin brother be substituted for him in the interior scenes which were taken on the studio stage.

This is the first time that an actor's brother has been used as his double in a motion picture, and is an incident that will probably not be repeated at an early date.

Priceless Books Stolen

Pierre Collings, who is photographing "Blow Your Own Horn" for R-C, found on his return to his residence that he had been visited by a burglar. Many priceless books of photographic nature were stolen. Collings avers that they cannot be replaced in this country as they were procured in Germany and France when he made his tour of the world.

JACKIE LOSES PRIZED DOG; REWARD OFFERED

The town will be resounding this morning to cries of "Here, Butzie, Butzie!" if there is any potency in the lost and found columns of the daily papers, for this cry is not a part of a new game that the kids will be playing; it is the result of an advertisement inserted by Jack Coogan, Sr., to the effect that his son's pet police dog has wandered away from the dog run behind the Coogan domicile on South Oxford Avenue.

According to the advertisement, Butzie's right hind leg is bandaged, which should make him easy to identify. He is a full blooded police dog and very friendly, so that he will respond to his name when it is called by anyone. Here's a chance not only to secure a reward from Jackie's father, but also to win the young starlet's affection and thanks.

Tourneur on Vacation

Maurice Tourneur concluded the production of his newest picturization for M. C. Levee, "The Brass Bottle," and left this week for northern California where he will take a week's vacation. Immediately after the final "shot" was photographed, the director lost no time but snatched up his bags and departed for the north, leaving no forwarding address. He will return in time to supervise the final cutting and editing of the picture.

CHAS. MACK FORMS OWN PRODUCTION ORGANIZATION

Henry McCarty, who wrote and directed the entire series of Lester Cuneo westerns, produced during the year 1922, is to serve in a similar capacity for Charles Mack Productions, which company has recently been organized with Charles Mack, formerly general manager for Doubleday Productions, as president and general manager.

According to the plans of the company, twelve stories of feature length will be produced during the ensuing year with distribution through one of the largest releasing concerns. The stories will be presented with an all-star cast in which will appear some of the screen's best known artists.

Actual filming of the company's first subject, the title and details of which have not yet been announced, will start at the Fine Arts studios within the next two weeks.

Henry McCarty made his debut in motion pictures as a clay modeller for the Selig studios, following a successful career as a cartoonist on the San Francisco Examiner. He is one of a very few men in the motion picture industry who have proved to be capable of writing and directing their own stories.

WHEN A HAT IS NOT A CUSPIDOR AT ALL

Del Andrews, who directed Lloyd Hughes, Lucille Ricksen and other members of an all-star cast in the Palmer Photoplay Corporation production, "Judgment of the Storm," at Ince Studios, "sprung" this one upon his co-workers one day between bites at a sandwich:

"In the early days of our industry there was a certain temperamental director who always wore a rather large felt hat. One day while filming scenes in a "set" representing the boudoir of a French monarch's lady love, he misplaced the hat, and fretted all one morning over its loss. At noon "props" brought it to him with the word that it had been found right on the set.

"When the picture was finished, a noted expert in period architecture and furnishings was invited to criticise it at a preview. He found only one slight technical flaw, but the film was shown again, that he might point it out to the director.

"That cuspidor by the foot of the big mirror is what I object to!" declared the expert. "It's entirely foreign to the period, and——"

"'Cuspidor!' shouted the director. 'That's my missing hat!'"

ACTOR DISCOVERS PRESIDENT'S JOB ISN'T ANY CINCH

Since becoming president of his own picture producing corporation, Monty Banks has been one busy business man. Now, besides being the star of his own productions, he is likewise business executive and during the week just ended his chief task has been to select the best available people to fill the wide variety of positions open at the studios Samuel Grande has just purchased for him and which were formerly known as the Chester Studios.

Among the very first important co-worker Mr. Banks engaged, were Alf Goulding as director, and Harry Edward as co-director, with Dave Smith on the job as assistant, and Gus Meinz as scenarist.

During the week's time he has interviewed something like twenty-five leading comedy ladies in the quest of the one he wants and thus far has been unable to decide on that one. He seeks a baby blonde who is clever and vivacious and he declares it is remarkable how few answer this description.

STARLET GETS ROLE IN CALNAY'S PRODUCTION

Having completed his work in support of Mary Pickford in the star's latest picture, "Rosita," little Philippe deLacy, adopted French orphan, has been engaged by James Calnay to play an important role in his latest picture, "Why Do We Live?" which is to enter filming within the next few days at the Cosmosart studios.

The role the youngster is to play in this picture is one of the most exacting that he has ever been called upon to portray, but in contracting for his services the producer declared that he believes the deLacy child possesses a greater amount of histrionic ability than he had ever had an opportunity to display.

Mundy's Novel Scenarized

Bradley King, continuity writer for Thomas H. Ince, has completed an adaptation of Talbot Mundy's latest novel for an Ince screen special. Miss King has been collaborating with Mundy on the book which is the first tale of American life ever written by the British novelist. Mundy's adventure tales of India and Africa have won such a tremendous following that the Bobbs Merrill Publishing Co., has contracted for six novels, two of which have been bought by Thomas H. Ince for screen specials.

MORLEY HAS HARD TIME DECIDING ON OFFERS

Reggie Morley finds it easy enough to get engagements, but it is difficult to always decide which one is the best to select. For the last week he has been devoting a great deal of his time Considering an offer to go to Santa Cruz to enact the stellar role in a feature production about to be filmed there.

But something told him—it may have been a hunch—that he should not shake the dust of Hollywood from his shoes so soon after just having returned from a long professional sojourn in San Francisco.

Hence, he rejected the starring offer on the sole grounds that it would take him away from filmland's capitol. Now he is confronted with deciding between two other offers in two local studios.

Mr. Morley is one of the established photoplayers, and since the days when he was casting director at the William Fox Studios, he has enacted many important roles as a straight juvenile. He made his debut in pictures in the famous old Keystone comedies, and he has been at it ever since.

One of his most notable screen performances was given in support of Dustin Farnum in the picture success entitled "Starvation."

What "Butling" Does for You

Fred Esmelton states that the portrayal of the role of a butler in a screen drama occasionally is good for any actor. "Many of us oftentimes are inclined to grow too self-centered and entirely too selfish in our viewpoint of life," Esmelton says. "But after playing the part of a butler day after day and passing out the soup and victuals, you get so that you feel inclined to take quite an interest in the other fellow's welfare."

Joseph Du Bray and Pierre Collings, cameramen of the "Blow Your Own Horn" company ,will begin the double-exposure scenes of the production this week.

Casting "Temporary Husband"

Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is engaged in assembling a cast to interpret the screen version of "Her Temporary Husband," Edward Paulton's farcial stage play, which is to be directed by John W. McDermott with Sidney Chaplin in the leading comedy role. As a stage play "Her Temporary Husband" was an ideal starring vehicle for William Courtenay who is still playing in this ludicrous comedy in the East. It is essentially a laugh-provoker and a type of play which will show Charley's inimitable brother at his best.

MAE MURRAY WILL MAKE ALL FILMS HERE IN FUTURE

Three important announcements concerning Mae Murray and her director-husband, Robert S. Leonard, were made by the dainty Metro star on the eve of her departure from Los Angeles for New York.

In the first place, Miss Murray is going East to close her luxurious apartment. She has purchased a five-acre hilltop site overlooking Beverly Hills and will build a beautiful home upon her return to Los Angeles.

This means that Miss Murray will make her future Tiffany productions for Metro on the West Coast. She has just completed her work in "The French Doll," her newest picture for Metro.

"Conquest," a story by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgins will be Miss Murray's first starring picture to be filmed upon her return from the East. The author and authoress of this story will also prepare the screen adaptation. Mr. Leonard will direct.

Besides closing her apartment in New York Miss Murray plans to spend all the time possible in seeing new shows and in buying materials for the gowns and dresses she will design for her new pictures.

Mr. Leonard and Alfred Cohn, title writer for Miss Murray's pictures, will follow Miss Murray to New York just as soon as "The French Doll" is edited.

John Ralesco Signed

J. Travers Montgomery, father of Baby Peggy, has signed John Ralesco to appear in Baby Peggy's full-length feature which will be made shortly at Universal City. Montgomery has several other actors of note in mind, but has signed Ralesco due to his excellent work in Century Comedies with Baby Peggy. Ralesco is now studying advanced pantomine while waiting for his call.

NOTABLES SIGN ON DOTTED LINE FOR METRO PICTURE

Several pen points were badly worn and inkwells were drained dry at the Metro studios in Hollywood when the complete cast for "The Eagle's Feather," the first of the Metro all-star specials were all signed up in a single day.

Among the notable players who attached their signatures to Metro contracts to appear in this Katherine Newlin Burt story under the direction of Edward Sloman were James Kirkwood, Mary Alden, Lester Cuneo, Elinor Fair, Barbara La Marr, William Orlamond, Charlie McHugh, Adolph Menjou, George Seigman and John Elliott.

Miss Fair and Miss Alden only recently returned to Hollywood from New York and this picture will mark their first work before the camera since they came back. Miss Fair appeared in the leading feminine role in "Driven" while in the East and also in "Has the World Gone Mad?" which is soon to be released. Miss Alden had a leading role in "Notoriety," and also in "A Woman's Woman."

James Kirkwood is also a recently returned resident to Hollywood. While in New York he appeared on Broadway in "The Fool."

"The Eagle's Feather" is a Western story adapted for the screen by Winifred Dunn. After about two weeks' work in the studio the entire company will go on location near Bishop, California, where a stampede with 4,000 cattle will be staged.

GLAND BENEFICIARY SEEKS IMPORTANT ROLE

Since the announcement was made a week ago that First National is to picturize Gertrude Atherton's widely-discussed novel of rejuvenation, "Black Oxen," the studio offices of that company at the United Studios, have been besieged daily by film actresses who seek an opportunity to play the featured role.

Among those who are eager to play the part of Madame Zattiany, the heroine of 59 who virtually becomes a girl again through undergoing the celebrated glandular treatment of rejuvenation, are some of the most notable feminine figures of the film world.

But so far no one has been found who can fill the requirements needed to portray this most unusual character and according to First National executives it is not improbable that they will be forced to go outside of film circles to find the "type" for which they are looking to play this most difficult part.

SEARCHERS LOCATE CHOICE SCENERY FOR FEATURE

After a thrilling and exciting six-day search for locations for "The Huntress," First National's next big picture, David H. Thompson, studio business manager, Lynn Reynolds, director, James Van Tress, cameraman, laboratory expert, have returned to the First National studios.

They are enthusiastically convinced that in their choice for locations on the Nevada side of the High Sierras, they have picked upon settings which will be among the most picturesque ever screened.

To reach the territory where the scenes of "The Huntress," are to be taken, the members of the First National vanguard, were forced to plough their way for miles on snow shoes through mountain trails, packed deep with snow.

But very little of the territory could be made by automobile. In many of the places it was necessary to abandon the cars and use sleds, which the First National pioneers dragged by hand in order to get the cameras to the necessary elevations to take test "shots" of the beautiful surroundings.

In some places the party was compelled to wade through snow drifts, waist-deep.

The locations decided upon are at an average of 7,000 feet above sea level among the mountains and lakes on the Nevada side of the mountain range, in the territory where Mark Twain laid the scenes of his famous stories of the gold rush days.

Today this country is almost uninhabited yet in the days when Mark Twain wrote his stories, thousands of persons were living there, attracted from all parts of the country in their eager search for gold.

The First National party traveled for miles through veritable wilderness and through scores of practically deserted villages, in a section of the country that originally was the old Piute Indian hunting ground.

Starting from Bishop, California, which is the end of a branch line on the Southern Pacific, the First National men first drove to the Mono Lake section, a distance of sixty miles from the California town. Then they journeyed to the Mammoth Lakes, breaking and digging out a road for their cars as they went along. Some days they were unable to make more than a dozen miles, through the heavy snow.

From Mammoth Lakes they set out for Silver Lake, a distance of twenty miles, but finding that it would be impossible to break through the snow packed trails, they were forced to take a circuitous route of more than 185 miles.

HUMS MOURNFUL TUNE AS CAMERAS CLICK

Bert Roach brushed idly at his painted mustache and hummed an old-time ballad. He spoke no words, just hummed the sweet refrain.

The inimitable Universal laugh promoter was the picture of dejection. But still he hummed the air of the song of yesterday.

Nearby, on the same set at Universal City, William Watson, Bert's director, listened, puzzled.

"Pretty tune, Bert. Sounds familiar. Kind of sad, but I like sad tunes. They always have so much meaning. What did you say it was, Bert?"

Bert paused for just a second.

"Don't interrupt me now. I'm only on the twenty-fifth verse. Got twenty-four more to go. Great atmospheric song for this thing we're doin'." He resumed his humming without even losing the tempo.

Watson turned and glanced along the set, a light of understanding in his eyes. Rows and rows of bottles were standing along a shelf.

And he, too, began to hum the old refrain, "Forty-nine Blue Bottles——."

Roach has just begun his latest comedy, "Empty Bottles," a satire on the great American pastime of older days, "getting rid of the empty bottles."

"Empty Bottles" is the third of Roach's present series of one-reel comedies in which he is being starred, under William Watson's direction.

It is understood, also, that he will be assigned to a part in "A Lady of Quality," now in production on the "U" lot.

HE'S HATED AND HISSED---BUT HE LIKES IT

What would a serial be without a villain?

Of course, there must be stars—the lovely lady who goes through all sorts of perilous adventures, and the handsome hero who always seems just on the verge of going under, but finally triumphs, in the final fadeout, and gets the girl.

Also, there must be supporting actors and actresses; those who carry out the subsidiary action and serve as foils, or background, to the leading characters.

But by all means there must be a villain.

He's hissed promiscuously; sometimes, even, excited fans curse him, and heave anathema at his screen shadow.

That's what villains are meant for, though—to be hated—and that's one reason for Edwin (Buck) Moulton's success in pictures—his hateability.

Mr. Moulton has the heavy role in "The Eagle's Talons," the Universal serial now being filmed, with Ann Little and Fred Thomson co-starred.

CREIGHTON HALE'S CURIOSITY DROVE HIM INTO FILMS

The self same curiosity that killed the proverbial cat brought to the screen one of its favorite juveniles.

This is Creighton Hale, who plays the part of "Little Billie," "Trilby's" artist lover in the du Maurier classic now being filmed at the United Studios by Richard Walton Tully for First National release.

Asked a few days ago how he happened to come into filmland, Hale declared: "I was curious. I wanted to see what it was all about and so I got a job as an extra."

But from this it must not be taken that the famed juvenile was inexperienced when he applied for his first screen "bit." Far from it. He had been a well-known stage actor in England for years before. In fact, he was born into the acting profession. His father was an actor-manager and his mother also was a renowned stage favorite.

It was while he was in New York, playing with an English company, that his curiosity as to the films was aroused. He waited until his stage engagement was finished and then applied for his initial "bit." It was the part of an office boy.

He showed such remarkable talent in this small part that he was immediately engaged to play a much more important role and from then on he has had a sure and steady climb to the top.

Creighton Hale first endeared himself to film fans by his work in the Pathe serials, "The Exploits of Elaine," and the "Iron Claw." Some of his other important roles were in "Way Down East," "The Idol Dancer," "The Black Circle," "The Warning," and a host of others.

Clovers and Luck

Who said four-leaf clovers were lucky? That's what Peggy O'Day, featured player in "The Fighting Skipper," would like to know. The other morning as she started for the studio she found a four-leaf clover on her lawn. Congratulating herself on her good luck, she put it in her purse in exultant anticipation. Right away things began to happen. As she drove out the garage door she took a mudguard off. A few moments later she was given a ticket by a traffic officer for cutting the button. That was bad enough, but in the very first scene in which she played that morning she tripped over a stage brace and sprained her ankle so badly that she was laid up for the rest of the day. "Clovers may be lucky," chirps Peggy, but there are two kinds of luck."

SUCCESS CHANGES FOLKS' ATTITUDE TOWARD FILMS

Running away from her home in Virginia two years ago to seek fame in motion pictures caused Dorothy Dunlap to become an object of nation-wide search by the police.

In high school Miss Dunlap took part in virtually every entertainment and play that was staged by her classmates. She became so interested in dramatic acting that she longed for the day when she would have a chance to display her talents in motion pictures, feeling that if she was given a chance before the camera she would "make good."

At the end of the high school term, she took what money she had saved, and without saying a word to her parents about her film aspirations, knowing they had other plans for her future, she boarded a train for California. Her folks immediately notified the police of her disappearance and a description of her was flashed to the police throughout the country.

A few weeks later she was located in Hollywood, playing small parts at one of the film studios. Her family requested that she be brought back to Virginia, but Miss Dunlap replied, stating that she was enjoying her work in pictures immensely, and that if allowed to remain she would soon be playing more important roles. After considerable persuasion, her parents finally consented to let her stay in Hollywood, thinking she would perhaps soon tire of her work in pictures and would return home to finish her school work.

Miss Dunlap continued playing small parts in pictures and she completed her high school education by going to night school.

Her desire to play leading roles is now about to be fulfilled, having been placed under contract by James Calnay to play the leading feminine role in his latest production, "Why Do We Live?" which is to enter filming within the next few days at the Cosmosart studios.

Miss Dunlap's parents visited her in Hollywood a few weeks ago and are now willing that she should continue her work in pictures. They are making preparations to shortly establish a permanent residence in this city.

Sadie Campbell, noted protege of Gus Edwards, made a hurry call to Frisco several days ago to appear in connection with one of her Century Comedies. She is known as Buddy Messinger's leading lady, and is eleven years of age.

Jack White, producer-director of Educational-Mermaid Comedies, is in New York conferring with E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchange, Inc., regarding production and distribution plans for his 1923-24 product. Mr. White was accompanied on his trip East by E. H. Allen, general manager of the Mermaid activities in Los Angeles.

HOLBROOK BLINN TO PLAY "BAD MAN" IN PICTURES

First National has completed arrangements for filming "The Bad Man," Porter Emerson Browne's satirical comedy, which is now being presented at the Majestic Theatre.

Holbrook Blinn, creator of the name role, and who appears in the local stage production, will portray the same role in the film offering. So far he is the only member of the supporting cast that has been definitely decided upon. It is understood that he will be given all-star support.

Eddie Carew will direct. Carew is now in New York City arranging some minor details of the production and will return here shortly after the first of the month. He may bring one or two supporting members of the cast from New York with him.

Production is expected to start shortly after July 1. By this time the current run of the play is expected to be completed and Blinn expects to be finished with the part he is playing in Mary Pickford's latest production.

Because of his stage engagement, the Pickford picture engagement and the filming of "The Bad Man" contract, Blinn has been forced to turn down a contract to portray the leading role in a new production. The offer came from one of the largest film companies.

JACK AND CLAUDE ARE SOME MISFIT BROTHERS

Jack Mulhall, the fastidious, and Claude Gillingwater, renowned in film and theatrical circles almost as much for his height as his dramatic powers, are playing the "mis-fit brothers" at the United Studios. In one sequence of the First National comedy feature, "Dulcy," in which they support Constance Talmadge, the two are required to exchange clothes by mistake.

Now Mulhall is close to six feet tall but alongside the elongated Gillingwater, he seems not to have gotten his full growth. Gillingwater's trials on the other hand are just as sore. For he must cramp his six feet four length into Mulhall's tailor-mades, no considerable feat to accomplish. To make matters worse, Connie, who is an incorrigible tease, and the other members of the "Dulcy" cast are continually poking fun at them.

Morante Comedies Soon

J. E. Logan and Jas. D. Baynham lately identified with the production of "The Marriage Chance" and "The Web of the Law" for the American Releasing Corporation will be associated with Morante Comedies now in production at the Russell studio. This comedy unit will produce two-reelers of the situation type, and will feature Milburn Morante. Tom Gibson will direct, while E. L. MacManigal will turn camera.

15 COSMOPOLITAN FEATURES TO BE FILMED SOON

According to telegraphic advice from New York to the Goldwyn Studios, fifteen pictures produced by Cosmopolitan Productions will be placed on the market next season by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, in connection with the Goldwyn output.

This announcement follows that of the merger for distribution recently consummated by William Randolph Hearst and F. J. Godsol. The pictures include "Enemies of Women," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, now enjoying a successful run at the Central Theatre in New York, and at the Rialto Theatre in Los Angeles, with a cast including Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens. The picture was directed by Alan Crosland.

Following this will be Marion Davies in "Little Old New York," written by Rida Johnson Young and directed by Sidney Olcott; "The Daughter of Mother McGinn," by Jack Boyle, directed by Frances Marion and George Hill; "Unseeing Eyes," by Arthur Stringer ,directed by E. H. Griffith, with Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen; "Under the Red Robe," by Stanley Weyman, directed by Alan Crosland, with Robert E. Mantell, John Charles Thorne and Alma Rubens.

Also included in the schedule are Marion Davies in "Yolanda," by Charles Major; "The Flaming Forest," by James Oliver Curwood; "Alias the Lone Wolf," by Louis Joseph Vance, with Bert Lytell; "The Temptress," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez; "The Country Beyond," by James Oliver Curwood; "Vendetta," by Marie Corelli; "A Gentleman of France," by Stanley Weyman, with Bert Lytell; Marion Davies in "Alice of Old Vincennes," by Maurice Thompson; "The Helmet of Navarro," by Bertha Runkle, with Bert Lytell; and "The Garden of Peril," by Cynthia Stockley.

GOLDWYN PLANS TO MAKE "BEN HUR" FEATURE HERE

F. J. Godsol, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, while in Los Angeles last week, made several important announcements.

He brought with him complete data gathered by Edward Bowes during an extensive tour of Europe regarding the advantages and disadvantages of making "Ben Hur" abroad. This information was placed in the hands of Abraham Lehr, who is in charge of production. During Mr. Godsol's stay decision will be made as to whether the spectacle will be filmed at the Culver City studios. Selection of the cast has been held up pending a decision.

The film executive made public for the first time that the company will release forty-nine pictures this year, the greatest in its history. The Goldwyn studios will produce twenty-four of these, Cosmopolitan will contribute fifteen, and the Distinctive Pictures Corporation will supply eight. Jesse D. Hampton's production of "The Spoilers" and the Achievement Film Company's picturization of "The Magic Skin," directed by George D. Baker, will complete the program.

Mr. Godsol said the big production schedule inaugurated by Goldwyn would be continued. He added that recent contracts signed with famous directors and actors have placed the company in a decidedly advantageous position, now that the boom in the industry has set all the producers scurrying for talent.

When friends of Edward Gribbon want to get his "goat" they invite the well-known character actor to have a piece of pie. After being "fed up" on this kind of pastry in three consecutive pictures Gribbon declares that all good things he had ever thought about pies were hopelessly wrecked when in "Why Marry for Money," a Sol Lesser production, in which he plays one of the principal supporting roles, he was again given a "pie scene" to enact.

And that's not the worst of it! Some time ago the actor decided he would try to reduce weight. In his last four pictures, however, he has consumed such a great quantity of pie that he has gained twelve pounds.

"Judy Punch," the twelfth story of H. C. Witwer's "Fighting Blood" series, has been put in production at the Powers Studios under the direction of Malcolm St. Clair. George O'Hara and Clara Horton are the featured players.

POPULAR DANCERS FAIL TO SHOW IN HOTEL CONTEST

The failure of Jack Pickford and Alice Lake to win one of the three prizes in the grand finals of the dancing contest at the Ambassador Cocoanut Grove on April 26, came as a great surprise to the many hundreds of motion picture fans who had put their money on the popular favorites.

Rupert Hughes' son, Rush Hughes, dancing with a guest of The Ambassador, Miss Margaret Grayson, won third prize, however, while one of Los Angeles' best-known society girls, Miss Rowena Schneider, won the second, dancing with Forrest Tucker. The first prize, the big Ambassador Cup, was captured by Miss Dorothy Janney and Richard C. Olsen.

The hotel management had selected for judges some of the best-known newspaper writers and dramatic critics, headed by K. C. Beaton, who acted as chairman. The other judges were Thomas Darden of the New York World, Eddie Doherty of the Chicago Tribune, Grace Kingsley, Peggy Hamilton and Edwin Schallert of the Los Angeles Times, Guy Price of the Los Angeles Herald and Florence Lawrence of the Los Angeles Examiner.

Before the contest, each of the couples who had won prizes in the weekly contest, making them eligible for the finals, were notified by the judges that points would be awarded for the couples, who in their opinion, were the best ballroom dancers in the Fox Trot, One Step and Waltz, irrespective of the applause of the 1400 guests assembled at the big party. Despite the judges' ruling regarding applause, the Cocoanut Grove rang to the cheers and applause of spectators as the contest narrowed down to five or six couples.

Miss Janney, described by the announcers as the young lady in the orchid dress, appeared, however, to be a favorite from the start, but this did not alter the excitement of the contest, as almost every couple had brought a cavalcade of fans.

Asbestos Pants Wanted

Matt Moore is in the market for a well-fitting pair of asbestos evening trousers. One of the highlights of merriment in Fred Niblo's production of "Captain Applejack" requires the Celtic Comet to slide down a very long and slippery bannister, feet foremost. Rehearsal took all of the good out of three pairs of trousers and threatened the studio with spontaneous combustion.

TEACHER SAYS ARIEL SAWYER MUST HAVE TUTOR

Ariel Sawyer, juvenile actor who is renowned for his newsboy and bellboy nortrayals, tells of an amusing incident that occurred at the studio the other day. The studio teacher was interviewing a group of children who were taking part in one of the pictures there, with reference to their registration for school classes. She chanced across Sawyer, who by the way is 19 years of age, and the following conversation ensued:

Teacher: "I don't believe I have YOUR name, young man!"

Sawyer: "Oh, you really don't need my name."

Teacher: "And why not?"

Sawyer: "Because I don't go to school."

Teacher: "Don't you know it's compulsory for every child under 16 years of age to go to school?"

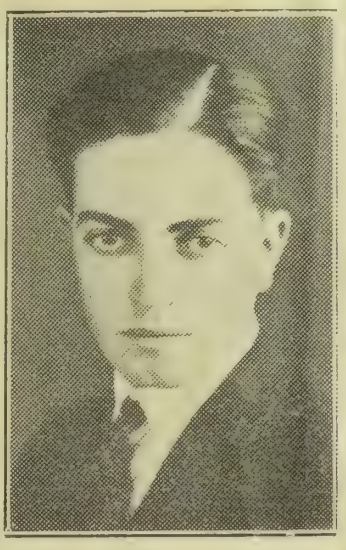
Sawyer: "Yes, I understand that."

Teacher: "Well, this sounds queer. What's your name, and where do you live?"

This chatter continued at a reckless pace, and before it was finished Ariel was almost compelled to call for his birth certificate to establish his age. As it was, to fully satisfy the teacher's curiosity, he had to refer her to a friend who assured her that the young actor had long since passed the school age.

Incidents of this nature are not unusual to Sawyer, who has the physical appearance of a boy about fourteen years of age. This, coupled with a keen sense of dramatic values, enables him to play his parts to perfection.

His first film work was in "Welsh Rarebit and Pickles," a production made in the northern part of the state by W. Ferguson, a brother of Elsie Ferguson, the stage star. Later he was manager, for several seasons, of amusement concessions on the beach at Santa Cruz, Calif., and also acted as circulation manager of one of the daily papers there. Not long after, in company with a friend, T. E. Rhalston, he prepared a novelty vaudeville act and played small time throughout the state. This lasted about eight months and then Sawyer headed toward Los Angeles.



Some of the pictures he has been seen in are "Vanity Fair," "The Haunted Valley," "Main Street," "The Famous Mrs. Fair," "Toby Tyler," "The Courtship of Miles Standish," and "The Three Ages.'

At the present time he is under consideration for leading juveniles by two of the most prominent independent producers, and it will be interesting to note his work in these productions. If past performances are any indication of what may be expected, we will soon be including him among the foremost delineators of boy parts on the screen.

WILL PLAY CHEVALIER ROLE IN METRO FILM

The part of Chevalier de-Chabrillane in Rex Ingram's new Metro production, "Scaramouche," has been assigned to William Humphrey, veteran character actor whose brilliant work in many of the screen's notable plays has brought him to the front in the ranks of artists of his type. He was selected for the part in the Rex Ingraham picture because of the excellent interpretation of a similar role, that of the Marquis St. Evermonde, which he gave in "A Tale of Two Cities," a Vitagraph release, and which attracted the personal attention of the Metro director.

Warner Baxter, one of the featured players in "Blow Your Own Horn," has just purchased a lot on Arden Drive. Baxter is to build his future home thereon.

MURIEL MACCORMAC IS CAST IN NEW FOX FILM

From the ranks of the screen's more popular juvenile artists, Muriel MacCormac, who in "Poor Men's Wives" scored a personal triumph, has been chosen to play an important part in Dustin Farnum's new Fox production, "The Man Who Won." Under the direction of William Wellman the company is now en route to Sonora, Cal., where the opening scenes for the picture are to be filmed.

Arthur Trimble, the Kentucky boy star, starts his next two-reel comedy for Trimble Productions within the week. Jack Dawn will continue to direct the five-year-old comedy star. It was only recently that four new stories were purchased for little Trimble.

MOVIE STAR'S LIFE NOT SO EASY AS MANY THINK

What an easy life these movie stars lead-

At the leisurely hour of 2 a. m. one cold morning this week one of the most distinguished companies of film celebrities ever gathered together for a picture, rolled away from the United Studios for a week's camping out on location. It was Norma Talmadge's "Ashes of Vengeance" company, leaving to film battle scenes for her historic French romance.

The party that set out in the shivery hours before dawn had all the appearance of an exploring expedition. Eighteen trucks, loaded with equipment, several loads of horses, a field cooking outfit manned by a cook and two helpers, were part of the accessories.

Heading the motor caravan were Director Frank Lloyd, Miss Talmadge, Conway Tearle, Courtenay Foote, and enough of the cast and extras to make a realistic representation of a French army in 1572. The destination of the party was the Mathewson Ranch, a 15,000 acre range on Ventura Boulevard, fifty miles out of Los Angeles.

With the departure of the unit Producer Joseph M. Schenck announced that the cast, with the addition of five new names, had been completed. The final additions are: Jeanne Carpenter, Howard Truesdell, Kenneth Gibson, Mary McAllister and Forrest Robinson. As it stands, it is said to be the largest and most highly paid cast ever assembled.

Carey Finishing

Harry Carey is nearing completion of "The Miracle Baby," his sixth production for F. B. O. Val Paul is directing the picture in which Margaret Landis is seen in the leading feminine role.

POLA ENTERTAINS AT A FILM DINNER PARTY

No other than the alluring Pola Negri is hostess at a smart dinner party in an episode in the Lasky production, "Hollywood." Although Director James Cruze had used many of the foremost stars of filmdom in previous scenes, a glittering array sat down to the dinner, including William S. Hart, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hiers, Viola Dana, Robert Cain, Julia Faye, Sigrid Holmquist, Estelle Taylor, Anne Cornwall, Theodore Kosloff, Alec B. Francis, Maud Wayne, Mary Astor, Carmelita Geraghty and Jack Pickford.

Rob Wagner is drawing near the end of his Paramount picture, "Fair Week," in which Walter Hiers is starred.

SAM DE GRASSE IS POPULAR FILM MONARCH

"Heavy lies the crown on the kingly brow."

If there is anyone in pictures today knows the truth of this old saying it is Sam de Grasse, well-known film character actor, whose specialty lately seems to be filling the roles of some of the most famous kings and royal personages of history.

Just at present he is two kings at the same time. He was dealt his first king in "The Palace of the King," which is being produced by Goldwyn. Then he called for "cards" and another king was dealt him. This time the part of King Solomon, in "The Brass Bottle," which Maurice Tourneur is producing at the United Studios for First National.

De Grasse's whole screen career has been one royal flush after the other. One of his most recent successes in the role of a person of royal blood was as "Prince John" in Robin Hood. Another similar part, to follow his appearance in "The Brass Bottle," is to be the role of "The Duke," in "John of the Woods," a picture in which Dinky Dean, the 4-year-old star, is to be featured.

Alabamans Know Their Alabama

To test the fidelity of the filming of typical Alabama scenes in the latest Thomas H. Ince production, "Scars of Jealousy," soon to be released, the producer recently gave a special showing of the film of a group of native Alabamans, who were visiting in Southern California. The picture depicts scenes on the broad plantation lands, and the hill country of Alabama as well, and Mr. Ince prided himself on the accuracy with which the "atmosphere" had been transplanted to the film. The visitors liked the picture immensely, but one of them suggested a slight change in the big lynching scene that provides one of the thrills. The change suggested strengthened the scene, and Mr. Ince promptly called the company together again and had it re-enacted. "Scars of Jealousy" is said to be one of the strongest screen dramas of the year. Lloyd Hughes is the featured player in this production.

Jack Mower is being featured at Universal in a new serial named after "Daniel Boone." At the same time Jack has organized a fishing club. The only trouble with this club is that every fisherman, as he pulls in every fish, must have a witness to determine the weight of the fish that I have referred to previously. In other words, they trust each other not.

LASKY SIGNS MONTAGUE TO DO "NORTH OF 36"

Edward J. Montague, noted scenarist and playwright, who is adapting the First National production "The Swamp Angel" to the screen and who recently signed to do a series of productions for that company, has just been engaged by Jesse Lasky for the important task of adapting to the screen the Emerson Hough novel "North of 36," which the Lasky company hopes to make into one of the big films of the year.

"North of 36," which is from the same pen that wrote "The Covered Wagon," now scoring so heavily at Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre, is another story of the old frontier days and every effort will be made to bring it up to the standard of its predecessor. George Melford will direct "North of 36," and Ernest Torrence will have one of the leading roles. Many scenarists were considered for the picturizing of the last work of the famous author but Montague was finally given the celluloid plum. Montague, who has been forging rapidly to the foreground of late also wrote the screen version of "Rupert of Hentzau" and "The Common Law" for Selznick.

NEW FINE ARTS PLANT TO BE READY SOON

With an appropriation of $250,000 having been made by the Fine Arts studios for important changes and improvements to the plant, announcement was made this week by Nat Deverich, president, and John Rikkleman, secretary and treasurer of the studios, that the reconstruction work is progressing with the greatest possible speed and that plans have been arranged so that the buildings will be ready for occupancy by independent producers by the opening of the summer season.

In place of the old wooden buildings which were constructed by D. W. Griffith in 1914 and which were used by that producer during the filming of "Intolerance," "The Clansman" and his other immortal plays for the screen, the studio management is constructing stucco buildings of the latest design with every modern improvement. When completed the plant, it is stated, will be one of the most up-to-date of its kind on the west coast and will offer producers the best of facilities for the successful and economical filming of their stories.

YOUNGSTER AT TEN IS A VETERAN AT ACTING ART

Ten years old and an actor before the camera for the past nine years! This is the brilliant record held by Coy Watson, Jr., one of the screen's cleverest juvenile players, who has an important role in Earle Williams' latest release, "You Never Know."

The youngster was born on the only lot in his block which was not owned by MackSennett—at the corner of Allessandro and Berkeley Streets, Los Angeles. He actually made his debut in pictures at the age of nine months, This was in a photoplay made by the Selig Studios. At the age of eighteen months he was working regularly in Keystone comedies. The youngster is one artist who was born and bred in the heart of filmland.

Coy's very latest picture is the Edgar Lewis production, "The Right of the Strongest." One of his current releases in which he scores heavily is the Educational feature, "No Luck," starring Lloyd "Ham" Hamilton. Critics seem to be enthusiastic over the youngster's remarkable dramatic ability in especially the Vitagraph picture, "You Never Know."

Although extremely dramatic, Coy is sufficiently versatile to be classed as a first rate comedian as well as dramatic actor. In reviewing "You Never Know," one of the country's well-known trade publications recently declared that young Watson is a second Jackie Coogan.

Issue Unique Booklet

A strikingly attractive souvenir booklet, calling attention to the virtues of the current Encore feature, Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams," is being distributed by Associated Exhibitors, its appearance being synonymous with the official release of the picture, which was April 18. The booklet, which is unique in arrangement and replete with artistic appeal, was the work of J. Irving Greene, Associated's director of advertising and publicity.

Myers With Stahl

Amos Myers, formerly art director at both the Metro and Lasky studios, is now at the Louis B. Mayer studios where he is supervising the construction of sets for John M. Stahl's next First National attraction, "The Wanters," which has just gone into production. A small fortune has already been invested in scenic "atmosphere" for this picture which will be staged on even more elaborate scale than Mr. Stahl's latest success, "The Dangerous Age."

Sadie Steps Up

Sadie Campbell, most promising of all proteges of Gus Enwards, has entered the movies.

"YOUTH TRIUMPHANT" LOOKS TRIUMPHANT

With the recovery of Virginia Lee Corbin, child actress, work on the last scenes of "Youth Triumphant" has been resumed at the Hollywood Studios by Fisher Productions, the new unit in the field of the more important independents.

Anna Q. Nilsson shares honors with little Miss Corbin in the cast. Miss Nilsson has the part of "Patsy" about whom the story revolves, after "Patsy" has grown up and become respectable and conventional—almost Little Miss Corbin is playing "Patsy" as a waif of the slums, beaten, abused, a veritable female Oliver Twist.

The picture follows closely the novel of the same name by George Gibbs, follows it so closely that Lillian Ducy and Jack Voshe'l, who are associated in its direction, have asked members of the cast to read their parts from the book rather than from the script. It deals with the eternal struggles of youth for happiness and its triumph. It opens with the struggles of Patsy, her sex hidden beneath the ragged pants and shirt of a New York newsboy, for a living on the streets. Learning that vicious Ma Slavin (Eugenie Besserer) is not really her mother, she runs away. A limousine in which she hides carries her to a Westchester estate where an accident, when she attempts to escape, imprisons her in the hearts of two old maids, portrayed by Claire Mc Dowell and Lucy Beaumont—who live there.

David Van Lear (Joseph Dowling), a wealthy recluse, cousin to the twin old maids, first opposes the harboring of the refugee, then violently espouses her cause. Christopher Van Lear, his son, crippled, an enemy of all mankind, finds in her a kindred spirit and fights her battles with his keen mind. Phil Conway (Ward Crane) brother to a girl she meets at a fashionable boarding school, is the evil influence in her new life. Sidney Francis (William Boyd) young and high-minded, is first chum and then lover.

Others in the cast include Mary Anderson, as Josie Conway, Phil's sister; George Sigman as Pa Slavin, an ex-pug who hides Patsy in his home in her babyhcod and conceals from her her true parentage; Boyd Irwin as Pandrick, the attorney who keeps the Slavins on his payroll through all of Patsy's youth, and Kate Price as Mrs. McGuire, a neighbor of the Slavins who shelters Patsy from their beatings.

The picture is replete with heart-throbs, attention-gripping scenes, mystery and adventure, with all the elements of audience appeal. As the first of the three-a-year program of the Fisher Productions, great care is being taken in its filming. Distribution arrangements are to be announced later this month, soon after the completion of the picture.

At The Exposition

The principal buildings will face an Esplanade 150 feet wide. This will pass through a circular plaza, 300 feet in diameter, called the Court of the Americas.

characteristics. certain symbols, that the public associates with a broken-down nobility. Whether they are true doesn't matter so much as that they are universally recognized. Hence, in this part I have succeeded in talking a language that everybody understands."

One by one the big picture producers are casting their vote for Southern California as the ideal spot for film making. A year ago, when Mae Murray first signed a Metro contract, it was said that the agreement hung for days because of Miss Murray's objection to working in California.

The other day it was announced that Miss Murray had agreed to film all of her future productions here, that she had purchased a five-acre tract of land for a building site and that she and her director-husband, Bob Leonard, would make their future home in Los Angeles.

"There is no place in the world where picture making conditions can compare with those in Los Angeles," said Leonard in announcing the reasons for abandoning New York as a center of production on the part of his wife and himself.

Rapid, efficient, thorough. National types of all kinds. A special department for children. The same care is given in the selection of supporting atmosphere as is given to the cast.

tion of the well known writer of screen subjects, Rob Wagner. Walter Woods wrote and is production editor of this screaming laugh-getter—in which Constance Wilson, sister of Lois, is the leading woman.

Jack Holt has just started in his new star picture. "A Gentleman of Leisure" under direction of Joseph Henabery. This play was originally by John Stapleton and P. G. Wodehouse and was adapted by Anthony W. Coldeway. Walter Woods is production editor. The leading woman is a beautiful Swedish actress—Sigrid Holmquist.

Director Gasnier, who yearns for a glimpse of his boyhood home in Paris, once more has been forced to postpone his European trip. His trans-Atlantic voyage, which was to have been taken this spring, will not materialize until he has completed four big productions upon which he will soon begin work—all to be released under his name.

Only Meant as Editorial Comment

A funny thing about that picture called "The Power of a Lie" is it shows how weak a lie is in reality.

It is predicted that all the water in the world will disappear in time. This WOULD BE carrying prohibition too far.

There is no place for grafters and crooks in the picture-producing business and the sooner the vacancy is made the better.

Too often a wave of prosperity is a breaker of the human sense of equilibrium. Verily, a lot of change sure does change some people.

While Los Angeles was having a spell of torrid weather, Chicago was having a blizzard and Europe was having her usual political storms.

The latest fad among photoplayers is to dabble in oil. It is still a good idea for photoplayers to dabble more exclusively in the photoplay art.

If you will only pause to ponder, the dope question is more of a terrible fact than it is a question. Incidentally, it is high time to stop the high-handed traffic.

Some call "The Covered Wagon" great and others call it ordinary, but whatever they may call it one thing is certain, it's proving a great money-maker for some reason or other.

Any film publication which makes it a habit to "knock" film people and film affairs should be denied the privilege of sailing along under the banner of films. A good way to deny is not to buy!

A theatre dedicated to finding the great American opera is proposed for Hollywood. And, if that theatre does find the said great American opera, the founder thereof will go down in history as a great finder.

Old screen favorites are coming back in veritable droves nowadays, which means the new faces are not to be given so much chance for a while. Between the new and old faces, just how much is there to choose?

Some unruly cuss is urging a revision of the marriage laws so as to make the women more amenable to complete control. For the sake of protecting that said cuss against a bombardment of rolling-pins we will not divulge his name.

Oriental picture fans are becoming so very partial to American-made films that Oriental picture producers are becoming as scarce as the proverbial hen-teeth all of which serves as more proof that America is the gem of the motion (picture.)

Eric Von Stroheim has two months of "shooting" ahead of him in San Francisco, where he is filming "McTeague" under the title of "Greed." Say, if some of those European countries had only two months of shooting ahead of them, they would be happy.

There is a reassuring dearth of scandals in filmdom, which no doubt means that publishers of some yellow newspapers are almost frantic. You can depend on it though, they will cook up something if it is only a trivial, uncalled-for "roast" of some kind (unkind) of someone.

The wise exhibitor is the one who not only exhibit good pictures, but who exhibits good showmanship in the manner in which he does the exhibiting. Showmanship is still the ship of state for all those theatre-owners who would travel to high estate of success.

Now that they have identified that woman in Honduras as Clara Phillips, and since it is reasonably sure she will land in San Juantin after all, here's hoping they don't trust the Los Angeles jail to hold her again even overnight. Also, let there be no moving pictures of her return even in the news weeklies.

According to inside information, rapid progress is being made on the plans for building that much discussed Amusement Center in Hollywood and if it is "set up" as proposed it will be one of the whole world's greatest show-places. It would seem that all people loyal to Hollywood should get back of this promising enterprise since it seems so sure of making this community not only one of the most famous centers in the world, but in all history. Let us hear more of the plans and if everything is O. K., let's support it with that zeal which will insure it of being a K. O.

HISTORICAL LORE BECOMES A NEED

French history seems suddenly to have assumed a tremendous interest for the producer of films, and there are so many Comtes, and Ducs and Rois nowadays, that a director has to have the history of the Gallic monarchy at his finger tips to know exactly who is who.

Two features that assume especial prominence dealing with entirely different periods are now in process of production. One of these is "Ashes of Vengeance," starring Norma Talmadge, which opens with the Bartholomew's Eve Massacre, and the other is "Scaramouche," which ends with the Fall of the Bastille and the spectacular beginning of the French revolution.

"Ashes of Vengeance," which is being produced by Joseph M. Schenck for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is in a sense the more glamourous of the two, because the scenes now in the making are laid in the palaces and the chateaux of the aristocracy. "Scaramouche" offers a vivid contrast just now in its sketching of the life of the people. Many courtly grandeurs are to follow.

In "Ashes of Vengeance" which is being directed by Frank Lloyd, Norma Talmadge will have one of the most brilliant roles of her career as Mlle. Yoolande de Bruex. Conway Tearle has the principal role opposite her, that of Rupert de Briac. Their romance is the central interest of the story, which concerns a plan for revenge that comes to naught because its fire is swept away by a finer humanism.

Wallace Beery has one of his most important roles since he was seen in "Robin Hood," as the Duc de Tours. He is, of course, the villain of the story, while Josephine Crowell as Catherine de Medici is one of the chief intriguers.

DOFFS FIGHTING TRUNKS TO DON SWIMMING SUIT

Reginald Denny has doffed the fighting trunks and donned the swimming suit.

The star of the famous Universal "Leather Pusher" series recently completed his work in the latest picture of the new series and is vacationing in the Pacific ocean between pictures. Production will start soon on another of the two-reel comedy classics.

Harry Pollard, who directed the filming of the previous "Leather Pushers," will continue the making of the plays listed in the latest series.

Denny was supported in the picture just completed by Elinor Field, Hayden Stevenson, Gertrude Olmsted, Harry Carter.

HEARTBREAKS OF METROPOLIS IN THE FILM

Woven about the theme that New York takes those who seek its favors and breaks them on the wheel of its materialism ere it permits them to achieve success, "Broken Hearts of Broadway," to be produced at the Hollywood Studios by Irving Cummings, is a picturization of the struggles and heartbreaks which face those who woo fame in the great metropolis of the Western Hemisphere.

This photoplay, marking Cumming's entry into the ranks of the great independent producers, will be screened in a most elaborate and lavish way. An all-star cast has been engaged for its production and, with Cummings himself playing a small role, it is predicted that the histronic talent assembled will be an added attraction.

"Broker Hearts of Broadway," adapted by Hope Loring and Louis Duryea Lighton from an old play, is a heart-stirring drama that features some of life's most necessary and useful lessons: It also is a pictorial display of one of the world's best known and most famous streets —a thoroughfare along which has passed practically every notable figure in the history of the United States.

The story throws into vivid relief the manner in which artists battle for success in the great city by the Hudson. It is flavored with the spiciness of Greenwich Village and soddened by the sordiness of human passions that float upon the turgid surface of a Chinatown cafe. The romance of Sunny Italy, land of vengeance and vendetta, tinges some of its strongest scenes, while through it sings the wholesome strain of good, clean Americanism which admits of no surrender to the forces of evil or the powers of destruction.

The fascination of newspaper life is cast over the entire plot, for it is about the ambitions of a reporter that the story is built. It shows his poverty shrouded thinly in worn garments and it voices the bitterness of his soul when confronted by the ogre of despair. But charity and human sacrifice of self also are woven into the plot, while the keynote of a great love is struck frequently throughout the unfolding of the drama.

From the time when the soul-shocked newspaper man encounters his ex-cabby friend of night hawk days, from whose lips fall the action of the picture, "Broken Heart of Broadway" carries the keen interest of its attractiveness through scenes of love and friendship, shame and sorrow, discouragement and despair, death and disaster, fame and fortune—so many of the ingredients of human life—into the final glorification of success won after the struggles beyond measure.

Broadway is shown in all its alluring beauty, the warm-voiced siren gifted with some illusive, intangible quality that makes it magic. It is filmed as the street of streets, the glittering stage on which is enacted half of the country's drama of life. And in the production by Cummings two great restaurants will be shown. The sets for these are the largest of their kind ever built, for the action of the picture requires that the famous spaghetti rendezvous and the chop suey parlor known as the Shanghai must be elaborately displayed.

According to announcement given out by Cummings' organization, the all-star cast for "Broken Hearts of Broadway" has been completed. The roster of players includes the names of many of the most famous artists of the industry and each member was selected because of his or her individual suitablity for the various roles and none was engaged for the exploitation value of their name alone as is oftentimes the case in organizing an all-star cast.

Included in the list of stars engaged by Cummings is Colleen Moore, who co-starred with James Woods Morrison in the Cosmopolitan production, "The Nth Commandment," Johnnie Walker, who enacted a principal role in Goldwyn's, "The Rear Car," and who was formerly starred in his own pictures including "My Dad," "Captain Fly By Night" and "The Fourth Musketeer," all R-C specials; Alice Lake, former Metro star and featured player in "I am the Law," "Chicago Sal" and other independent productions; Tully Marshall, well known character lead and one of the principal players in "The Covered Wagon," Kate Price, former serial star and famed old character woman; Creighton Hale, who attained prominence through his work in "Way Down East;" Arthur Stewart Hull, who appeared with Gloria Swanson in "Prodigal Daughters" and other Lasky productions; Freeman Wood, featured in the stage production of "The Man Who Came Back" on Broadway, New York, and Anthony Merlo, former World Film player and more recently film executive who has now returned to acting.

"Broken Hearts of Broadway" will be personally taken to New York by the young producer when completed and will be given a big Broadway premier with several of the all-star cast appearing in person.

DON DONNED HIS SAILING TOGS FOR CAUSE

Don Armando, who has been selected to play an important role in the West Coast Production, "Why Do We Live," now in the course of production at the Cosmoart Studios, is said to be the first Spanish nobleman of high rank to enter the picture producing field in Hollywood without any unusual ado being made over his advent. But, the quietness with which he is making his debut is the man's own doing, as he is extremely modest and resents having any fuss made over him. This is due to the fact that in Spain he has been much in public life, having been King Alfonso's Captain of Guards and much in the political limelight with the result that on the occasion of his every public appearance there he has been feted extensively.

"I did not come to Hollywood to be received with acclaim even though I might distinguish myself in my chosen profession," Mr. Armando says. "I came because I felt the call of a wider field of opportunity. My several years of stage work in Spain became monotonous as I began to realize more and more the limitations the rather small field imposed. Hence I came to American motion pictures for the purpose of gaining latitude for developing my dramatic ability."

Mr. Armando is a dashing young man of decided handsome appearance and he is considered by those who have become acquainted with him as the ideal type of juvenile leading man.

HISTORIC SPOTS FILMED FOR GOLDWYN FEATURE

San Francisco, animate and inanimate, is generously represented in Erich von Stroheim's production of "Greed," which the Goldwyn director produced in its entirety in this city.

Hundreds of local citizens are being pressed into service as "atmosphere" during the filming of this adaptation of Frank Norris' classic "McTeague" and many of the city's historic landmarks serve as the background for the action.

An entire two-story business block in the heart of San Francisco and the neighborhood surrounding it are the center of activities in producing "Greed," but other scenes of the story show the Cliff House, famous from coast to coast; the Ferry Building, the Golden Gate, Seal Rocks, Market Street, San Francisco's justly famous sky line, the Embarcadero, the San Francisco Orpheum and many other nationally known portions of California's chief sea port are registered on celluloid as backgrounds for the intensely dramatic action of the story.

Filmland's Greatest Summer at Hand

Summer travel to California this year is certain to break all previous records. And judging from advance reports a large number of the travelers expect to take in the Monroe Doctrine Centennial which will be held in Exposition Park, Los Angeles, July 2-August 4, inclusive, in connection with the Motion Picture Exposition. All transcontinental railroads report that they have never had so many inquiries about summer rates to the Pacific Coast and Southern California in particular.

The engagement of R. H. Burnside, for eleven years producing director of the New York Hippodrome, to stage the mammoth spectacles in the new Los Angeles Coliseum, as a part of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial, is attracting nation-wide attention. Everyone who has gone to New York in the last decade has always made the Hippodrome one of the placed visited, no matter how busy he may have been. Those who saw "Better Times" there this year were amazed at the entertainment offered.

The man responsible for it was R. H. Burnside, and, he says he is going to surpass it in the production he will make for Los Angeles this summer. He is already in Southern California with his personal staff of experts from the Hippodrome. One of the things that will be put on is a revue of American history which will tell in pageantry the story of our country from the coming of Columbus down to the present. It will be done on such a scale as was never before attempted. Thousands of people will be used in the spectacle. The hundred motion picture studios are placing all of their skilled workers at the disposal of Mr. Burnside, so that even the spectacle of Imre Kiralfy will be outdone. These pageants will all be filmed for benefit of the future.

Dirt is flying in Exposition Park and the hammers are pounding as three shifts of builders have set themselves the problem of making a new construction record. Only eight weeks remain until the day for opening the Monroe Doctrine Centennial and in that time fifty bungalows of the pueblo Indian style of architecture must be completed. It is surprising how this miracle city is springing up. It almost suggests a mirage on the Enchanted Mesa.

Ground was broken during the past week for the first building on The Location. This will be the amusement thoroughfare of the Los Angeles exposition, differing in every respect from all other expositions. The Fox Film Corporation has taken the lead in getting its building started. Goldwyn, Famous Players-Lasky, Metro, First National and all of the rest of producers have interesting plans for being represented on The Location. The shows here will all be free, as the Monroe Doctrine Centennial has banned the idea of cheap displays and catch-penny devices for bilking the public.

The story of the Motion Picture Exposition was told via the air, on the evening of May 9th, between the hours of ten and eleven from Station "KFI." This was the first time in exposition history that such an announcement had ever been broadcasted. It means that countless thousands of persons who would not otherwise be reached, heard of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial. Among those on the program were Hobart Bosworth, Carrie Jacobs Bond, William Worthington and others.

There being forty-eight states in the Union and the duration of the forthcoming Monroe Doctrine Centennial being limited to thirty days, it is a problem how to provide each one of them with a special day at this big celebration. There are no more active organizations in Southern California than the various state societies, whose loyal sons and daughters lose no opportunity of getting together and singing the praises of their native habitat, even though they have left it.

A Picturesque Corner of the Exposition

Iowa, Indiana, Texas, Pennsylvania, Illinois, New York—in fact all of the forty-eight are represented here by unusually live groups which hold regular monthly meetings throughout the entire year, with a picnic or two thrown in for good measure. They have gone so far as to form a federation of these state societies with a central office and paid attendants. Here a register is kept, so that newcomers may be able to locate their old friends, no matter where they are in Southern California.

Realizing that many people will be coming to Los Angeles this summer from all parts of the country for the Motion Picture Exposition, which is to be held in connection with the Monroe Doctrine Centennial, the various state societies are eager to participate and they have made application for special days. These are to be assigned by President Walter J. Reynolds in the very near future, so as to give the different groups a chance to prepare their programs. With the heavy demand for time, there will probably be two assignments for certain days between July 2 and August 4.

Starts Life in a Circus, But Finds Life is no Circus

Lloyd Ingraham, one of the chief figures in the cast of "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's newest Metro production, has had a colorful professional career.

Mr. Ingraham was born in Rochelle, Illinois. His parents, circus people, died while he was an infant and he was brought up by his grandfather, David Navarro, associated with the P. T. Barnum circus. Mr. Navarro was recognized as the fastest ticket seller in the United States.

At 14 Mr. Ingraham left school to become a trap drummer with the Robert Buchanan repertoire company. A year later he became a member of the cast, playing the role of Mother Fadet, a witch character, in "Fanchon the Cricket." He became a leading man at 19 and remained in that position until he was 21.

Wearying of this work he entered musical comedy ranks, played in "Breezy Times," "Weary Willie Walker" and other productions. Then he went into stock work and for 12 years was recognized as one of the leading stock directors in the country, having charge of houses in San Francisco, Omaha and other cities.

In 1912 he directed his first motion picture at Niles, California, not far from San Francisco. It was "The Dance at Eagle Pass," written by himself. He made it in two days, and during the year that followed he made 59 more, all one reel in length.

In 1914 Mr. Ingraham acted in and directed pictures with Robert Leonard for Universal. A year later he went with D. W. Griffith for whom he directed Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Dorothy Gish, Douglas Fairbanks and others. He directed Colleen Moore in her first picture, "An Old Fashioned Young Man," featuring Robert Harron. "Hoodoo Ann" and "The Little Apache" were two of the pictures he made starring Miss Gish.

Mr. Ingraham has directed many of Douglas McLean's recent starring pictures including "Going Up," "Mary's Ankle," "What's Your Husband Doing?" "Let's Be Fashionable" and "The Jailbird."

He is playing the role of M. de Kercadiou in "Scaramouche" because Mr. Ingram made him understand that he could find no one else who fitted the role so well and because he himself felt a strong desire to play it. Upon the completion of this production Mr. Ingraham will begin the direction of another Douglas MacLean feature.

Others in the cast of "Scaramouche" include Alice Terry, Ramon Navarro, Lewis Stone, Edith Allen, William Humphrey, Julia Swayne Gordon, James Marcus, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Otto Matiesen, Carrie Clarke Ward, Bowditch "Smoke" Turner, George Seigman, Snitz Edwards and Joe Murphy.

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Maurice Tourneur has been spending the last week in San Francisco taking a much needed rest after his hard work directing "The Brass Bottle" just finished. Besides rest Mr. Tourneur says he also came north to get some new ideas before starting on his next picture.

Eric Van Stroheim has once more demonstrated his endless attention to detail by the addition a couple of weeks ago to the cast, or props, of "Greed" of a small black kitten. Von Stroheim decided that Miss Baker, the nice old maid of the story was the kind of a woman who would have a cat, so he went out himself, and bought a lively black kitten, promptly named by the crew, "Greed." So now little Greed contentedly lives on the set, in company with two canary birds and a bowl of gold fish, and plays his bits in the scenes with all the calm of an old actor. Fanny Midgley, who plays Miss Baker, is his special friend and is promising him a happy home on her place at Glendale when the picture is finished.

Florence Meehan landed in San Francisco last Thursday from the Orient with a half-million dollars worth of props and costumes for the production of "The Ten Commandments." It cost over seven thousand dollars in duty to get them into this country, and the newest article in the lot is an Indian robe three hundred years old.

Mrs. Frank Hayes and Juno, the beautiful dog of comedy fame, arrived in San Francisco by motor on Wednesday to join Frank Hayes. They have taken an apartment and will remain in town until Mr. Hayes finishes his part in Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed."

A. C. Christie, C. H. Christie, Mrs. Mary Christie, Miss Ann Christie, Neal Burns, Ellen Jarvis, Vera Steadman and Charlotte Gordon, all of the Christie Comedies, returned to San Francisco a few days ago and are doing location work on a picture in and near town.

Monte Blue spent a couple of days in San Francisco the first of last week, having come up with some recut film of "Brass" for the exchange. Monte has just finished playing, with Irene Rich, the leading role in a picture made at Universal City, by The Rellimeo Films, a local organization.

The Golden Gate Productions have moved their office from the Chronicle Building to the Blanche Laboratory Building at 331 Turk Street. They expect to be in active production in the very near future .

James McGee of the picture world of Los Angeles, sailed for the Orient from here on the President Cleveland on Friday last. He expects to visit China, Japan, the Philippine Islands and many other points on a combined business and pleasure trip.

Mrs. Thomas Ince and three little sons spent the week-end in San Francisco. Mrs. Lon Chaney was also in town. And Zasu Pitts, of the "Greed" cast, spent Sunday with her husband in the South.

San Francisco is to have one more beautiful picture theatre, as Carol A. Nathan, manager of the Universal Film Exchang announced last week that a fine new house to cost $400,000, will be built on the site o the present Frolic Theatre on Market Street which is to be torn down at once.

What Ho For the Rolling Main? On June 15th, the "Rambling Rajah" will sail away through the Golden Gate for a fifteen months tour around the world on a picture making expedition. The ship, which is one of the finest sailing yachts afloat, will be under the command of Captain Henry W. Lyons, Jr. son of Admiral Henry W. Lyons, U. S. N and himself a graduate of Annapolis, and a veteran of the World War. The Crew, aside from a few seasoned old tars, will consist of co-eds from the University of California and other colleges, besides a few doctors, lawyers, newspapermen, etc., and aside from their other duties and adventures they will form a picture making company, who hope to outdo Burton Holmes at his best, in travelogues and pictures of adventure. Seymour Jeliff will direct, and the ship is being especially refitted and supplied with a complete studio and laboratory equipment, also a large projection room where picture shows can be given while in ports. The project is being put through under the management of the Intrepid company, with offices in the Liberty Bank Building, of whom Ivor McFadden is an active member.

Robert Warwick, now starring at the Fulton Theatre in Oakland, will bring his season there to a close, in time to permit him to play the role of "Hippolytus" in Margaret Anglin's production of the tragedy, at the Greek Theatre at Berkeley, on May 19th.

Along New York's Rialto

By RAYMOND McKEE

NEW YORK, May 8.—Charlie Murray declares that he is slowly pining away for California, and if his hopes materialize, he will within the new moon park himself at some favored spot along Hollywood Boulevard. He's living now directly across the hall at the Algonquin from Conrad Nagel. As Charles leaves for his studio earlier than Conrad does, Charles sits at Nagel's door each morning long enough to read the Los Angeles papers which lie at the latter's door every morning. Sometimes there are a dozen Hollywoodites at a time gathered about the door to read the news from the old home town. Conrad must be working pretty hard, to sleep through it all.

May Collins, formerly of the studios, is now co-starring with Louis Mann and George Sidney at the Forty-Ninth Street Theatre.

"If Winter Comes," a play dramatized from the novel by A. S. M. Hutchinson and MacDonald Hastings, is at the Gaiety Theatre. Cyril Maude returns to the footlights as an appealing "Mark Sabre," the kindly intentioned, philosophical man whose good heart led him to befriend the young mother of an unsanctified baby, giving his unsympathetic wife a chance to think the worst of him and sue for divorce. The play is tenderly humorous and pathetic, and the adaptors have done the book and themselves credit.

The following plays, in the order of their openings, have enjoyed record runs and are still running on Broadway, some of them nearing the end of their second year: "Kiki," with Lenore Ulric; "Chauve Souris," Russian Life; "Abie's Irish Rose," a Jewish and Hibernian comedy; "Ziegfeld Follies," with Will Rogers; "Whispering Wives," nith no extra charge for murders over the wire; "The Old Soak," who never surrenders to prohibition; "The Gingham Girl," lots of fresh aid and doughnuts; "So This Is London," American squabs and British snobs. See these, at least.

Richard Barthelmess has purchased the rights to Rex Beach's new story, "Big Brother," which will run serially in Hearst's International.

Charles Hunt and Clarence Badger are engaging talent for "Potash and Perlmutter," the Jewish comedy which is to be done in pictures by Samuel Goldwyn, at the Fort Lee Studios.

Bryant Washburn and Elliott Dexter have formed their own companies in Boston. Each has a capital of $50,000.

Herbert Brenon is in town.

Ernest Truex has signed on the dotted line with Fox to star in his stage success, "Six Cylinder Love." Elmer Clifton will direct.

Betty Compson has sailed for London—and $50,000. That's the sum she will receive from an English firm for one picture.

Bob Vignola has returned from his trip around the world, and is preparing his new script, which, of course, will star Marion Davies.

Mrs. Fiske will be seen shortly under Belasco's management in St. John Ervine's light comedy, "Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary."

R. H. Burnside, who stages all of the Hippodrome shows, has left for Los Angeles, to superintend the staging of the historical pageant there, beginning July 2.

We understand that Eddie Cline hereafter will confine his puttees and megaphone to serious pictures. Eddie is always handing someone a laugh. Go to it, Eddie! Good luck!

Max Iinder has eloped with a prominent French society girl. A request has been sent to the New York police to arrest them, in order that they may be taken back to France to relatives. The couple are believed to be aboard an Atlantic liner, bound for America.

Alan Crosland, director of Cosmopolitan's "Enemies of Women," will direct "Under the Red Robe," the next Cosmo super feature. The cast will include Robert Mantell, John Charles Thomas, Alma Rubens, Genevieve Hamper, Ivan and Mary MacLaren and Rose Coughlan. The "Follies" beauties also will take part.

Physical Trainers and Good News

By RAY LEEK

To the already long list of studio experts who have to do with the making of a motion picture one more specialist has been added. "Physical trainer" is a title that may be seen on the doors of offices in many of the big studios, while gymnasiums are given as important a place in the construction of the new picture plants as are wardrobes, electrical departments or plaster shops.

At the Schulberg Studios, "Danny" Goodman, a star of the squared ring whose name is known wherever fight talk is heard, has been installed as trainer of not only the male, but feminine players as well. Daily workouts with gloves, weights and punching bag are a part of studio routine for all of the permanent members of the Schulberg playing staff, directors and even writers.

An early morning glimpse behind the doors of "Danny's" improvised conditioning shop on the Schulberg lot, would serve to dispel any illusions concerning the "soft" existence of players. Gaston Glass usually is devoting himself to the gloves to the discomfiture of his luckless opponent. Tom Forman is the only member of the directorial staff who questions Gaston's supremacy as a boxer. Sam Jaffe, production manager, finds time to settle little personal matters with his aides whenever differences arise.

Directors Gasnier and Schertzinger each spend an hour daily with "Danny's" gymnasium tools, while the blonde Olga Printzlau abandons her typewriter long enough to skip the rope and participate in the more feminine diversions that have been provided for her and the diminutive Ethel Shannon.

That Schulberg himself has faith in the daily routine he has mapped out for his players is proved by the fact that the most important of conferences never interferes with his own hour with Goodman.

Al Lichtman, returning from a tour of Europe capitals, brings news that ought to cheer American picture producers. Not only does he say that supremacy of the American film is being maintained, but American methods of handling and exhibiting our productions are being adopted. For instance, the old system of buying the product of various companies for a year in advance has been abandoned and productions now are sold on their merits alone. The result is that pictures are shown in the British Isles almost as soon as they are seen here. "Shadows," which now is running in American "key" cities, is being shown simultaneously in London theatres, according to the head of the Lichtman Corporation.

When in doubt take out an insurance policy. This slogan of the life insurance solicitor appears to have taken a firm hold on picture producers who are daily adding to the unique policies being written by companies willing to take unusual risks.

With Ben Turpin's eyes insured against normalcy, Charlie Chaplin's feet against the slightest sprain and Gloria Swanson's lower extremities eloquently described in a policy, it is said that Bull Montana's pride—his cauliflower ears—are about to undergo a similar protective ordeal.

But, while unusual talents and physical perfections and imperfections are the subject of big policies, hazards to life and limb appear to escape attention of the underwriters. Kenneth Harlan piloted an aeroplane from the clouds in a dizzy nose dive that wrecked the roof of a house the other day in the interests of Tom Forman's production, "The Broken Wing," with no insurance other than the generous policy that covers his every day activities.

Gaston Glass was forced to make two hazardous plunges through the flames of a burning building in the filming of "The Hero" some time ago without special insurance protection. And, although he was so severely burned that he was forced to go into a hospital for treatment, he collected no compensation on his policy.

Orville Caldwell, however, was more heavily insured while romping through the leading male role in Mae Murray's latest production, "The French Doll," involving no physical hazards, than any "stunt" man of the screen. The insurance, however, was to prevent possible loss to the costly production through illness or accident to the athletic Caldwell.

Interest in Theda Bara's proposed return to the screen is accepted as another evidence of the growing popularity of the modified vamp. Like Barbara La Marr, Nita Naldi, Ethel Shannon and others who enact the old-fashioned villainess roles with a new-fashioned display of humaness, Theda expects to become a new personality. While her future plans have not been announced at this writing, it is expected that her first picture will show a very much reformed Theda.

FILM TROUPE RETURNS FROM LONG STAY IN WILDS

After more than four months spent in the wilderness of the Canadian Rocky Mountains, and bringing a carload of valuable police dogs, malamutes and huskies with them, the Trimble-Murfin Company, which has been making the next two Strongheart starring vehicles under Laurence Trimble's direction, has returned to Hollywood.

Owing to a few shots to be made at Pincher Creek, on the Canada-Washington line, Trimble, Strongheart, Lady Julie and the leading man and woman, Harold Austin and Lillian Rich, will be another week in arriving, and when they do, work will start immediately on the interiors of "The Phantom Pack" and "White Fang." Trimble will work at the Ince Studios, where Jane Murfin is filming another Trimble-Murfin picture, "The Sign."

Among those who have returned are J. H. Hutty, business manager, Walter Perry, Jack J. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Barrell, Janet Trimble and her tutor Miss Grace Hussey, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Dreyer, Mr. and Mrs. John Burch, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Trimble and infant daughter born on location, Cyril Gardner and Ray Connell.

EUGENIE BESSERER IN NEW NEILAN FEATURE

Marshall Neilan announces the signing of Eugenie Besserer, noted character actress, to portray a peasant woman in his production just started, "The Rendezvous," with a Russian setting.

Although Miss Besserer has portrayed practically every type of character from a peasant woman to the grande dame, she says, "I much prefer the peasant characterization, for it is the life I knew in childhood. And what a child gains by observation can never be duplicated by a grown-up."

This marks Miss Besserer's second appearance with Neilan since he has been producing for Goldwyn. She portrayed the mother of Eleanor Boardman in "The Strangers' Banquet," and before that she was with Neilan as Wesley Barry's grandmother in "Penrod."

Miss Besserer just finished a very fine characterization of the old roue in "Youth Triumphant," and bidding became high for her services before Neilan signed her for "The Rendezvous."

KING OF SPAIN ENJOYS CALDWELL PRODUCTION

Fred Caldwell, author and director of "Night Life in Hollywood," received a wire from New York stating that King Alfonso of Spain has made a request to see "Night Life in Hollywood," which request was readily granted, and the picture was run for him and his royal family at the Palace Theatre in Madrid Spain, on May 1.

"MICKEY" NEILAN WINS THE ICED FRIED EGG

"Is it warm enough for you today?"

How many times were you asked this question this week?

For some people it is like asking them if they are comfortable while hanging from a chandelier by their toes.

Blanche Sweet, wearing a forty-pound costume in "In the Palace of the King" while the mercury was bursting thermometers to right and to left, was asked the "snappy" question forty-two times within an hour after she appeared on the set.

"If some person comes along and does not ask me, 'Is it warm enough for you?' I'll give them a diamond bracelet, a yacht, an automobile or any gift they select," confided Miss Sweet to her maid.

At this point her husband, "Mickey" Neilan, passed the set. "Hello, dear, how would you like some hot soup?" asked the director.

He won in a walk.

ROYAL RUSSIAN EXILE COMES TO FILMLAND

Another royal Russian exile is coming to Los Angeles.

His title indicates a rank of no less distinction than baron, as he is of the Von Bobrikoff family, Boyam von Bobrikoff, to be exact. He was a prominent figure in the court of the Czar but with the overthrow of royalty and the murder of the monarch he was forced to flee the wrath of the Bolsheviki. Sweden has since been his refuge.

Boyam's arrival should cause a flutter in blue-blooded circles. Or, perhaps, kennels is the preferable word. For Boyam von Bobrikoff is a dog. Among dogs, however, particularly Russian wolf hounds, he is an aristocrat of purest strain.

Boyam is to be brought here for Evelyn Graham, formerly a noted portrayer of Shakespearean roles in Sweden, now a member of the cast of "Ashes of Vengeance," the great historic romance of France starring Norma Talmadge which Joseph M. Schenck Productions are making for First National release.

GRASSBY CLAIMS LIGHT-WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP

Norman Kerry first claimed a record for the heaviest costume with an outfit which weighed 45 pounds, next came Lewis Stone with one weighing 60, and finally Niles Welch claimed the record with an outfit totaling 75 pounds. Let these actors argue out the matter of heavyweight costumes, says Bertram Thomas Grassby, but no one can dispute his claim to the lightest lightweight garment on record. Grassby, who is playing the part of Tut-Ankh-Amen in the William P. S. Earle production of that name, says if some of the garments he wears for the part were any lighter there wouldn't be any costumes at all. Director Earle insists upon portraying King Tut with such realism that Grassby claims three of his costumes together wouldn't make a good muffler on a cold day.

Bert has contracted three colds to date while wearing this scanty Egyption attire and his finally come to the conclusion that King Tut was neither poisoned nor assissinated, but died of pneumonia.

OIL CAUSES BUSTER TO BREAK SOME RECORDS

Right in the midst of the cutting of "The Three Ages," his latest and first big feature comedy for Joseph M. Schenck, Buster Keaton received word this week that his oil well on Signal Hill, Long Beach, Cal., had come in as a 2,500-barrel gusher.

Buster, when he received the news, was in the midst of dictating titles for the scenes in "The Three Ages" which shows a replica of the Colosseum in Rome.

"Give me a chariot," shouted Buster, "and step on the gas, I'm going to make it from the Colosseum to Long Beach in forty-five minutes flat. Tell Caesar, Marc Antony and Cleopatra to wait for me in the studio cutting room till I get back."

CHAMP CAMERAMAN WINS PLACE WITH BORZAGE

Arthur H. Jacobs announces that Chester Lyons is to remain as head cinematographer for the entire series of Frank Borzage Productions which are to be made in Hollywood and distributed through Associated First National Pictures, Inc. Bob Roberts, formerly assistant, becomes second cameraman.

Lyons is one of the foremost cinema artists in the industry and came with Borzage from the east where he photographed such features as "The Valley of Silent Men," "The Pride of Palomar," and "The 'Nth Commandment." He has just completed camera work on "Children of Dust," the current picture now in process of editing.

"We are prone to neglect crediting the cameraman for much of the success of the big pictures of today" states Borzage, who is highly delighted that his old cameraman is to remain with him.

Men and women wearing high leather boots, chaps, spurs, sombreros and other regalia which typifies the Western ranch people, present a distinct novelty around the Metro studios. All the members of the cast of "The Eagle's Feather," the new Metro all-star production are dressed in true wild Western style.

COMPLETES FILMING OF "THE SELF-MADE WIF

Production has just been co pleted at Universal City on "T Self- Made Wife," which was p duced with an all-star cast und the direction of Jack Dillion.

The film was adapted from t Elizabeth Alexander novel, pu lished first as a serial in the S urday Evening Post. Edward Lowe made a screen adaptati and Charles Kenyon wrote t scenario.

"The Self-Made Wife" is dramatic story of the experienc of a couple whose domestic ha piness was destroyed by weal because the wife was unable "keep pace" with her husban Their tastes and desires were t care while they were poor ar living in a small town. B after their oil well came in the moved to New York the man a quired the "big town" wa while his wife failed to progres mentally or socially.

The cast includes such we known players as Ethel Gre Terry, Virginia Ainsworth, Cra furd Kent. Phillips Smalley an Dorothy Cummings.

Jack Dillon, who directed th play, has directed many ou standing screen successes, i cluding "Sud," with Mary Pic ford.

JOHN BOWERS SIGNS LONG TERM LESSER CONTRAC

Not content with having thei stars all of the feminine form Principal Pictures Corporatio announce this week, the signin of John Bowers for a long-ter contract.

Bowers will begin his ne screen activities in the leadin male role of "The Winning o Barbara Worth," Harold Bel Wrights' popular story, which i soon to see the silver sheet.

The noted player will work opposite none other a celebrit than Florence Vidor who ha been cast to enact the role o Barbara in the desert story.

Bowers is regarded as one o the most popular of male lead ing men and his entry unde Principal Pictures' banner ha met with wide approval. "Th Winning of Barbara Worth" wil start immediately upon the re turn to Los Angeles of Edward F. Cline, the director, now i Arizona seeking suitable loca tions.

JACKIE'S "TOBY" CHANGED TO "CIRCUS DAYS" NOW

The title of Jackie Coogan's latest production for First National has been changed from "Toby Tyler" to "Circus Days."

With the traveling one-ring circus as a background, with all its spectacular and colorful appeal as atmosphere, the picture promises to show the diminutive star in the greatest role of his screen career.

The story is one that will find a ready response from everyone who ever enjoyed a visit to a circus—and that includes about every one of us.

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, MAY 12, 1923

ANOTHER FILM PROJECT IS LAUNCHED

Hollywood became the headquarters of a new production unit this week, when the Willie Hopkins Productions began the making of "Little Journeys to the Homes and Haunts of Eminent Poets and Authors."

At the offices of the new company, 1606 Winona Boulevard, it was made public that the "Little Journeys" will embrace twenty-six short features, each depicting the native surroundings of a famous poet, author or composer.

Ten countries were visited, many months and many thousands of dollars expended by Mr. Hopkins in filming the homes and haunts of the immortals. The sojourn in Scotland of Mr. Hopkins and his assistant staff yielded the backgrounds of Robert Burns, Sir Walter Scott and Harry Lauder; in England, Charles Dickens, Shakespeare, and Tennyson; in Spain, Cervantes and Ibanez in Germany, Wagner and Schiller; in France, Dumas and Victor Hugo; in Norway and Denmark, Hans Anderson and Ibsen; in Switzerland, Byron; in Italy, Dante, and in the United States, Washington Irving, James Whitcomb Riley and Mark Twain.

The producers of this fresh and novel series—which now is being assembled at the Standard Film Laboratories by Mr. Hopkins and his assistants and cinematographer, James T. Gibney—have found themselves ever since first rumor of their enterprise began to spread, in a dilemma. The demand for short subjects of the merit of "Little Journeys to the Homes and Haunts of Famous Poets and Authors" is so persistent that attempts have been made to persuade the Willie Hopkins Productions to release their output as soon as the first few units are assembled. The makers of the series feel, however, that to follow this suggestion would work against the unity of the whole, and so have had to take the stand of denial of immediate bookings of any one of the features, in the interest of preparing the full number of twenty-six in the finished manner the standard of the company insists upon.

JOSEPH GIRARD CAST IN WESTERN AT UNIVERSAL

Joseph Girard, veteran character actor who has played in countless feature and serials for Universal and other producing companies, is portraying a supporting role with Jack Hoxie in "Where Is This West?" at Universal City. Directed by George Marshall, the story by George C. Bull is a satirical comedy which extracts all the wind from the typical western romance.

Mary Philbin, the prize beauty who has astonished company executives with her remarkable portrayal of the leading feminine character in the spectacular "Merry-Go-Round," plays the lead opposite Hoxie. Others in the cast are Bernard Siegel, Slim Cole and Bob McKenzie.

McREA FILMS A TRIUMPH IN SIAM

The rites of the Temple of Wo-Fanu, which until now, no white man or oriental, unless he were a member of the Siamese priesthood ,has witnessed, have been filmed by Henry McRae, who left Hollywood several months ago at the head of a camera expedition.

Mr. McRae, whose aim it is to picture on the screen the off-the-beaten-track parts of the Far East, had to wait in Bangkok, in Siam, thirty-two days for a royal audience before he so much as could hope to broach the matter of setting a tripod within the sacred walls of Wo-Fanu.

This temple, lying far to the north of the Siamese capital, in the great teak forests, was said to be one of the few in the Mongolian countries to offer up human sacrifices. Worship in it is restricted to members of the two highest castes of Siamese.

Partly to disabuse the world outside Siam of belief in this grim legend, dispensation was granted Mr. McRae by the throne to photograph the ceremonies. These, he has written to his agents in Hollywood, are particularly impressive and weird. The priests, numbering seventeen, perform the entire ceremony in long gowns of pale green silk; they are masked and the rites are made doubly eeric by the fact that throughout no word is spoken, the offering to the god Wo-Fanu being submitted silently, with only the eloquence of gesture to indicate worship.

DULL IS ALLOWING NO DULLNESS AROUND HIM

Bunny Dull, newly appointed production manager for Arthur H. Jacobs, producer of Frank Borzage productions for Associated First National, has started things humming at the United Studios for Borzage's next picture which will go into camera work next week.

Already two stars have been signed. They are Virginia Pearson and Barbara Bedford. The rest of the all-star cast is being selected while Borzage is conferring with Mary O'Hara on the adaptation of the story which is to be put into continuity at once.

Settings have been started and Dull will have everything in readiness for the director to commence on time with Chester Lyons at the camera.

SET BUILDING SETS A PACE AMAZING

Big.
Bigger.
Biggest.

That's the way the Hollywood photoplay makers are building their sets these days. D. W. Griffith built the great banquet hall for "Intolerance." None of those who saw it will ever forget it. Douglas Fairbanks rivaled the "Intolerance" set with his castle banquet hall in "Robin Hood." Maurice Tourneur and Richard Walton Tully showed us the interior of Westminster Abbey. And in "Rupert of Hentzau" and "Earthbound" church interiors of vast spaciousness were featured.

Now comes Norma Talmadge with what is said to be the greatest interior set ever built Norma's set was erected for "Ashes of Vengeance" which is now being made in Hollywood for First National release. This set shows the interior of the Louvre ballroom in Paris as it was in 1572 on the eve of the Huguenot massacre.

Stephen Goosson, graduate of the Ecole des Beaux Arts of Paris, who constructed the "Eternal Flame" sets is also doing the architectural backgrounds for "Ashes of Vengeance." Mr. Goosson, who is concededly the greatest motion picture architect in the industry, has constructed at the United Studios a complete quarter of the Paris of the time of Charles IX and is busy on the plans for three French chateaux which soon will be erected.

SYLVIA SIGNS LONG TERM CONTRACT

Sylvia Breamer, famed Australian actress whose recent work on the screen has won for her considerable favorable comment in the picture industry, has signed a long-term contract to appear in forthcoming associated First National pictures.

Miss Breamer was signed almost directly after the completion of her last picture "The Girl of the Golden West," in which she appeared opposite J. Warren Kerrigan, in the title role.

It was her sterling work in this famous Belasco play, that virtually won for her the First National contract.

Her first appearance in an all-First National picture will be in the leading feminine role in "The Lord of Thundergate," Hershal Small's celebrated Japanese-American novel. In this play she will be seen as a white girl, who, brought up as Chinese, is sold into the household of a Japanese lord as a slave-wife.

The signing of Miss Breamer follows the announced intention of First National to contract only with players whose work has been of the highest order. She is the fourth famed young actress to come under the First National banner within the past few weeks. The first was Colleen Moore, one of the daintiest and most promising personalities acting for films today.

Miss Breamer, who had a wide experience on the stage in Australia, England and this country before coming into pictures five years ago, has played in many of the biggest recent film productions.

Her most notable work was in "The Girl of the Golden West," an Edwin Carewe First National production; "She Can't Have Everything," "Unconquerable," "Missing," "A House Divided," "My Lady's Garter," and many others.

Her stage career included feminine leads in these plays: "Bought and Paid For,' "Within the Law," "The Argyle Case," "Under Cover," and Bernard Shaw's "Major Barbara."

Finishes "Supreme Test"

Eugene Beaudino, formerly known as Eugene Borden, has just finished playing a leading role in "The Supreme Test," directed by Harry Revier at the Cosmosart Studios. Mr. Beaudino has been on the west coast only a month.

RISE FROM ACTOR TO PRODUCTION CHIEF RAPID

To promote one's self from actor to director is quite common. In fact, almost every actor aspires to sometime become a famous director.

But the vast space between the position of actor to production manager is one that isn't often spanned. Therefore, Ashton Dearholt, production manager for the Ben Wilson Productions, deserves a bit of credit.

Mr. Dearholt has held his present position the past four years, but prior to that time, he will be remembered as a popular featured player in Universal, Goldwyn and American Films. A few years ago, shortly before he turned to the work behind the cameras, he was the victim of an unfortunate accident. A large shot of flash powder exploded, causing the actor's hands to be disfigured and discolored.

At the present time, Mr. Dearholt is supervising production of the latest Ben Wilson feature, "Mine to Keep," with an all-star cast including Bryant Washburn, Mrs. Bryant Washburn, Wheeler Oakman, Charlotte Stevens, Kate Lester, Harry Dunkinson, Patty and Mickey Moore and Peaches Jackson.

TWO OF "ROBIN HOOD" CAST IN "BRASS BOTTLE"

Maurice Tourneur has drawn from the casts of the season's two most pretentious productions for players to enact the leading parts in his newest production for M. C. Levee, "The Brass Bottle."

From the cast of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," Tourneur selected Sam De Grasse, who did the cruel King John and Roy Corliss, whose portrayal of the jester attracted much favorable comment. In "The Brass Bottle," De Grasse again appears as a King—King Solomon—and Corliss as "The Evil Eye," an eerie creature of the spirit world.

Ernest Torrence and Tully Marshall are two other actors in a recent screen triumph, who appear in the Tourneur picture. Torrence as the eccentric scout and Marshall as the drunken trapper in "The Covered Wagon" will long be remembered. In "The Brass Bottle," they have characters that are expected to prove fully as distinctive as their respective portrayals in the big Western drama.

Started as Trap Drummer

Lloyd Ingraham, one of the screen artists in "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's newest Metro production, was the trap drummer in the Robert Buchanan repertoire company at 15 and the leading man at 19.

CLEAN PICTURES IS SLOGAN OF NEW COMPANY

If there is any truth in the report that sex pictures have had their day and that exhibitors and the theatergoing public are now demanding clean, wholesome stories for their entertainment, then the Mission Film Company will undoubtedly score a decided hit with their latest production, "The Barefoot Boy," which is a virile drama of rural life, absolutely devoid of vulgarism or any suggestive situations.

"Members of the motion picture industry in general," declares Leon Rice, president of the company, "believe that every man, woman and child in the country is a movie 'fan.' However, I have found upon investigation that less than one-half of the population are attending motion picture theaters at the present time. The reason for this falling off in attendance is because the sex picture is not their idea of entertainment.

"When parents take their children to view a picture of this kind, it is mighty embarassing to them when the show is over to face a barrage of questions from the youngsters as to this, that and the other thing concerning the picture. Therefore, rather than shock the morality of their children, they stay away from the theater and seek entertainment elsewhere."

Mr. Rice believes that the box-office receipts of the theater will be materially increased if clean stories are provided for the public's entertainment and that the great number of persons who were formerly motion picture fans" will again became boosters of the silent drama.

"The Barefoot Boy" is being directed by David Kirkland, who has to his credit such well known pictures as "Reported Missing," "The Virtuous Vamp" and other pictures made under the banner of Selznick.

A notable cast has been engaged for the principal roles in the story and include such favorites as John Bowers, Marjorie Daw, Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton, Sylvia Breamer, Frankie Lee, Otis Harlan, Harry Todd, Virginia True Boardman and many others.

The Mission Film Company has recently been reorganized and besides Mr. Rice the new officers are D. W. Pollard, vice-president; D. G. Havermale, secretary and treasurer; Norman Walker, business manager, and DeWitte Hagar, production manager.

"The Barefoot Boy" is now in production at the Fine Arts studios. David Abel is cinematographer and Charles Hamm is assistant to Director Kirkland.

MOST OF ACTOR'S FAN MAIL FROM OLDER WOMEN

One would think the fan-mail to a dashing young star like Johnnie Walker would consist mostly of a deluge of mash-notes from movie-stricken girls.

Contrary to that belief, he receives seventy-five per cent of his "fan" letters from mothers; some young, some middle-aged, but mostly from good old gray-haired mothers.

And there's a reason!

The photoplay in which Johnnie Walker undoubtedly scored his greatest success was "Over the Hill," in which he portrayed a most sympathetic role,—that of the younger brother who stirred the hearts of every feminine theatergoer by the manner in which he bestowed such loving affection upon his neglected mother.

Ever since the release of "Over the Hill," Mr. Walker has received hundreds of letters each week from mothers who viewed that picture; letters that bespeak of a similar occurence in the lives of the authors; bits of missives that tell of a son who donned the never-to-be-forgotten khaki, and who will never return.

GLADYS WALTON'S NEXT FEATURE DECIDED ON

Gladys Walton's next starring vehicle for Universal will be a screen adaptation of the popular novel "The White Cat," by Gelett Burgess.

Production is due to start soon on the play, which will be filmed under the title, "The Untameable." Herbert Blache, who recently finished the direction of Herbert Rawlinson in "Fools and Riches," will direct the production.

The story centers around a girl with a dual personality, which amounts virtually to a different identity. One personality in that of a sweet, charming and lovable girl. The other presents a character vicious and cruel.

Filming of the play will start as soon as Fred Datig, casting director, completes the casting of the supporting players.

Noted Art Director Engaged

E. R. Hickson, one of filmland's most noted art directors, declares the current Ben Wilson production, "Mine to Keep," now in the course of filming, will cause much comment upon its general release. An unlimited amount of care is being taken in an effort to display many new phases of art work in this production.

CONSTANCE WANTS TO PLAY STRONG EMOTIONS

What's Constance Talmadge doing these days?

Well, Constance is feeling sort a blue, to tell the truth.

She has several reasons. For one thing they are making her play a "dulcy" in her latest picture.

You don't know what a "dulcy" is? Well, a dulcy is Hollywood slang for "dumbell."

"I don't want to be a dulcy," says Constance. "I want to play what they call strong, emotional roles. You know: I want to be a tiger woman with a long stiletto, who meets a sheik out in the desert under the Egyptian moon. But, no, I must always be a comedienne. What a life!"

Constance's latest comedy is "Dulcy," and in it the Joseph M. Schenck star plays the role of a wife who insists on meddling in her husband's affairs to help him but who instead presents hubby with a peck basket full of trouble. Sidney Franklin is directing "Dulcy" for Associated First National release.

Constance also is bemoaning the fact that a birthday present ordered for her hasn't arrived—probably won't arrive for many months yet. The present is a big automobile selected for her by Joseph M. Schenck. The factory was so busy it couldn't fill the order in time for Constance's birthday which came on April 19th.

Connie's third reason for feeling blue is that she must work steadily all during the month of May on one set at the Schenck studios on the United lot in Hollywood. No more traveling about all over the state of California for Connie. From now on it's 8 a. m. until 10 and 11 p. m. each day. Even the stars must conform to these hateful orders from "the chief" to "cut those production costs."

Schlank to Travel

For the second time during the current year President Morris R. Schlank of the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., will head eastward about June first from his Hollywood headquarters to visit practically every exchange centre in the country. One of Mr. Schlank's main objects for making the trip, he says, is to introduce the first production filmed by the Rocky Mountain Productions, Inc., "The Dangerous Trail," a five-part outdoor mystery story featuring Irene Rich, Noah Beery and Tully Marshall.

George Rizard is photographing the Metro all-star production of "The Eagle's Feather" for Metro. Mr. Rizard was formerly cameraman for Charles Ray.

WHEREIN BIRTHDAY CAKE IS A "POOL"

All for one. One for all.

The three Talmadge sisters are practising the D'Artagan motto this week at the Joseph M. Schenck office on the United lot in Hollywood.

All three of the Talmadge sisters had birthdays during the past three weeks. First, on April 19th, came Constance's anniversary. On April 29th Natalie Talmadge (Mrs. Buster Keaton) celebrated and on May 2nd Norma Talmadge gave a party on the set where she is now making "Ashes of Vengeance."

Norma's birthday party was intended to serve as a joint celebration for all three sisters.

"When I was a very little girl," said Norma, "we three girls had so many squabbles with each other over our three separate birthday parties which came together within a fortnight that mother finally decided to give us one birthday party on my anniversary, I being the oldest by a year's margin.

"At this big party we three girls invited all our little Brooklyn playmates and cut a monster cake. We have kept that custom of one cake for all and all for one cake ever since. And like in the old days we always pool our candles and put them all on one cake.

"We have seen the total of those candles growing with startling rapidity. Don't tell enyone, but on this year's cake there were 65 candles! Just how many belong to Natalie, how many to Constance and how many to me you'll have to guess. We used to fight in the old days over our candles but now none of us will admit to 'owning" more than sixteen."

EXPOSITION OPENS AN OFFICE IN NEW YORK

New York offices for the Monroe Doctrine Centennial have been opened with Frederick H. Elliott in charge. Until recently, Mr. Elliott was executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, when the organization presided over by Will H. Hays took over his work. Mr. Elliott will serve as Eastern representative of the Motion Picture Exposition, in which their is steadily increasing interest because of its novelty. Many industries of the Atlantic seaboard are planning to make exhibits because of the plan to make displays on motor-trucks and by means of floats that will be filmed and shown all over the world, at the close of the exposition.

FILM STARLET PLANNING TO BUILD NUT FACTORY

Coy Watson, ten-year-old film artist who is one of filmland's busiest youngsters and who scored a decided hit with his brilliant performance in Earle Williams' recent release, "You Never Know," and equal success for his interpretation of a difficult role in Lloyd "Ham" Hamilton's "No Luck," is spending the money he earns in motion pictures in a very wise manner.

The youngster, like many of his older screen brothers and sisters, has got the "real estate bug" and is putting all available cash into the purchase of land in and around Hollywood. His latest investment is in a lot near Universal City.

Asked what he planned to do with this piece of property, young Watson replied, "I'm going to build a nut factory. It has three walnut trees on it."

GLORIA FINISHES AND RUSHES TO NEW YORK

After more than two months actual labor, "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," the Sam Wood-Paramount production starring Gloria Swanson, has come to an end. It is now in the hands of director Wood in the cutting room, where it is being cut down to feature length.

This is declared to be Miss Swanson's most elaborate picture since she joined Paramount Pictures several years ago. It contains as features a vision sequence that brings to the screen the fairy tale of "Bluebeard." This is an almost uncanny series of colorful scenes. An Egyptian garden party, in which Miss Swanson performs a mnmmy dance, is another feature. She is wrapped in hundreds of feet of silk ribbon and is brought into the center of the party in a mummy case, carried by Nubian slaves. Lifted from the case, she stands while dancing girls, seizing ends of the ribbon, lightly circle her and remove the tight binding, leaving Miss Swanson clad in a wonderful costume of the time of Cleopatra.

Miss Swanson left Friday for New York City, where she will make "Zaza" under the direction of Allan Dwan, at the Famous Players-Lasky Long Island studio. Later Director Wood will also go to New York, where he will produce "His Children's Children" for Paramount with a cast yet to be chosen.

Martha Mattox, the well-known character actress, who is seen in the Universal-Jewel, "Bavu," as the cruel Bolshevik woman, is enjoying a short period of rest between engagements.

SO EVEN A SAFE ISN'T SAFE IN PICTURES

The next time Edward Sloman films a scene in which a safe figures in the action, he swears he will have an ex-safeblower or a sledge hammer on the set before he even starts the rehearsal.

And here's the reason.

Mr. Sloman was busily engaged in the filming of a scene for "The Eagle's Feather," a Metro all-star picturization of Katharine Newlin Burt's story.

Mary Alden was kneeling in front of a small safe in the office of a Western ranch. As the camera clicked, she was expected to hurriedly apply the combination and swing the iron door open.

Now it is one of the customs of picture making that all safes used have their combinations adjusted so that they will never actually lock. So, during the rehearsal, the safe opened with perfect ease.

But when the scene was taken, Miss Alden supposedly applied her combination only to find that the door refused to open. In some strange manner the tumblers had slipped and the safe was actually as securely locked as it was supposed to be. And no amount of tinkering could open it.

So while Mr. Sloman stormed at the delay, it was necessary to bring another safe from the property department before the scene could be retaken.

Appearing in "The Eagle's Feather" are Mary Alden, James Kirkwood, Elinor Fair, Lester Cuneo, Barbara La Marr, George Seigman, William Orlamond and Adolph Menjou.

Winifred Dunn prepared the continuity.

GRAF TO MAKE 2 MORE PICTURES FOR METRO

Max Graf, supervising director of the Max Graf Productions for Metro, is one of the busiest forces in the motion picture industry. Mr Graf has nearly completed the cutting of "The Fog," produced at the San Mateo Studios and is now engaged with Tom Hopkins in titling the film. In addition to this he is adapting and putting into continuity his next production, David Graham Phillips' "The Grain of Dust" starring Mildred Harris, shooting to commence June 15th. This will be followed by "The Soul Thief," an original by Mr. Graf.

His production plans include two units, with three specials for each, for he announces that he will no longer make program pictures, but super specials on the same scope as "The Fog" which ran into big expenditure, with all star cast.

While Mr. Graf has settled definitely on having one unit at San Mateo, from present indications the second unit will be operated at the Metro Studios, although this is not positive. The producer is leaving in a few days for New York where he will look over new productions and will purchase the scenario rights to enough famous books to keep his cameras busy for the next two years.

FRENCH AVIATRIX FLIES WITH RECORD-BREAKERS

Probably the first person to welcome Lieutenants Kelly and McReady, the coast-to-coast army fliers, to the western rim of the country was Mlle. Andree Peyre, the French aviatrix, now in Hollywood to fulfill motion picture contracts.

Mlle. Peyre, it became known this week, flew from Hollywood over the desert to Barstow, when she learned by bulletins of the advent of the T-2, and there circled about until the giant army monoplane came out of the sky from the east. From Barstow to Los Angeles, Mlle. Peyre flew with the record-breakers, ready to act as pilot should Kelly and McReady, then so near their goal, make a mistake and vary from the course at the last.

Rarely has a more striking example of sportsmanship been found than this of Mlle. Peyre, for it had been her aim, until the Government aviators turned the trick, to make the coast-to-coast non-stop hop herself. Indeed she had been ready for some time, and had delayed her attempt—which was to have been made in a specially constructed Farman—in deference to the official trial.

WYOMING CAPITAL BACK OF NEW PRODUCTION UNIT

Financed by a group of Cheyenne, Wyoming, capitalists, the Rocky Mountain Productions, Inc., is the latest film producing concern to enter the independent field.

The Rocky Mountain concern will center all its producing activities in Hollywood.

Distribution will be via the states right market through the Anchor Film Distributors, Hollywood, of which Morris R. Schlank is president.

The Rocky Mountain firm has already finished its first production, "The Dangerous Trail," a six-part "special" with an all-star cast, including Irene Rich, Noah Beery, Tully Marshall, William Lowry, Jack Curtis, Jane Tallent and Fred Hank.

In addition to the above production the Rocky Mountain productions will film a series of eight pictures featuring Bill Patton, the well known outdoor star. The first two of this series are now in production under the personal supervision of Alvin J. Neitz, who has been appointed director-general of the new organization.

F. W. Raymond, secretary-treasurer of the Rocky Mountain productions, will have charge of the local plant.

Lord Pat Glerawly, son of the Earl and Lady of Annessley of London, has arrived in Hollywood with a motion picture career in view.

Lord Glerawly is 6 feet high, blonde, very handsome, and the possessor of the Victoria Cross and several other medals which he won at the Dardanelles. He was a lieutenant in the British army and was wounded at the famous Turkish seige.

Lord Glerawly's mother, Lady Annessley, was called "the most beautiful titled woman in the world." She was particularly well known in English social circles and at one time played the lead in amateur theatricals. It is from her, Lord Glerawly says, that he inherited his love for theatricals.

Lord Glerawly is playing a small part in "Six Days" at the Goldwyn Studios. It was written by Elinor Glyn, an Englishwoman, and is being directed by Charles Brabin, an Englishman.

Bobby Vernon is preparing to film the initial comedy under his new contract with Christie Comedies, with whom he has been affiliated for several years.

Dorothy Manners is said to have scored a decided triumph for the manner in which she portrayed the leading feminine role in Charles (Buck) Jones' latest William Fox feature, "Snowdrift."

BREAKING INTO MOVIES AN EASY JOB FOR DELL

Dell Boone, in private life Mrs. Niles Welch, who is playing one of the leading roles in the Robertson Cole production, "Blow Your Own Horn," being directed by James Horne ,is another one of those Southern belles who have won success upon the screen. Miss Boone hails from Springfield, Mo., and contrary to the usual custom she had no trouble at all in breaking into the films. After two years of stage experience she one day journeyed to New York and at the first studio at which she applied was given a part in a production being made by William P. S. Earle, a director noted for his willingness to give newcomers a chance upon the screen. Dell made good and in a short time was advanced to leading roles. In "Blow Your Own Horn," she has one of the best parts of her career.

HUNTERS TAKE THEIR OWN GAME WITH THEM

When the Charles J. Brabin party went shooting at Sherwood Forest, near Lake Turas, they took their own game with them.

There were 14 pheasants, a flock of pigeons, and the nucleus of a rabbit farm.

With the exception of one pheasant that dropped dead with fright in the prop boy's hands when the guns were first fired, there were no casualties.

Thirteen pheasants and most of the pigeons were brought back to Goldwyn studio. The pigeons are still flying about Sherwood Forest.

The scenes were being made for Elinor Glyn's story, "Six Days." Corinne Griffith, Evelyn Walsh Hall and Claude King were the principal members of the shooting party.

WORLD CONDENSED INTO NARROW STUDIO SPACE

Goldwyn studios' newest stage, and incidentally the largest one in the world, is housing a section of mediaeval Spain, a corner of frozen Russia and scenes in sunny France just now.

In one corner Emmett Flynn is directing scenes in the palace of King Philip II, of Spain, and Blanche Sweet, Hobart Bosworth and Pauline Starke are garbed in sixteenth-century Spanish costumes.

Just a few steps away Marshall Neilan is directing "The Rendezvous," a story of Russia, and Conrad Nagel, Lucille Ricksen, Elmo Lincoln, Emmett Corrigan and Sydney Chaplin are stalking about as Siberian peasants.

Down in the corner of the vast building, Corinne Griffith, Frank Mayo and Myrtle Stedman are in the midst of scenes laid in modern-day France. The picture is "Six Days," being directed from the Elinor Glyn story by Charles Brabin.

HERE'S LATEST DOPE ON WOMEN'S FASHIONS

Dame Fashion has lifted her attention from flesh colored stockings and short skirt problems, and her next order will be to bring into vogue flaring collars and fanciful neckwear.

This is according to Sophie Wachner, director of costumes for Goldwyn pictures.

Deep -V-cut backs and present decollete modes will vanish from the costumes of next season's fashionably gowned women, she says. Women with beautiful throats, rather than women with pretty ankles, will be the belles.

Miss Wachner says that the style change is due entirely to the influence of the screen, which recently has offered so many beautifully dressed stories of the picturesque periods of Europe a few centuries ago.

There will be no return to the homely neckwear and high collars of the "leg of mutton" sleeve period, Miss Wachner adds. She says next season's styles will merely revive the most beautiful bits of finery were worn in the sixteenth century, with a few modern changes.

WALTER LONG WILL BE A BROKEN-DOWN PUGILIST

Walter Long, one of the screen's foremost character actors, has been engaged by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., to play a prominent part in "The Huntress," a picturization of Hulbert Footner's famous story, production of which will begin at the United Studios during the coming week.

Long has been engaged to enact the role of a broken-down prize-fighter.

Much of the dramatic action of the play devolves on this well known player. In one of the most thrilling scenes of the picture he engages in a rough and tumble fight, which from every indication promises to be epoch-making for realism and intensity.

Long's screen career as a "heavy" covers more than fourteen years, during which time he has appeared in some of the film's most notable successes. He has played almost every characterization imaginable.

His most recent part was in Maurice Tourneur's "Isle of Lost Ships," a First National picture in which he played the part of a brutal sea captain. He was "Gus" in "The Birth of a Nation" and played similarly heavy parts in "Intolerance," "Joan the Woman,' "The Sheik," "Blood and Sand," and "The Dictator."

Long is a native of Nashua, N. H., and before going into pictures had an extensive career on the stage.

Others who have been engaged for parts in "The Huntress,' are Colleen Moore and Lloyd Hughes in the leading roles, Russell Simpson and Snitz Edwards.

CALDWELL GETS BIG MILLION-DOLLAR RELEASING CONTRACT

After finishing two pictures for the American Releasing Corporation, titled "The Bishop of Hollywood," and "The Sheik of Hollywood," The Fred Caldwell Company has secured a releasing contract in which a million dollars is involved. The contract in which a million dollars is involved. The contract between Fred Caldwell and the American Releasing Corporation, according to details just made public, calls for ten pictures to be made independently, and distributed through the latter organization.

The productions will be created from original stories dealing with Hollywood on an elaborate scale. The continuities will be written by J. Stewart Woodhouse, with an all-star cast. The pictures will be distributed under the trade banner of L. K. C. Productions, and the director will not be limited as to time or elaboration on his subjects.

Director Caldwell will be remembered for his "Night Life In Hollywood."

LEE SELECTS STORY FOR HIS NEW FOX SERIES

First of the new series of Rowland V. Lee productions for Fox will be a photoplay based upon Gouverneur Morris's celebrated short story "You Can't Get Away With It." This was announced this week by the director himself.

Production of the picture will begin in about a month or as soon as the scenario, now being written by Robert N. Lee, is completed, and the cast assembled.

The title is a quotation of the dictum of one of the principal characters in the story, a middle-aged married man who—when he made an unconventional proposal to a girl—warns her that an arrangement outside the moral code of man cannot be happy. Despite the frank admonition, "You can't get away with it," the girl takes the chance. The question of whether the man is right in his prophesy or not constitutes the photodrama.

The same care in casting as marked Mr. Lee's previous big picture, "Alice Adams"—a visualization of Booth Tarkington's prize novel—will obtain in the selection of players for "You Can't Get Away With It."

Harron Supports Connie

John Harron, brother of the late Robert Harron, has an important part in Constance Talmadge's latest comedy, "Dulcy," now being filmed under the direction of Sidney Franklin for First National. Harron was featured recently in "The Supreme Test' 'and also had important roles in "Westbound Limited," "Hand Me Down," and "Through the Back Door."

TWO MOVIE ROLES MAKE BIG JUMP FOR ACTRESS

From fifteenth century underworld Paris to modern New York is the change of atmosphere made in one day by Gladys Brockwell at Universal City.

Miss Brockwell completed a principal character role as the mother of Esmeralda—Patsy Ruth Miller—in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the spectacle play starring Lon Chaney, and was put before the camera immediately in Baby Peggy's first Universal-Jewel starring feature, "Wanted, A Home," which King Baggot is directing.

"Your real work in the Baby Peggy picture doesn't begin for two or three weeks, "Fred Datig, casting director, and Baggot told her, "but there is one scene that should be made right away to keep from holding up the first sequences of the story. Then you can rest for two weeks."

So she finished playing the Hugo character at noon and by two o'clock in the afternoon she was standing on a "New York dock" at Universal City. Now she rests for a time until the Baggot opus gets further along in production.

LOUISE ENGAGED FOR 3RD TIME BY WARNERS

Louise Fazenda, comedy queen, has signed on the dotted line for one of the leading roles in "The Gold Diggers," a Warner Brothers production which Harry Beaumont will direct. Miss Fazenda is cast as "Mabel," most active of the "gold diggers,' 'a role created on the speaking stage by Jobyna Howland.

Search throughout the East revealed no one who could negotiate the part, then the chorus of Warner brothers and Harry Beaumont said: "Louise Fazenda is the only person who can play 'Mabel.'"

Miss Fazenda will wear marvelous gowns, which she is already selecting. "The Gold Diggers" will make her third appearance in Warner Brothers productions following close upon her work in "Main Street" and "The Beautiful and Damned."

Higby Keeps Busy

As soon as Wilbur Higby had finished work on the Associated Authors production, "Richard The Lion Hearted," in the role of De Vaux he was signed by the Richard Thomas Productions. Mr. Higby having had thirty years of stage experience is very well fitted to carry heavy character parts. His ability has been recognized by many prominent directors in casting for pictures that demand an intimate knowledge and understanding of dramatic acting.

POLA TO FOLLOW "THE CHEAT" WITH "THE SPANISH DANCER"

With "The Cheat" practically completed, save for a few minor shots and the cutting and assembling, it is possible to form an estimate of its quality and those at the studio who have seen the rough version of the Pola Negri picture are lavishing in praise. It is declared to be the most vivid characterization that the Polish star has as yet offered the public. Paramount has outdone itself in surrounding her with the most effective settings, a powerful cast and costume effects that are both novel and beautiful.

The fact that Hector Turnbull's striking drama was once before produced, years ago, and has ever since been pointed out as a model for ambitious scenario writers and directors, indicates the dramatic strength of the story.

The production on this occasion is by George Fitzmaurice and Ouida Bergere is responsible for the scenario. The many fine achievements of these two film experts in their respective fields, is another evidence of the quality which may be expected in "The Cheat."

Then Jack Holt, full fledged and immensely popular Paramount star, was chosen to play the featured role of husband in the picture.

Charles deRoche, the young French actor, is in the support as the villian, an East Indian prince instead of a Japanese as in the older version.

Two of the greatest dramatic situations ever employed on the screen are to be found in the picture—that when Pola Negri as the wife is branded by deRoche as the villain to indicate that she is his property; and the courtroom scene, where in order to save her husband from prison for the shooting of the Hindu prince, which she herself did, the star bares her shoulder and displays the scar—the brand of the Hindu. Immediately a riot ensues but the verdict is set aside.

The beauty of gowns is exemplified in a marked degree. The episodes where Miss Negri selects her trouseau afford opportunity for a veritable pageant of fashion. Her gowns designed by Howard Greer, are nothing short of exquisite—daring, unconventional and of the most superb materials.

But it is in the acting of her difficult role that Pola Negri will again prove the possession of that fire, verve, power and magnetism which have made her name a household word abroad and at home. To see her in the courtroom scene where she makes her confession, involving shame, guilt and despair, is to see a form of dramatic expression that takes part of its greatness from the European school and is tempered sufficiently to our standards to be thoroughly understandable by any class of audience.

In gentler moments, she exhibits rare restraint in direct contrast to the vividness of the emotional scenes. Versatile to a degree she has accomplished a fine piece of work that critics are certain to approve.

A well earned rest is now being enjoyed by the star who will then embark on another lustrous production—"The Spanish Dancer"—with a cast, costumes and sets heretofore unparalleled in magnificence. This will be a Herbert Brenon production and the adaptation of the story of "Don Coesar deBazan" is by June Mathis and Beulah Marie Dix.

Arthur Edmund Carew as Svengali in "Trilby." Mr. Carew's characterization in this picture. and also his make-up is considered superb

NEW 'U' FEATURE BASED ON NOVEL ANGLE OF LAW

What would be the legal status of a man who died by the state's will and after the coroner's verdict was signed, was brought back to life by a miracle? Would he be legally dead or alive?

That is exactly the question considered in "Legally Dead," the novel motion picture which is being made at Universal City with Milton Sills in the leading male role and Claire Adams, Joseph Girard, Herbert Fortier, Margaret Campbell and others in supporting roles.

Charles Furthman wrote the story, which promises to be a sensation in the novelty story class because of the remarkable importance of science's new wonder, adrenalin, by the use of which dead people are brought back to life. Adrenalin today is robbing the graves, and such an awesome discovery must needs present a motion picture with unusual story possibilities.

TWO MOVIE ROLES

GORE TO BUILD NEW 1000-SEAT THEATRE HERE

Upon his return from New York, Michael Gore, president of West Coast Theaters' Inc., closed a deal with J. C. Baddeley, Los Angeles realter, for the immediate construction of a new theater to be situated on York Boulevard between 51st and 52nd streets.

The investment of the enterprise will be in excess of $160,000, building ground and theater construction estimated at $100,000 while the theater circuit will spend over $60,000 in the furnishing and decorating.

Ground was broken this week, and the theater, of 1000 seat capacity, is expected ready for opening towards the end of the season. Architectural design is to be Egyptian, and Michael Gore states the new house will be the most magnificent neighborhood theater in the state. A $20,000 pipe organ is to be a feature of the installations. 250 Morris chairs will form the loge circle.

The new theater will be called the "Jolene" in honor of the little 3-year-old daughter of J. C. Baddeley.

Spier is Engaged

Richard Spier has been engaged by officers of the West Coast Theaters Inc., for an executive position, to take charge of the publicity and advertising department of this vast string of houses, now stretching from San Diego north above San Francisco. Spier was formerly with the West Coast firm, during the first acquisition of theaters and formation of the circuit.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

A. L. Gore Vacationing

A. L. Gore, Secretary of West Coast Theaters, Inc., is vacationing at Murietta Hot Springs. The genial theaterowner handled the huge business of the circuit during the absence of his brother Michael Gore and Vice-President Sol Lesser in New York City.

Completes New Home

The new 1800 seat home being built by West Theaters Inc., in San Pedro, Calif., is nearing completion. It stands as a monument to architectural inventiveness, having two entrances cojoining directly into the foyer. The theater will have a huge stage for accomodation of road shows and vaudeville acts. "First National" pictures will be presented.

Norma is Back

Norma Talmadge has returned to Los Angeles from the Mathewson ranch fifty miles out of the city, where the Battle of Jarnac was filmed for her latest production, "Ashes of Vengeance." More than 2,000 horses and cavaliers of the time of Charles IX of France took part in these scenes which were directed by Frank Lloyd. "Ashes of Vengeance" will be released by Joseph M. Schenck through Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Dcteetive Visits Stars

William J. Burns, internationally famous detective, visited Constance and Norma Talmadge at the Joseph M. Schenck studios in Hollywood this week. "Every man for himself," shouted Sidney Franklin, Constance's director, when Mr. Burns appeared "on the set." After watching the filming of some scenes from "Dulcy," Connie's latest comedy, Mr. Burns attended a preview of "Within the Law," the famous stage play which has been finished for the screen with Norma Talmadge in the principal role.

In a Blaze of Generosity

Carmelita Geraghty believes in leaving a favorable last impression. She rose to great heights as an obliging friend Saturday in the Cosmopolitan film, "The Daughter of Mother McGinn," where she is cast as heiress, when she conducted Colleen Moore, star of the production through the basement of her mansion, thus giving her a fine idea of easy entrances and exits for a midnight robbery later! With this final generosity, Miss Geraghty completed her work in the picture. From the Goldwyn Studios she immediately went to Lasky's where she has been working in "Hollywood."

Bureaus Consolidate

Harry St. Alwyn, manager of the Service Bureau, and Dave Allen, manager of the Screen Talent, have consolidated and their two talent-supplying agencies are now being operated as one unit. The new arrangement was entered into last Monday, and thus early it is said to be successful.

Chaplin In Comedy Role

The only humorous note in Marshall Neilan's intense drama, "The Rendezvous," now being produced at the Goldwyn studio, will be supplied by Sydney Chaplin, brother of the illustrious Charley. In the part of an English "Tommy" stationed in Russia, Syd is in his element and under Neilan's direction, is expected to add new laurels to the name of Chaplin.

Comedy Route is Sure

Add to the list of girls who have received their start up the movie ladder through the one-reel comedy the name of Peggy O'Day, now being featured in the serial "The Fighting Skipper." Betty Compson, Bebe Daniels, Louise Fazenda, Mabel Normand, Mary Thurman and many others all broke into the films via comics and are now making names for themselves in feature production.

Mestayer of Noted Family

Harry Mestayer is the only living member of the oldest theatrical family on the American stage. His father was Charles H. Mestayer, his uncle W. A. Mestayer and his aunt, Emily Mestayer. These played with the most famous stars of their day—Booth, Barrett, Forrest and Fanny Davenport. Mestayer is taking the part of Charles Bigelow, the self-centered husband, in the Trimble-Murfin Production, "The Sign," directed by Jane Murfin and Justin H. McCloskey.

Warning to Actors!

Warning notice to actors, if you walk into the Goldwyn casting offices, and Robert B. McIntyre, with a faraway look in his eye, says:

"What team did you play on last year, and what was your batting average?" don't think that the casting chief has gone "goofey."

You see, "Bob" was for several years assistant manager of the Philadelphia Nationals, between his seasons as manager of the Walnut Street Theatre, and along about this time each year the old yearning comes on, for the days when he was casting pitchers, fielders and basemen, instead of leads, ingenues and "heavies."

Wagner Finishes One

Director Rob Wagner announces the completion of the Paramount comedy-drama, "Fair Week," starring Walter Hiers. The jovial comedian is highly pleased with the comical and sympathetic role he has terminated, and wishes to assure the public that his latest vehicle will be a riot of fun throughout.

Elinor Fair at Metro

Elinor Fair has signed to play Martha in Metro's all-star production, "The Eagle's Feather." With Miss Fair in the cast are: James Kirkwood, Mary Alden, Lester Cuneo, George Seigman and Barbara La Marr. Miss Fair has just recently returned from New York where she made "Driven," the sensational photoplay which played here recently.

Uses Vanilla for Perfume

"Bull" Montana read in the paper the other day that during the past year the people of the United States spent more than $50,000,000 on cosmetics and perfume. Since then the rough-hewn Metro comedy star has been saturating his clothes with vanilla extract instead of his usual favorite richly scented oriental brand. Only "Bull's" spartan-like public spirit caused him to make the change.

Prize Beauty Scores

Hazel Keener, who was awarded, by a jury of artists selected by the Chicago Tribune, a prize of $1,000 as the most beautiful woman in the state of Iowa, has a part in Maurice Tourneur's forthcoming production, "The Brass Bottle." As an Oriental princess of Solomon's day, Miss Keener has a magnificent opportunity to display the beauty which won her the Tribune prize and later the first prize of the International Photographic Fair in London.

Day and Nigh!

Shannon Day returned this week to Hollywood from New York where she had gone recently to play a part in a new William Nigh production, produced at Metro's eastern studios on Sixty-first street. For all that she had hoped, while in the east, to have time between calls to the set to see all of the new plays on Broadway and to acquire all the new gowns on Fifth avenue, engagements in Hollywood, previously promised, called Miss Day back to the west coast with these unprofessional aspirations but partly fulfilled. "But I didn't mind," said Miss Day, "because the part the director had for me was so interesting it was well Nigh impossible to think of anything else while I was playing it."

Edward Knoblock, playwright, and Hugh Walpole, English novelist and lecturer, were the guests of Rex Ingram at the Metro studio one afternoon recently during the filming of one of the big exterior scenes for Mr. Ingram's production of "Scaramouche."

This is Supposed to be Funny

The services of four men are required to operate flint-lock pistols such as are being used in "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's newest production for Metro, the period of which is Paris in 1789-93 during the French Revolution. According to Mr. Ingram one man is required to hold the pistol, another to see that the flint and steel combined to make a spark, a third to hold the victim while the preparations for shooting are taking place and a fourth to stand by to help the marksman in the very possible event that the bullet fails to egress from the proper end of the firearm.

Some Auction Sale

A unique auction sale of beautiful women took place in Hollywood this week. Carmel Myers was sold to Bertram Thomas Grassby for the equivalent of $15 in American money and Bertram proceeded forthwith to take the fair Carmel off to his Harem. William P. S. Earle served as master of ceremonies and it all happened at the Hollywood studios where Director Earle is making the film production "Tutankhamen." Grassby is playing the part of King Tut Himself, while Carmel Myers is portraying the role of a slave girl. Also in the cast are Malcolm McGregor, Anthony Merlo Sam de Grasse, Iris Ashton and June Elvidge.

Jackie an Earnest Pupil

It is not often that a child of the silent drama is a brilliant scholar in school tasks as well. However, this holds true insofar as Jackie Coogan is concerned. Jackie has a private tutor who is on the "set" with him at all times. Whenever the starlet completes a scene, his feet fly back to his little desk and books. It is not an effort to make Jackie Coogan concentrate on his studies. He is a delightful student, always desiring to accomplish his work in educational lines with the same spirit and eagerness as is manifested in his camera duties. At the age of eight, Jackie Coogan is in the fourth grade and is making fast strides for the fifth class. His next First National attraction will be "Circus Days," adapted from the famous story "Toby Tyler or 10 Weeks with a Circus."

WRIGHT CONSIDERS MISS VIDOR AN IDEAL

Florence Vidor is to enact the role of Barbara Worth in the screen version of Harold Bell Wright's most popular novel. And to Miss Vidor goes the honor of being highly congratulated on her accepting the role by none less personage than the author himself.

Harold Bell Wright paid Los Angeles a brief visit, the chief purpose of which was to confer with Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg of Principal Pictures Corporation, who have purchased the screen rights to all of the writer's novels.

"I feel that Florence Vidor is ideal for this part of Barbara," said Wright to Lesser. "I seem to have had her in my vision when I wrote the story. She fits every requirement and I assure her of greatest success in her portrayal.

Miss Vidor is the first to be selected for the cast of "Barbara Worth" which is to be the initial novel filmed in the Harold Bell Wright series. The production is to be put upon the silver sheet in a big way from beginning to end. The entire company plan to leave for the desert within a few weeks and under the direction of Edward F. Cline, will film all exteriors for one of the biggest photo-productions of the coming year.

The principal Pictures Corporation officials have given careful orders to follow the book in every detail. Countless thousands of people have read this Wright novel and it is the aim of the producers to keep every bit of action and all episodes true to the pages that form this popular volume. The locations will be identical to those pictured by Harold Bell Wright and the film folk will even go so far as to use all available "characters" that are still alive and whom Wright used in writing his story.

Actual filming is scheduled to begin the end of this month.

Kinema Theater Bookings

The Kinema Theater in Los Angeles, first run house of the West Coast Theaters, Inc., anticipates a season of box office booming with its lineup of "First National" pictures. Norma Talmadge in "Within The Law," has opened, to be followed by Jackie Coogan in "Daddy." Richard Barthelmess and Dorothy Gish in "The Bright Shawl" and Edwin Carew's production of M. Stahl's production "Daughters of the Rich;" Constance Talmadge in "Dulcy;" and Dorothy Phillips in Allen Holubar's production "Slander The Woman."

SCREEN WINS ANOTHER MILLIONAIRE'S SON

A son of another millionaire family has arrived in Hollywood to seek fame in motion pictures. He is John Henry, whose parents are society leaders in Boston, Mass., and whose father is one of the largest shoe manufactures in New England.

When young Henry was a student at New York University, he was cast in a play staged by his fraternity at a New York theater. The play went over big, and Henry scored a personal triumph with his performance. He had long held a desire to become an actor and that play served to arouse his theatrical ambitions to a higher point. After graduating from college, he returned to Boston and cast his lot with the Shueteman Stock Company, with which company he played juvenile leads and heavies.

Feeling that motion pictures offered him a greater opportunity, he came to Hollywood a few days ago and is now waiting for a chance to demonstrate his histrionic ability before the camera.

Although financially capable of forming his own producing organization, should he so desire, young Henry says he will be satisfied to start in motion pictures by playing small parts until he has demonstrated his talents to the satisfaction of producers. He has brought with him a sporty roadster and a wardrobe that would dazzle the average picture artist.

Young Henry is a World War veteran and survivor of the greatest ship disaster in the history of the country. He enlisted in the first aerial squadron that was formed at the beginning of the war and was transported to France on the Tuscania. Off the coast of Ireland the ship was torpedoed by a German submarine and sank with 296 lives on board. Young Henry leaped from the ship as it was sinking and swam to a raft upon which he remained for twelve hours. He is one of the few survivors of this disaster.

He is a cousin of Thomas Shevlin, multi-millionaire lumber king of Minneapolis, who gained wide fame in sporting circles for his brilliant achievements as right end on the Yale football team.

WHEREIN DAD'S FOOTSTEPS WOULDN'T DO

It was all mapped out that Lloyd Hughes "would follow in father's footsteps" and be a civil engineer, but the youngster—for that was all he was at that time—had different ideas as to his future.

Lloyd had an ambition to be an actor. Not a screen actor but a stage tragedian.

"I wanted to play dramatic stage parts where I could thrill my audience with the depth and coldness of my voice," the male lead in First National's "The Huntress" declared. "I wanted to hear them hiss me as I strangled the hero or turned the old couple from their home into a snow storm because they could not pay their rent.

"And so I went to dramatic school to learn the art of being a deep-dyed villain. Then, when I thought I had mastered the profession I began to look around for an opportunity to make my stage debut. But the opportunity was slow in coming.

"I would get experience, I thought, as a movie extra, and then would watch for my chance to get a real stage part. But I lost my desire for the stage as soon as I found myself in front of the camera. Right then and there I decided to stick to film acting."

He continued for a year in "bit" parts, he explained, until King Vidor singled him out for a more important part. From then on it was clear sailing for the talented young player.

Hughes has played male lead in some of the screen's most notable successes. His most recent pictures were "The Turn in the Road," "Home-spun Folks," "Hail the Woman," "Scars of Jealousy," "Tess of the Storm Country," "Are You a Failure?" and "Children of Dust," the last a Frank Borzage-First National picture, which has not yet been released.

It was his excelled work in this First National picture that won for him his contract to play in "The Huntress," which is also to be released by this company. He will play opposite Colleen Moore.

River Nile Comes to San Pedro

The famous river Nile is being built in replica down at San Pedro for scenes in the William P. S. Earle production "Tutankhamen." Barges of the type of over thirty centuries ago are being viewed with interest by the natives of Los Angeles harbor city. Playing in these scenes are Bertram Thomas Grassby who portrays the title role; Carmel Myers, Malcolm McGregor and a host of extras.

Actors Justify Title

When the taxi-cab in which Harry S. Northrup and George Hackathorne have been dashing frantically through Los Angeles streets during the past three weeks, ran head-on into a Santa Fe train last Sunday, the final scene in Thos. H. Ince's anti-narcotic picture was completed.

The appearance of Northrup and Hackathorne after this scene, fully justifies the title, "Human Wreckage."

HOLLYWOOD FULL OF ACTORS WITH ROYAL TITLES

French history seems suddenly to have assumed a tremendous interest for the producer of films, and there are so many Comtes, and Ducs and Rois nowadays, that a director has to have the history of the Gallic monarchy at his finger tips to know exactly who is who.

Two features that assume especial prominence dealing with entirely different periods are now in process of production. One of these is "Ashes of Vengeance," starring Norma Talmadge, which opens with the Bartholomew's Eve Massacre, and the other in "Scaramouche," which ends with the Fall of the Bastille and the spectacular beginning of the French revolution.

"Ashes of Vengeance," which is being produced by Joseph M. Schenck for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is in a sense the more glamourous of the two, because the scenes now in the making are laid in the palaces and the chateaux of the aristocracy. "Scaramouche" offers a vivid contrast just now in its sketching of the life of the people. Many courtly grandeurs are to follow.

In "Ashes of Vengeance," which is being directed by Frank Lloyd, Norma Talmadge will have one of the most brilliant roles of her career as Mlle. Yooland de Breux. Conway Tearle has the principal role opposite her, that of Rupert de Briac. Their romance is the central interest of the story, which concerns a plan for revenge that comes to naught because its fire is swept away b ya finer humanism.

Wallace Beery has one of his most important roles since he was seen in "Robin Hood," as the Duc de Tours. He is, of course, the villain of the story, while Josephine Crowell as Catherine de Medici is one of the chief intriguers.

Geldert Recovers

While riding a horse in a scene of "Richard The Lion Hearted," Clarence H. Geldert suffered internal injuries which necessitated an operation. The many friends of Mr. Geldert were happy to hear of the success of the operations and also to hear that he is convalescing and will soon be at work in his heavy role in Cecil De Mille's production, "The Tenth Commandment." The injuries were brought about by the badly fitting saddle and poorly adjusted stirrups of Mr. Geldert's horse.

Undoubtedly Mr. Geldert will carefully examine the saddle and stirrups of all the horses he will ride in the future.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Harry Myers, Margaret Seddon and Wyndham Standing have been engaged by the Warner Brothers to support Johnny Hines in "Little Johnny Jones."

Mary Jane Sanderson, who plays an important role in "Blow Your Own Horn," the F. B. O. production, has purchased a new bungalow in the Hollywood foothills.

David Belasco and Lenore Ulric, the Belasco star, have planned to arrive at the Warner Brothers studios in Los Angeles on June 4 to begin the filming of "Tiger Rose," in which Miss Ulric will be starred.

Charlie Chauvel, the young Australian actor—journalist, is at present on the Fred Niblo lot as an understudy to the production work during the filming of "Captain Applejack." Charlie says it is the most interesting time he has had since crossing the big pond twelve months ago.

Ethel Clayton is busy perusing manuscripts and stories for possible future production. Miss Clayton spends part of every day in her library, which has taken the aspect of a correspondence school. She will shortly begin work on her next F. B. O. starring vehicle.

Rockliffe Fellows, popular lead ing man who scored so heavily in Marshall Neilan's "Stranger's Banquet," has returned from a flying trip to New York City and his home in Canada, and is at work in the Trimble-Murfin Production, "The Sign," which is being made with an all-star cast under the direction of Jane Murfin and Justin H. McCloskey.

Here is a real one for a cameraman. In 1915 King Gray, who is photographing Jane Murfin and Jane Cowl's play, "The Sign," was secured to film Carter de Haven's first picture. When work started, Gray found his star had one brown eye and one blue one. It took some work to figure out the lighting but Gray got away with it and made them both register brown.

The only woman producer-author-continuity writer-director in the industry. This is the way Jane Murfin is now being hailed in Hollywood where, with Justin H. McCloskey co-directing, she is filming "The Sign," a play by Mrs. Murfin and Jane Cowl. The all-star cast includes such names as May Allison, Rockliffe Fellows, Harry Mestayer and Edward Everett Horton. Eddie Phillips, Tommy O'Brien and Vera Reynolds have also been signed for important parts.

Frances Raymond is nearing the end of her engagement in "The Meanest Man in the World," in which she plays the mother of Bert Lytell, one of the featured players.

Coy Watson, well-known child artist, whose latest hit is scored in "Ham" Hamilton's comedy, "No Luck,' 'has just recovered from a severe case of tonsolitis and will resume his studio activities this week.

The fan mail of Lloyd Hughes has been more than tripled since the general release of Mary Pickford's new "Tess of the Storm Country," in which he played the leading male role opposite America's sweetheart.

Another child screen artist may be presented with a contract for her histrionic efforts in starring vehicles. A rumor is current to the effect that Baby Muriel MacCormac who has interpreted thirty-seven roles in that many productions, will soon be heading her own company.

Pierre Collings and Joseph Du Bray are nearing the completion of the Robertson-Cole production, "Blow Your Own Horn" under the direction of Jas. W. Horne. Warner Baxter, Derelys Perdue and Ralph Lewis head the cast. Some marvelous photography is promised when the production is completed.

"Lights Out," adapted to the screen by Rex Taylor from the stage play by Paul Dickey and Mann Page, has gone into production at the Powers studios under the direction of James W. Horne with an all-tar cast including Ruth Stonehouse, Walter McGrail, Theodore von Eltz and Marie Astaire and many others of note.

Alan Hale, who is now in the limelight as a result of his remarkable performances in "Robin Hood" and "The Covered Wagon,' and who is now supporting Jackie Coogan in "Long Live the King," will vacation three weeks, immediately upon the completion of his present contract. This will be the first rest Mr. Hale has enjoyed in three years.

It takes Arthur Edmund Carew, who is playing the difficult character role of Svengali in the forthcoming "Trilby," four hours to apply his "make-up" each morning before appearing before the cameras. This part is Mr. Carew's initial attempt at portraying a character role, having appeared as a juvenile and a delineator of straight leads heretofore.

Mary Alden, who has the leading feminine role in Metro's all-star picturization of "The Eagle's Feather," was a newspaper writer before she began her screen career.

Gertrude Astor, former stage beauty, who made her screen debut as Mary Pickford's mother in "Through the Back Door," has been engaged to play an important role in a new John M. Stahl production, "The Wanters."

William Orlamond, "The Frank Bacon of the Screen," is a veteran of the Spanish-American War. He is now appearing in a comedy characterization in Metro's all-star production of "The Eagle's Feather," under the direction of Edward Sloman.

The final scenes for "The Eagle's Talon's," a Universal super-serial, are now being filmed under the direction of Duke Worne. Ann Little, who is an excellent horsewoman and has successfully demonstrated her ability to interpret difficult western roles, is being co-starred in the serial with Fred Thomson.

Helen Kesler, who has acted as leading woman for many of the screen's best known comedians, and who recently completed a year's engagement as leading woman for Jimmy Aubrey, has been signed for the leading feminine role in a new series of two-reel comedies starring Milburn Moranti, the first of which has been titled "Cakes."

Johnnie Walker, whose immortal performance in "Over the Hill" has endeared him in the hearts of thousands of screen-lovers, is to appear in one more picture before resuming the production of his own films at the Robertson-Cole studios. The picture which is to mark his last appearance as a free-lance artist is "Broken Hearts of Broadway," which Irving Cummings is directing and producing. Johnnie Walker has the juvenile lead in this picture.

Barbara LaMarr, Montague Love and a number of other prominent screen personalities, will leave New York May 25 for Rome to play in a film adaptation of Hall Caine's "Eternal City," which George Fitzmaurice is to make for Sam Goldwyn—First National release. The scenes of this famous Hall Caine masterpiece will be taken in and about the Italian capital. Some of the most important will be among the ruins of the colliseum.

A touch of unusual realism is provided in the interior castle settings for Rex Ingram's production of "Scaramouche" in that the floors are actually inlaid hardwood, highly varnished and polished.

Actual filming has been started on Cecil B. DeMille's latest super-production for Paramount, entitled "The Ten Commandments." Leatrice Joy, star in "Java Head," and who won high praise for her portrayal in "Manslaughter," is sharing stellar honors with Owen Moore.

Peggy Browne, late Follies' dancer who scored a decided hit with her terpsichorean novelties while a member of Ziegfeld's New York aggregation, has broken all speed records for reaching stellar honors in motion pictures. Miss Browne made her debut in motion pictures a few months ago and is now one of the leading artists in the ranks of leading women. Her latest engagement is with Universal in whose picture, "McGuire of the Mounted," she has the feminine lead opposite William Desmond.

John Henry, scion of one of Boston's wealthiest families who made a trip to Hollywood specially for the purpose of "breaking into" pictures, has risen in defense o fthe poor down-trodden flapper. At least, young Henry disagrees with a garment manufacturer who recently declared in the press that flappers are poor workers. He says he was out with a flapper the other night and that she worked him for a big feed, the swellest show in town, a dinner after the show and that then she deserted him for another man's company.

"Why De We Live?" a story vividly exposing the evils of capital punishment, and a sequel to "The Greatest Menace," a story based on the narcotic traffic, is creating considerable attention in Hollywood film circles. The picture is being produced by James Calnay who has assigned the leading role in the play to Don Armando, a native of Spain who for several years was a well known figure on the legitimate stage in Madrid. Among others in the cast are Dorothy Dunlap, Martha Marshall and little Philippe DeLacy.

Edward Gribbon has one of the most important roles of his career "After the Ball," a story dealing with society life, which is being produced at the Universal studios by the Renco Film Company. Meanwhile, Gribbon is being seriously considered for the title role in "Ben Hur"

IN YE DAYS OF STRUGGLE

Jack Mulhall who is Constance Talmadge's leading man in "Dulcy," now being filmed for First National, told a story this week of his early struggles to reach the top of the theatrical ladder.

"In 1911," says Jack, "the stock company in which I was leading man stranded at Escanaba, Michigan. None of the company had any money and I was flat broke. I went down to the docks where dockhands on a Lake Michigan freighter gave me a good meal after I sang 'Dearie,' 'I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now' and a few other popular songs.

"I was a husky kid and they finally gave me a job shoveling coal on the freighter. When the boat arrived in Chicago I was a fearful looking sight. I took a bath and put on my best clothes and went around to the Blackstone Theatre where James K. Hackett was appearing in "The Grain of Sut." Hackett looked at my eyes still fringed with a black border of coal dust which I hadn't succeeded in removing.

"'I see you've come all made up and ready to go on,' he said. 'Well I have a part which you will fit into. as the juvenile is sick. You're make up is fine but you need a little more rouge on your cheeks. You're rather pale; haven't you been eating regularly?'"

WHAT IS SUCCESS?
By Eric Mayne

We must not confuse Success with Popularity; much less with Notoriety.

Popularity is easily distinguished. Notoriety has features all its own, but Success—well, Success is different.

In these days of extensive Publicity many are Publicized, but few are Successful.

Many live beyond their means and some live beyond their success. He is a wise man who knows when to retire.

There are men who lived in the high lights of Success. The world waited for their briefest telegram. Today if they were made the subject of the greatest headline the world would not be interested.

The road to Success is an open road—open to all. It is crowded with obstacles. The greatest obstacles are usually within ourselves. If we overcome these the others will be easy.

We must make up our mind to like our work before we can make a success at it.

If we can't make up our minds to like it, we can make up our minds to leave it. The great thing is that we make up our mind—it will be better for us and better for our work.

If we are not a Success in motion pictures, we should not blame the pictures. There are other kinds of employment.

If we are not a Success in California there are other States. Why not try one of them?

If we think America is to blame for our lack of Success we can try another country. We may gain something. The other country may also gain something. One never knows.

The man who accumulates money is not always a Successful man.

There can be no doubt that money talks, but it is not always worth listening to nowadays.

A man's life does not consist in the abundance of his possessions.

If we are working we are succeeding. Work is Success. We may not always see the success. Our working may not be perfect—it may not even be good, but we can only learn by work. Our Salvation is work.

Truth makes us free and Work makes us Strong.

The first Paramount Zane Grey production "To the Last Man," directed by Victor Fleming, is now under way in the Tonto Basin of Arizona, where the company will remain for the greater part of the picture. Richard Dix, Lois Wilson, Noah Beery, Robert Edeson and Frank Campeau are featured in this feud story which was adapted by Doris Schroeder. Lucien Hubbard is production editor. The country where the company is now at work is ne of the wildest in the world and great pictorial results are naturally expected.

Maurice Tourneur has joined the ranks of the directors who have cast aside their megaphones to appear before the camera. The transition was a brief one, however. During the filming of his production of "The Brass Bottle" an actor failed to appear at the appointed hour for work and Director Tourneur decided to avoid loss of time by enacting the part himself. The result was that the French director became an English actor for one week.

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players Lasky Corporation, left this week for New York to attend the convention of the Sales Department which will start in New York and make flying visits to Chicago, New Orleans and Los Angeles.

Mr. Lasky will return with the Convention delegation for the fourth and last session arriving here about May 19th—the meetings being held May 21st and 22nd.

HARDEE KIRKLAND RETURNS

After a three months' tour of the Orpheum and Interstate circuit, Hardee Kirkland, who played in Theodore Roberts' vaudeville headline sketch, "The Man Higher Up" by William de Mille, Paramount producer, returned this week with Mr. Roberts, and both gentlemen will resume their picture work.

Hardee Kirkland received much critical praise for his able handling of what might be called the title role in the sketch of which Roberts was the star. Kirkland is a character actor of long stage and screen experience and recently appeared in the Schulberg production, "Are You a Failure?" in an important role. He will remain in Hollywood for the present for further picture engagements. Mr. Roberts will resume Paramount activities.

TOURNEUR DISCUSSES LOVE

Motion picture patrons of the United States may never expect to see genuine love depicted on its screens, according to Maurice Tourneur, producer of "The Brass Bottle" and other well-known successes.

Puppy love is as far as the screens of this country may go in portraying the grand passion, asserts the noted First National director.

"The full, beautiful, terrible splendor of love is not ignoble, but we are afraid of it as of something shameful.

"There is much love making among boys and girls. We hide and forbid these impulses so that they become twisted and unhealthy much as our films are forced to repress realities with glamorous fairy tales. Repressed things always come to the surface distorted.

"Love isn't the green sentimentality of a boy and girl walking through an apple orchard. It's more apt to be an agony, as most elemental things are.

"The mating love has been given a shameful significance because it seeks seclusion. Also, when we are up against our hardest problems—and love is an ordeal—we try to hide from ourselves, behind social conventions or leafy shelter, in opiates or illusions.

"Censors and those who support censorship for the screen clearly indicate that anything beyond mawkish puppy love is unclean and unfit to be seen or thought about, no matter how insistently life projects it to the confusion of the fable fed.

"True love, the actual love of life, beautiful and matured can never be portrayed while censors and persons who think in harmony with censors, sit in judgment of this new and wonderful screen art."

Charles Maigne is making good progress with "The Silent Partner," in which Leatrice Joy, Owen Moore and Robert Edeson are featured. This Paramount picture, adapted by Sada Cowan from Maximilian Foster's story, will be edited by Ralph Block. The quotation board in a stock broker's office has been the background for considerable dramatic action, when Owen Moore in the character of a young speculator, sees his fortune wiped out and Leatrice Joy in the role of his wife begins to realize that his former employer is responsible for the financial downfall. Bert Woodruff has been engaged to play an important role in this cast.

Vol. VI. SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1923 No. 6

The Editor Essays Some Elucidation

According to well-founded reports, great strides forward will be taken by Hollywood interests next week to make possible the founding of a truly great Amusement Center in that incomparable center of cinema and other fine arts. Camera has been watching this movement with eager anticipation for several weeks and it can be stated now that if the proposed plans prove feasible, this enterprise will serve to make Hollywood the most popular and most famous center of artistic culture in the whole world and possibly in all history. What could sound more exceedingly promising? What objective could any citizenry strive for with more grace? Verily, this is a proposition challenging the undivided thought of every man and woman loyal to the welfare and future of Hollywood.

Now comes to the foreground of screendom the name of Arthur Edmund Carew because of his masterly performance in Richard Walton Tully's production of "Trilby" in which this sterling actor portrays the character of Svengali. The interesting part of Mr. Carew's artistic triumph is, always heretofore he has been a leading man and yet he achieves his greatest purpose as a character man, all of which is mentioned to show that the trend of the film times continues to be in the general direction of the surprising proclivity to fete photoplayers who will grow beards and be totally unlike their own selves. The day was, and very recently, when the dashing juvenile "lead" won and maintained his high place in the public esteem because of his own personality which he never submerged for the sake of a character created by the fiction writer. Ernest Torrence deserves much of the credit for lifting the character man out of the slough of unimportance, and, his unassuming brother, David Torrence, did yeoman service in this work, too. Now Mr. Carew comes forward to give fresh impetus to the pre-eminence of character delineation extraordinary.

Whither are the screen comedians heading? The maiority of them seem prone to vie with each other to achieve three distinct purposes. One is to get into the full-length field to the abolition of the two-reeler; the second is to interpolate real dramatic situations into their comedies for the sake of contrast, and the third is to own their own studios. Larry Semon is about to carry out new plans which, it is said, will encompass all of these new inclinations of his comedy fellows, and, Dame Rumor has it that Ben Turpin is casting his famous eyes longingly in the same direction. Monty Banks already has accomplished two-thirds of this tendency by getting settled in his own studio and starting a new series of comedies in which dramat situations will count prodigiously in "getting the laughs" when comes the comedy angles having to do with those situations. He announces he will realize the other third of his ambition within a few months, when he expects to make his first full-length comedy. Will it all eventuate itself into the comedy stars launching themselves into the field of screen spectacle a la Griffith?

Approximately twenty million dollars are being spent in Hollywood right now on improvements and expansions of studio facilities. In fact, the greatest permanent building boom in the history of the motion picture industry is under way at this time, and when the various construction crews complete their work, not only will there be a greater capacity for the production of photoplays of all classes, but there will be much architectural beauty added to this unique center of Southern California. The Warner Brothers are putting the finishing touches on their new stage, one of the largest in the world, after spending a half million dollars on it, and now William Fox is starting the expenditure of two million dollars on new quarters on the outskirts of Hollywood as a result of a decision to vacate the too valuable land they now occupy in the heart of the city. John Rikkeleman is directing the big task of reconstructing the old Griffith studios, now known as the Fine Arts Studios, and when he has finished he will have spent $250,000, but he will have one of the greatest of ultra-modern plants. Jesse L. Lasky is spending some money on the studios in which Paramount pictures are made, and M. C. Levee is putting a lot of money into circulation in his continuance of building activities at the United Studios. All this surely is sufficient answer to calamity-howlers wherever they may show their heads. The country at large cannot be going to the bow-wows so long as Hollywood can spend twenty million dollars on studio expansion at a single session.

The American screen is indebted to two countries in particular for the supplying of many of its greatest artists. These two countries are England and France, now so much at loggerheads unfortunately. Among the almost countless Britishers who have enriched cinema endeavor it is apropos to mention Charlie Chaplin, first, of course, and, his brother, Syd, but there are others of exceptional histrionic brilliance, such as Creighton Hale and Eric Mayne, two of the screen's foremost masters of dramatic finesse. Then among the Frenchmen who have become picture luminaries due to their efforts in this country, there is a grand array, including such masters of the craft as Max Linder, Charles de Roche, Rod La Roque, Leon Bary and, now in the ascendancy, Maurice Canonge. Meanwhile Italy with its Valentino, and Spain with its Antonio Moreno, are not far behind in the matter of furnishing true screen genius. The whole point involved in this reminding of the presence of so many leaders from foreign climes is that what we are proud to call the American screen is a most cosmopolitan one just as any American city is cosmopolitan, and, that the melting-pot idea is all encompassing in this domain ruled so magnanimously by Uncle Sam. The reassuring phase of it is that out of the polyglot of it all is arising, with sound certainty, a distinctively American art within the moving picture, typical of most all of our outstanding national traits in its moving; its activity; its energy, and, it is patent now that Americans will be able in time to give expression to their dramatic feelings through the medium of the cinema better than they can with pen or brush. Viewed from every angle the future of the photoplay art is one replete with unlimited possibilities for American triumphs in culture, and therefore it is an art deserving of something better than the detrimental squawking of censorship-mad reformers. Instead it richly deserves the unstinted co-operation of every force having the greater interests of America at heart.

Three Praised—Three Protested

RECENTLY six lovers of good photoplays witnessed an elaborate and well directed screen version of a widely read novel.

Three of them had read the story before seeing the picture. The others had not.

The latter were unanimous in its praise. They enjoyed the picture and gave producer and exhibitor the benefit of their enthusiastic recommendation.

The three who had read the story were just as strong in condemning the picture. They declared that the director had ruined the story by making certain adaptations required by the very nature of the screen.

That is a natural reaction.

Yet, on the other hand, had the director followed the story literally—assuming that such was possible—the three critics would have watched the entire picture without the slightest emotion.

They would have known exactly what was coming—the suspense would have been destroyed. Unsatisfactory either way.

Of course, there are stories which can be screened without adaptation. Every motion picture executive, however, knows how few they are.

Then, too, there are stories which, when reproduced upon the screen, hold the deep attention and interest of people who have read them.

They are classics which permit of repetition because of rare excellence. A hasty review of the number of classics which past centuries have produced proves conclusively the infrequency of their conception.

Then to reduce the number of classics in literature to those which can be faithfully reproduced upon the screen almost eliminates this source as a supply of photoplay material.

Some great pictures have been produced from the classics, but they are few, very few.

What, then, follows? The suitable classics of fiction are entirely inadequate. Current fiction reproduced upon the screen is unsatisfactory to those who have read the stories—the very people whom the title is intended to attract. That inevitably means the loss of good-will, a priceless asset.

This is all entirely logical. You would not read a book of current fiction if you knew, before reading it, the essential details of the plot, situations, characterizations, and climaxes.

You know that a story loses its main interest if someone tells you even briefly the thread of it in advance.

These are commonplaces in the publishing business. No publisher would expect to succeed if he republished novels and short stories. Even classics lack the fresh interest which our periodicals require.

Why then can the motion picture producer expect to succeed by producing stories that are "old stuff"—rehashes that lose the spark of interest in the "making over" process? It is at best a futile effort to postpone failure. That is all it does, although it makes the failure more certain.

What is going on among motion picture theatregoers? They are more and more selecting an evening's entertainment because they believe that the comedy, the news reel or the music will be entertaining. Amazing accusation—but true.

A few years ago producers would have scoffed at the idea that these details would become the main attraction. But such is the fact, today.

Strong, dramatic stories written for the screen are the sound foundation for strong pictures. Adaptations are make-shift.

There are such stories and the supply will increase as the need for them is more generally recognized. Some of the foremost producers have taken the lead. They will profit by a public recognition and popular favor which lavish expenditure of money can not buy.

Producers, directors and stars seeking new and original stories are invited to make known the type of stories required. A representative will gladly call upon request. Phone Hollywood 2505.

Churchmen Will Pass First Judgment This Time

Creating a precedent in film history, a new super-production is probably to have its first public showing before a great religious convention.

The precedent is to be set by Charles Ray's elaborate picture of Longfellow's poem, "The Courtship of Myles Standish," which the producer-star is now editing after more than six months' work on the dramatic incidents of America's first love story and its incidental history of the Pilgrim Fathers.

The distinguished premiere audience will be the delegates at the National Council of Congregational Churches at Springfield, Mass., in October, including nearly a thousand leading clergymen and laymen of the denomination from all parts of the country.

Congregationalism had its tap-roots in the great adventure of the pioneer Separatists who fled from Europe to establish the first free church in a new land. Since Mr. Ray began the filming of the Longfellow epic the members of the denomination in Southern California have followed the work with intense interest.

The idea of showing it first to the National Council originated with Rev. Frank Dyer, D.D., minister of the Plymouth Congregational Church in this city, and it has met with such enthusiastic endorsement that Ray has consented that unless something unforseen occurs to prevent, the plan will be carried out.

Many weeks still have to be spent on the cutting of "The Courtship of Myles Standish," which is to be one of the "big" films of 1923, running ten reels or more. Eight cameras shot more than 200,000 feet of negative for the story, and the labor of elimination to get this mass down to the necessary commercial length is an arduous one.

In its present rough state it is down to about 25,000 feet, but it is already apparent that the picture will be one of the most brilliant and inspiring ever made, dealing as it does with actual characters of history and the pretty romantic legends from the pen of the New England poet.

Scenes showing the Atlantic storms which nearly destroyed the Mayflower are said to exceed in graphic and thrilling realism anything ever before done in marine photography. The cost of "The Courtship of Myles Standish" exceeded $600,000.

Among the American events it will picture are the birth of political democracy, the first free church worship, the first romance and marriage, the first marriage proposal by a woman, the first Thanksgiving feast, the first communistic experiment, the first conflicts with Indians, the first treaty with the natives, the first baby born in New England, the first after-dinner speeches, and the first commuters—for the Pilgrims lived a considerable time on the Mayflower and went from it daily to their work of planting a colony on the new shore.

Being Fair of Face and Figure, How'll She Fare?

"Wait until they see this one."

This one happens to be a well-known and much-used phrase in picture-producing circles and it generally is an allusion to a forthcoming production.

But, in this instance wiseacres around the Cosmosart Studios are making it applicable to a certain new face (and figure) about to be introduced to the photoplay-loving public in James A. Bowen's latest feature film, temporarily entitled "The Supreme Test." That face (and figure) belong to Dorothy Revier, who is making her debut on the screen after a brilliant career as a dancing beauty on the stage.

According to high Cosmosart officials just now enthusing over her, she defies classification because her various traits and personal charms are a composite of several of the "leading lady luminaries" of the current silver-sheet. As the veteran cameraman, who photographed her in this picture, expresses it: she is beautiful like Katherine MacDonald, she does dancing scenes like Mae Murray and she displays a dramatic ability similar to that of Pauline Frederick, and, it is added, yet she is distinctly a personality quite unlike all other popular favorites in her field of endeavor.

At any rate, her performance in the principal role in "The Supreme Test" was such that Mr. Bowen immediately signed her to a contract to play the stellar part in his next production, "Sunken Gardens," which will be under way in about three weeks.

"If Miss Revier makes half the impression on the public she has made around this studio during the filming of her first picture, she will break some records," says Mr. Bowen, who is regarded as an ultra-conservative when it comes to conjecturing on the possibilities of a new artist.

Although Miss Revier was born and reared in Oakland, California, she has spent much of her life abroad, especially in Italy, where her dancing won high praise from such men as D'Annunzio and Ambrosio, the producer of the memorable "Cabiria" and "Theodora." She scored her greatest terpsichorean triumphs with Moskova, as her forte is classical interpretations. However, she has also earned a nation-wide reputation for her ability to execute the more modern dances in America.

Dorothy Revier in "The Supreme Test"

"I really don't know why I have wandered into filmland, because my love for dancing is supreme," Miss Revier says. "However, judging from present prospects, I am in to stay for a while whether I want to or not. Of course I like picture work immensely and I may learn to love it more than I do dancing."

As soon as "The Supreme Test" is cut and edited, the master print will be shipped to New York with the idea of arranging for its release during the early summer with "Sunken Gardens" following in the early autumn. Supporting Miss Revier is Johnny Harron, brother of the lamented Bobby Harron, Eugene Beaudino and Ernest Shields.

And, if Miss Revier emerges from the scrutinizing criticisms of the big-time reviewers unscathed, or, even does better than that by being received with acclaim as another champion beauty and another dominating dramatic star, she announces she will continue to keep her dancing togs handy just the same.

"I've been warned that the picture-going public is very fickle, you know," she says.

MANY THINGS ARE "MOST NECESSARY" IN PICTURES

"What do you consider the most necessary asset for success in a moving picture career?"

The question was recently asked Colleen Moore, First National star, in a letter from an admiring fan.

The winsome young lady who is to play the leading feminine part in "The Huntress," initial First National picture under a recently signed long-term contract, admitted to her correspondent that each year she answers the question differently.

"I have learned by experience," Miss Moore wrote, " that what I previously thought were the most important assets now seem to me to be only of minor importance."

As so many girls scattered over the country are praying for an opportunity to make a name for themselves on the screen, it may be of interest to them to hear the latest answers given by Miss Moore to this vital question.

"Beauty is an intangible thing," declares the vivacious young actress.

A girl may have it in many of its qualities and yet not photograph well, hence she cannot hope to make good in pictures.

"Beauty that photographs may be an open sesame to the studios, but it must be bolstered up with many other qualifications.

"The ability to wear clothes, to dance, to

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

San Francisco, Calif., May 16.—The cutting and titling of "A Pair of Hellions," first picture made by the Stereoscopic Productions, was finished last week, and Walter W. Bell, director, took the film to Los Angeles, where it will be previewed previous to its release through the American Releasing Corporation. While in the south, Mr. Bell will be on the lookout for good stories for future use, and will engage his cast for the next picture of the company to be started at once. Joseph Gonyea, lately of the "Plum Center" forces, will assist Bell on the next picture. Ranger Bill Miller and Patricia Palmer will again co-star, and they all hope and expect to make each picture made by the organization bigger and better than the last.

Dale Hanshaw, of the Second National Pictures Corporation of New York, says he does not see why anyone should want to live in New York, if they can live in San Francisco. Mr. Hanshaw was in town most of last week as part of an extended trip through the south and west on business for Second National.

Chester Conklin arrived in San Fancisco Saturday to begin his work in an outstanding role in "Greed." Lon Poff came to town last week to play a bit as the lottery agent in the same picture.

June Mathis, editor-in-chief of the Goldwyn staff, spent Friday and Saturday in San Francisco to see a little of the filming of "Greed," and to go over with Eric Von Stroheim some slight changes in the script. Miss Mathis is more than pleased with the results being obtained in the part of the picture already filmed, and says she thinks Frank Norris' great American masterpiece could never have been given to the world with such atmosphere and color as are being obtained by the actual making of the picture in the scenes where the story was laid.

A $7,500,000 deal was completed last week when Loew's theatres in California were affiliated with the West Coast Theatres, Inc., one of the big theatrical chains of the country. The Warfield Theatre in this city and the Loew's State Theatre in Los Angeles are included in the combination. The West Coast Theatres recently acquired a controlling interest in the Turner and Danken circuit. As a result of the new affiliation the Loew theatres will control service of Metro and Associated First National productions.

San Francisco saw one more glad reunion the other night with a very large man and a very small shaking hands and slapping each other on the back, while a clown dog barked round their feet, all in an Orpheum dressing room. The big man was Gibson Gowland, now playing McTeague in Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed," and the small one was Toto, world-famous clown, and last week's headliner at the Orpheum. Their friendship dates back to the days when Toto was making pictures on the Pathe lot and he and Gowland lived next door to each other at Long Beach, and as they hadn't met in five years it was certainly some reunion. Toto, by the way, will play Los Angeles in a couple of weeks, and is looking forward to seeing a lot more friends of his moving picture making days.

Waldemar Young, president of the Scenario Writers' Guild of Hollywood and America, paid San Francisco a visit last week. Young came north with the Famous Players-Lasky company now filming "Salomy Jane" in the Santa Cruz mountains, and dropped into town to see old friends, as he once lived here, and was a member of the Chronicle staff.

Milton D. Gardner, supervisor of production for Goldwyn, spent part of last week in San Francisco on business connected with Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed." Ray Moore arrived today on other business for Goldwyn.

Henry Miller has opened a short special engagement at the Columbia Theatre surrounded by a galaxy of stars, among them many names as well known to the silver-screen as to the spoken stage. The company will include, besides himself, Blanch Bates, Ruth Chatterton, Geoffrey Kerr, Laura Hope Crews, John Miltern, Felix Krembs, and others. They opened in a new play by Lee Wilson Dodd called "The Changelings," to be followed by one or two others.

Strongheart, famous dog hero of the screen, arrived in San Francisco last week on the steamer H. F. Alexander from Seattle, the proud father of ten healthy puppies born to his mate, the Lady Jule von Helmetal, on the voyage. Strongheart has been sharing starring honors with Lillian Rich in two pictures just finished in the Canadian Rockies, "White Fang" and "The Phantom Pack," but all his work is now forgotten in his pride over the pups.

News from New York

Alfred Lunt, whom New Yorkers remember for his unique performance in "Clarence," made his screen debut at the Capitol this week in the leading role of "Backbone," the story by Clarence Budington Kelland which was published serially in the Saturday Evening Post some time ago. Lunt is a capable actor on the stage, but has a lot to learn about pictures. Edith Roberts played the girl.

Will Rogers will remain with the "Follies" as long as Mr. Ziegfeld desires him to hold his word. In previous years the "Follies" were only produced about June 1st and ran about 14 weeks. This year owing to the enormous success, over 49 weeks to capacity, the usual conditions are changed and the "Follies" will remain in New York until the next show is ready. Many of the actors are trying every possible subterfuge to break a written contract so as to exact a few more dollars. Evidently Rogers' word is better than some people's signature. All of which, of course, helped him to attain the enviable success and prominence in the theatre.

A judgment for $103,930.40 against the Triangle Film Corp., of Virginia and New York, was awarded Adam and Chas. Kessel, film producers, this week in the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court. The judgment represented film supplies which the Kessels sold to the Triangle two years ago. The claim was made payable in New York.

In Behalf of Mother-in-Law and Other Halves

By RAY H. LEEK

Don mourning for a life-long friend. The tried and true mother-in-law joke, declared by George Ade to have had its origin in the paleolithic age, is no more.

Screen writers and picture experts witnessed the demise of the ancient joke, from which all others are said to have been patterned, the other evening in a little projection room at the Schulberg studios.

When the company had witnessed the tremendous story flashed upon the screen by Director Gasnier under the title, "Mothers-in Law," everybody forgot to laugh at the subject suggested by those words. The swiftly moving story of the principals in the average American home, involving what is declared to be the only true portrait of the ideal mother-in-law ever painted, fairly lifted members of the audience from their seats.

Olga Printzlau, who adapted this story to the screen and witnessed this initial showing of the film, was moved to prophecy.

"This means the end of the mother-in-law joke," said she. "I predict that the phrase will never provoke a smile where this picture has been seen. The most maligned figure in the world's history has come into her own—and she has come to stay."

A hint of the unusual story unfolded on the screen would spoil too many thrilling evenings to make such a hazard possible here. Enough to say that it indicates that Frank Dazey and Agnes Christine Johnson, the youthful writers who wrote the story while on their honeymoon, know the real mother-in-law as only newlyweds can. It was prepared for the screen by an equally youthful mother, Olga Printzlau, and produced by that master of screen drama, Gasnier.

For the benefit of those who follow the fortunes of the players it may be added that Gaston Glass has a role in which he has been given and made full use of all the opportunities which were his as the young violinist in "Humoresque" and in his latest success, "The Hero." Edith Yorke, the lovable mother of so many screen stories, has advanced a step over all previous performances to become the strong minded but equally lovable mother-in-law.

Of course, it would not be a Gasnier picture without startling flashes of beauty, both in settings and feminine form. This time, in addition to the charms of Ruth Clifford and Vola Vale, he has provided two widely diversified types of beautiful bathing girls—Marie Curtis, American girl swimming champion, and Doris Stone, English beauty prize winner and a swimmer of international reputation. Both have been given roles in which, to put it conservatively, they have proved eye-filling.

"Popularity," says the diminuitive Ethel Shannon, "is a great thing—in cool weather only."

For the new starlet has just discovered that success carries with it responsibilities which cannot be shirked even when the California sunshine begins to wilt verdure and ambition.

On completing her role in "Daughters of the Rich" a week ago, Miss Shannon was looking forward to one of those "between-picture" rests so popular in the summer months.

But the girl who was first picked for stellar honors this year by the Wampas experts found that three directors were bidding for her leisure hours. Ethel hesitated, but finally succumbed when it was found that the schedule for Reginald Denny's latest "Leather Pushers" story fits perfectly into her own "rest" period. So she played the leading feminine role with Denny and pigeonholed her proposed vacation until some future time. For Miss Shannon will play featured roles in at least three big productions in rapid succession, according to plans outlined for her.

It's a clever producer who can pry Victor Schertzinger away from his beloved violin. When Schertzinger was persuaded, some years ago, to abandon musical composition and direction of musical comedies to act in a directorial capacity for the screen it was generally supposed that his music would suffer.

But Schertzinger has found it possible to keep his violin where other directors usually swing their megaphone. He directs by music and works out his big scenes—a duty that usually consumes his evenings while improvising on the piano.

Now it is found that one of the biggest scenes in the Jackie Coogan picture which he is directing, will occur in the Royal Opera House in the mythical kingdom of Lavonia.

"Great," said Schertzinger, as he watched

He Came For Learning, Then Came a Yearning

When his fond parents incurred the heavy expense of sending him all the way from Paris, France, to an American college at Williamstown, Mass., Eugene Beaudino, formerly known as Eugene Borden, had only one idea and that was to acquire a big supply of learning and return to his beloved parential domicile. But one night early in his career as a student, he attended a motion picture show and immediately his thoughts of learning were crowded out by a yearning—a yarning to get into pictures. He had achieved considerable success as an actor on the Parisian speaking stage and experienced little difficulty in securing an engagement with William Christy Cabanne, then with Metro, and he made his screen debut in "The Slacker," in which Emily Stevens was starred back in those stirring days of 1914. So compatible were Beaudino and Cabanne that they remained affiliated for eight years.

Then there came the call of the foot lights again and in the interim, Beaudino enhanced his reputation many per cent by his brilliant work, especially in support of Irene Bordoni in "The French Doll," from which cast he retired less than three months ago. He also distinguished himself in "The Better 'Ole" and in support of Madam Fiske in "Nealy of New Orleans."

Now Beaudino is in Hollywood and is back in pictures, Harry Revier's production of "The Supreme Test," just completed at the Cosmosart studios, serving as the vehicle for his return. In this feature he plays one of the leading roles, sharing honors with Johnny Harron, Dorothy Revier and Ernest Shields.

Beaudino is among the best of dancers. In his earlier youth he was one of the best of acrobats. Nature has blessed him with those physical endowments which entitle him to classification as one of the handsomest of young men. Now he is recognized as one of the most capable of screen leading men, having portrayed such roles opposite Mabel Talliafero, Virginia Pearson, Viola Dana and Alice Brady. Hence it may be aptly stated that his life is running in superlatives—explicitly, to the end that he excels in whatever he undertakes.

"America and the American spirit have combined to make everything possible for me," he says. "In my early youth I was always confronted by the bothersome idea that I was aspiring too high and trying to do too much, but that was in France. Since coming to America and becoming imbued with the American idea of doing things despite any obstacles, I have acquired that determination which has made this the greatest nation probably in all history."

All of which is talk of the variety certain to ingratiate this young artist with the legions of photoplay fans dwelling within Uncle Sam's mighty domain.

TO DODGE OR NOT TO DODGE

David Torrence is in a quandry. He doesn't know whether to dodge or not to dodge. His family name is fairly deluged with high honors due to the remarkable cinema triumphs of his remarkable brother, Ernest Torrence, and, although David is plenty famous himself as a star exponent of both the silent and spoken dramatic arts, wherever he goes, he is pointed out as "that other Torrence." Inasmuch as David is a big, upstanding man, well able to face the problem of life on his own feet without assistance from any source, and, also being an exceedingly modest man, he is reluctant to accept any of the reflected glory. Yet, he cannot dodge it successfully, because brother Ernest is such a tremendously big drawing card in motion pictures nowadays that he is just about the most-discussed man in the whole realm. It would seem that the only way in which David can circumvent the fates which persist in forcing him to share in the honors Ernest is winning might be to go after a fame surpassing that already bestowed upon the family.

"It's a peculiar position to be in and one does not always know just how to conduct himself," David declares.

Those not having a world-famous figure in their family may not be able to appreciate this statement, but upon contemplating the fact that in this case David is in the same profession as his brother and is regarded as one of the finest of actors, it becomes apparent that having such keen competition right in one's own family presents quite a skein of complications and embarrassments.

David has been scoring triumphs on the screen ever since he gave to the world his unusual performance in Mary Pickford's new "Tess of the Storm Country." Among his more recent successes were recorded "The Power of a Lie," one of the best Universal pictures of the year and "Trimmed in Scarlet," in which Kathryn Williams is the star. He has just finished the portrayal of an exceptional role in support of Herbert Rawlinson in a feature called "Richard," and one of his best characterizations will be seen when "The Man Next Door" is released.

Gloria Hope, who will be absent from the screen for a brief time, but who, upon returning to her cinema endeavor, will be starred, according to a well-founded report.

The ranks of prominent photoplayers are being gradually augmented by the advent of college graduates. Martha Marshall, who proudly claims Vassar as her alma mater, is among the latest to join the Hollywood film colony, she having given up a career as a society leader in Chicago's smart set to embrace opportunities in the cinema field.

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1923

PACIFIC COAST HEADS OF PARAMOUNT GATHER HERE FOR A VITAL CONVENTION

From every state of the Pacific Coast, executives and salesmen of the Paramount Picture distribution exchanges are arriving in Los Angeles today to attend the semi-annual convention of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which opens here Monday and continues for two days.

If the seventy-five expected to take part, fully half of that number are already in this city. They are located at the Hotel Ambassador, headquarters of the convention. Among those who reach Los Angeles tonight will be S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, who will preside during the sessions here; Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production; Eugene Zukor, J. D. Clark, divisional sales manager, who will assist Mr. Kent in conducting the convention here; Mel Shauer, E. E. Shauer, Claud Saunders, Charles E. McCarthey, A. M. Botsford, G. B. J. Frawley, G. M. Spidell and William R. Hogan.

For the first time in the history of the organization, the semi-annual convention is being split into four separate and distinct sessions, three of which have already taken place in other sections of the United States. The first of these occurred in New York City on May 8 and 9 and was attended by employees of the eastern distribution branches. The second convention took place in Chicago on May 12 and 13 and members of the Paramount sales force in the central western states were present. The third happened in New Orleans on May 14 and 15, for the benefit of the southern states. The local convention will be the final one.

Many features will be taken care of during the two-day session here. Chief among these will be the discussion of sales policies for the distribution of Paramount Pictures for ensuing seasons. In addition, exploiteers, salesmen, accessory managers and booking managers will have the opportunity of hearing the further and complete discussion of bookings, exploitation and accessories from high executives of the home office in New York, thereby giving them first hand information from an enthusiastic angle on the problems they confront daily.

A second interesting feature will be Mr. Lasky's first announcement of the pictures to be released for the three months beginning August 1. A tour of the studio and careful examination into the technical details of the production of the photoplays they distribute will be another valuable experience accorded the convening members.

Those who are to be present in Los Angeles for the two days of the convention are the following:

Home office executives from New York: Jesse L. Lasky, S. R. Kent, Eugene Zukor, J. D. Clark, Mel Shauer, E. E. Shauer, Claud Saunders, Charles E. McCarthey, A. M. Botsford, G. B. J. Frawley, G. M. Spidell and William R. Hogan.

Los Angeles: O. V. Traggardh L. O. Brown, M. C. Burles, A. G. Pickett, Carl Ponedel, I. G. White, F. C. Clark and P. S. Wilson.

San Francisco: H. Wobber, H. G. Rosebaum, G. Sullivan, E. Hunter, W. ... Taylor, ... J. Partridge, J. M. Bettencourt, C. A. Roeder, I. P. Arnold and W. A. Mead.

Salt Lake City: Louis Marcus, O. Wog, F. J. Murphy, A. K. Sheperd, K. O. Renaud, L. J. ...cGinley, J. A. English, E. S. Gulbranson, R. Fisher, Frank Smith and J. F. Samuels.

Denver: M. S. Wilson, E. I. Reid, H. B. Fox, Rick Ricketson, H. W. Braly, H. F. Nicholson, E. M. Loy, Harry Antim and A. E. Dickson.

Seattle: G. P. Endert, W. E. Nelson, ... K. Krueger, H. C. Eagles, H. W. West, S. S. Fairchild, H. S. Hoke, S. P. Peck and Morris Segal.

Portland: C. M. Hill, L. G. Stang, A. W. Brink, Frank Vanderhood, H. Neal East and F. C. Gordon.

Regarding the new idea of splitting the semi-annual convention into four separate sessions in various sections of the country, S. R. Kent had this to say:

"I think we have worked out a happy solution of the convention problem by this plan of dividing our semi-annual affair into four parts. While conventions are essential to the proper conduct of a sales campaign, their expense and necessary slowing up of activity have been serious problems. Moreover, conventions attended by only district and branch managers together with home office executives (as was the case in 1922 when but one convention was held, in Los Angeles, for the entire United States) have not reached the maximum fulfillment of their purposes, in many cases, because the interpretation of sales policies is given to the salesmen second hand. By letting the men stay in their offices and taking a small crew about the country to put on conventions, we not only get greater efficiency in delivering our sales messages, but we also do it at smaller cost."

DOUG MOVES TO BAGDAD TO ESSAY ECLIPSING HIS MERRIE OLD ENGLAND FILM

There is every indication that Douglas Fairbanks will not be stopped in his onward march to spectacle supremacy. In fact, he has completed all plans to essay eclipsing his own "Robin Hood" in point of gorgeousness and bigness. But, he will pursue his hobby in a field as diametrically opposite to Merrie Old England as it is possible to imagine, for now he will give expression to his dramatic feelings in the midst of Bagdad environments. The tentative title for the new picture spectacle is "Thief of Bagdad" and plenty of ideas as to what to expect of the irrepressible Doug are afforded by his title.

"Where Robin Hood left off, the Thief of Bagdad will begin." That is the slogan being pasted in the hats of those who will be closely associated with this picture.

On the ten acres recently added to the back of the Pickford-Fairbanks studios, sets of gigantic proportions are already under way. The usual process for the erection of picture structures has been reversed in preparing for the construction work in connection with the new film. As a rule drawings are made, from which models are built, following which the sets are put up. In this instance, models were made first, then the drawings, and finally the sets. This made it possible to get greater latitude in all construction work, and also to express more truthfully the spirit of the artist's designs.

After several months' work, William Cameron Menzes and Irvin J. Martin, especially engaged by Doug to create something wholly different in the way of settings, have produced what it is believed will bring forth a startling innovation in picture edifices.

It is not possible to set forth at this time what these men are striving for in this mammoth production, but there can be no doubt that the new Fairbanks offering will breathe with a new vitality and a beauty so startling that motion picture art as a whole will be pushed to a new pinnacle through the progress of these pioneers in the field of fantasy.

All of the magic which have made the Arabian Nights live for centuries will be incorporated in "The Thief of Bagdad." There will be the magic carpet transporting people through the air; the wondrous crystal will disclose realms pictured in our fancy since childhood. But the method by which it is to be done is a secret being carefully guarded.

Although no names have been definitely announced for the cast, the studio teems with types which are the living image of the pictures which have stamped such stories as "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," and "Sinbad the Sailor," indelibly in our memory.

"Our plan, says Doug, "is to choose players who are the living counterpart of the illustrations of the Arabian Nights. Thus will we carry conviction in our story. While we might achieve this effect with make-up, it would be less effective. It would satisfy the eye, but it would not satisfy the soul.'

One of the unusual sets will have for its base a concrete floor which covers an acre and a half. This work, it is said, will cost $20,000. Around the edge of this floor, which acts as a sort of patio or plaza, will be built the bazaars of Bagdad. Other sets, the foundations for which are now being laid, will tower above the Robin Hood castle, dwarfing it to what will appear to be quite ordinary proportions.

More players will be used in the filming of "The Thief of Bagdad" than appeared in Robin Hood, according to Robert Fairbanks, production manager. Raoul Walsh will direct.

Despite the magnitude of the production, however, it is hoped to have it ready for fall release.

METRO BUYS 3 NEW TALES FOR EARLY PRODUCTION

Three new stories have been purchased by Metro for immediate production, according to an announcement made by Milton E. Hoffman, Metro production manager.

These stories are "Held to Answer," by Peter Clarke McFarlane; "To Whom It May Concern," by Rita Weiman, and "The Spirit of the Road," by Kate Jordan.

"Held to Answer" is a modern drama and will be the second of the Metro all-star specials for the coming season. Winifred Dunn has started work on the screen adaptation and Mr. Hoffman expects to start actual production about June 1. "The Eagle's Feather," a story by Katharine Newlin Burt, is the first of the Metro allstar specials. It is being directed by Edward Sloman.

"To Whom It May Concern" will be Viola Dana's second starring picture for the coming season. It is a mystery drama and the continuity is being prepared by Rex Taylor. Miss Dana is at the present time working on "Rouged Lips," which is also a story by Rita Weiman. It is being directed by Harold Shaw.

"The Spirit of the Road" will be Miss Dana's third starring vehicle. Winifred Dunn will prepare the continuity for this Kate Jordan story, which centers about an American party in France.

STORK BRINGS TWINS TO PRESS AGENT'S HOME

Among recent visitors to the Pickford-Fairbanks studios was the stork, who first of all left a baby girl weighing eight pounds for Charles Warrington publicity photographer for Douglas Fairbanks. Not content with this, however, the stork flapped his wings and flew away, to return again in a few days with twin boys for Mark Larkin, publicity director for Mary and Doug. The Larkin twins weighed seven and six pounds, respectively, and like Mike and Ike they look alike—so much so, in fact, that the doctor tied a string around number one to distinguish him from number two.

Both Mrs. Warrington and Mrs. Larkin are doing nicely, says the stork.

Frances Marion, credited with being one of the best known scenarists in the picture industry, has been assigned the task of adapting the Clyde Fitch play, "Beau Brummel," in which the Warner Brothers will feature John Barrymore.

Demonstrates Versatility

Martha Mattox, the well-known character actress, has given an unusual demonstration of versatility in three of her current pictures. In the Gasnier production of "The Hero," she plays the part of a sweet old mother, while in "Hearts Aflame" she registers pathetic comedy as a wife who would not speak to her own husband, and in "Baiu" she is the most villainous of all Bolsheviks. This is what may be aptly termed running the gauntlet of varieties in dramatic impulses.

HIS KNOWLEDGE OF INDIANS WON HIM HIS FIRST JOB

Fred Kennedy Myton, original story and continuity writer, who has adapted to the screen such well-known film plays as "The Spoilers," "The Brass Bottle," "Wolf Fang," "The Man From Ten Strike,' and many others, looks back to the days when he was government agent for some Indian territory in Garden City, Kansas, as being responsible for his entrance into motion pictures. While engaged in this work Myton became intimately acquainted with the Indians and their manner of dressing, living and customs, which he declares has proved invaluable to him as a photoplay writer.

Myton came to California to visit a cousin and was taken to the old Kalem studios in Glendale, where George Melford, eminent director, was then producing an Indian picture. When it became known around the "lot" that Myton had a broad knowledge of Indian life he was hired by Director Melford as his assistant.

When Melford was engaged to direct for Lasky, Myton went with him and there started his career as a writer. His first story was "To Have and to Hold," in which Mae Murray was starred. Later he served as photoplay writer under the banner of Universal, Jesse D. Hampton and other producers.

Rex Beach, author of "The Spoilers," the picturization of which has just been completed by Goldwyn, declares that Myton's work in handling the continuity for the story is without doubt the most brilliant piece of work he has ever seen.

Myton is at present preparing the screen adaptation of Maurice Tourneur's next super-production, as yet untitled.

Production of Wesley Barry's latest picture, "The Printer's Devil," has been held up at the Warner Brothers' Coast studios due to a complete revision of the story. The picture is being made under the direction of William Beaudine.

"Richard" Is Finished

Herbert Rawlinson has finished another feature for Universal. The title of the latest is "Richard" at present, but a more enlightening title will probably be selected later. David Torrence plays the leading role in support of the star, the part of an English Supreme Justice, and it is said his performance is one of the high lights of this picture. David is, by the way, the brother of the famous Ernest Torrence, who is just now one of the biggest names on the screen.

BLACK FELINES ARE BARRED BY ACTRESS

Mary Alden is not superstitious, but there is a limit to everything. And she has positively refused to appear in any future pictures in which black cats figure in the action. It is too much of a strain on her nerves.

In Metro's all-star production of "The Eagle's Feather," in which Miss Alden is cast for the leading feminine role, several scenes require the use of a dozen coal-black cats.

At the end of the first day's work, the property man could only count eleven of the original dozen. When Miss Alden returned to her dressing room she found the wandering puss calmly asleep on the bottom step.

At the end of the second day another of the midnight meows was reported missing. This time Miss Alden discovered that the animal had slipped inside her dressing room and was contentedly dozing in her cushioned rocking chair.

At the end of the third day still another of the ebony-hued felines could not be located Miss Alden approached her dressing room with some trepidation. Much to her relief, a search gave no trace of the missing cat. On stepping into her automobile, there was tabby curled up on the front seat.

The climax was reached the following day when a trio of the ill-omens insisted on following her to lunch.

And After Years

Helen Ferguson is to realize another one of her ambitions—she is to appear on the screen in a leading role opposite Henry B. Waltnail, in whose company she played her first small part at the Essanay several years ago. Miss Ferguson and Mr Walthal started their portraval of the leading roles in "The Unknown Purple" at the Goldwyn studios and the picture will be ready for release in time for the coming fall season under the Truart banner.

WARNERS GET NEW EXECUTIVE AID FROM EAST

Activities at the Warner Brothers' studios have reached the stage where it becomes necessary to relieve Jack and Sam Warner of much of their production duties with the result that the new Warner studios are to be placed under a general manager. A. Alperstein, pioneer motion picture executive, is the man chosen for the important position. He is due at the studios from New York this week and will commence his duties at once.

The New York office of the Warner Brothers is cared for by A. and H. M. Warner, while J. L. and S. L. are permanently located in Hollywood. H. M. Warner has been at the studios for several weeks and will remain for another month or so until every detail for the coming classics of the screen has received action.

Duties of Alperstein will include the laboratory supervision with which he has been identified for many years. During his picture career, he has been a producer, distributor, exhibitor and laboratory executive. At one time he was head of a national advertising syndicate of much importance.

TWO CHILD VETERANS OF MARY'S FILMS TOGETHER

When the West Coast production of "Why Do We Live?" is released, the public is destined to enjoy a treat in the way of juvenile performance inasmuch as Philippe deLacy, the famous French lad who was rescued at the front by an American nurse during the World War, and Lynwood Crystal Rapp, called by many the most beautiful child on the screen, and who will be remembered long for her portrayal of the important child part in Mary Pickford's "Pollyanna," are the two outstanding luminaries in this picture and around them the whole plot revolves. It is interesting to note that little Philippe had just finished playing an important role in Mary Pickford's newest picture when he stated in "Why Do We Live?" and hence both of these child artists can claim tutorship under the personal direction of the incomparable Mary.

Seeling Starts Another

Charles R. Seeling started production this week on his thirteenth picture in which "Big Boy" Williams is the star. This one is called "Cross Trails" and is a western story. The twelfth of this series, just completed, has been given the title of "The Rider of Devil's Hoof" and it will be released late during the mid-summer season.

SCREEN FOLKS GIVE HOME TO VETS

Again the Hollywood film colony rises to the support of the Disabled Veterans of the World War.

Nearly five years ago when hostilities between the United States troops and its allies ceased abroad and the troops were demobilized and transported back to their native land, many of those heroes who so nobly defended their country against invasion of the enemy and helped to make the world safe for democracy returned in a crippled, maimed or otherwise incapacitated condition.

In nearly every large city of the country clubs were formed by the veterans, but in none of these cities could the veterans call the clubhouse their own.

In Los Angeles, however, it is different.

The motion picture people, always ready and willing to give a helping hand to any worthy cause, realized how much better and comfortable the veterans would feel if they owned their clubhouse. A monster benefit entertainment was staged by the film folks and as a result of the event sufficient proceeds were derived to purchase outright a clubhouse at 246 South Hill street for the "vets."

The motion picture profession didn't stop there. From time to time members of the film colony have visited the clubrooms, spreading good cheer among the heroes, many of whom are unable to enjoy the pleasures that we enjoy. They have provided the men with smokes, goodies and luxuries which have helped to keep them in the best of spirits.

The veterans have now decided to convince the world that they are not depending on outsiders for their support. They have started something that stamps them as ambitious, progressive and shrewd.

One hundred of the veterans have managed to raise $500 each and with a capitalization of $50,000 they are going in business for themselves in Hollywood. On May 26 they are to open an electrical household appliance store at 5177 Hollywood boulevard, to be known as the 100 Service Plan, Inc., and from this business they hope to obtain an income which will be sufficient to provide for themselves and their families.

A number of the veterans have recently completed a course in business methods at the Southern Branch of the University of Southern California, which training they will apply to the operation of the business.

Among the movie folks who are assisting the veterans in their new venture is Helen Ferguson, well-known and popular film star, who since the men established their clubhouse in Los Angeles has been an almost weekly visitor at their "home."

Miss Ferguson has been instrumental in helping to launch their business, which is the first step of its kind to be taken by disabled veterans in any city of the country. On opening day Miss Ferguson, together with other stars of the screen, will be present at the store to assist the men who are to conduct the business.

The entire film colony has pledged its support to the venture, which from every indication will be one of the greatest successes.

Entertains Jonathan Club

Gene Metcalf, the much talked-of impersonator who closed here as a headliner in vaudeville, entertained at the Jonathan Club under direction of Miss Dye on the night of May 15. Metcalf will appear in Fred Caldwell's forthcoming "Hogan in Hollywood," in two separate and distinct roles, both as male and female heavies.

No Vode for Her

Andree Lafayette, the charming Norman girl who is playing the name part in Richard Walton Tully's screen production of du Maurier's "Trilby," has received a flattering offer from a prominent vaudeville agency for a tour after the completion of "Trilby," but inasmuchas she is under a long-term contract for First National Pictures, she is unable to give the proposition consideration at this time.

SON OF RICH MAN MAKES SPEED IN FILMS

John Henry, son of a multi-millionaire Boston family, who recently wended his footsteps Hollywood-way to seek fame in motion pictures, has created a stir in film circles for the speed in which he has obtained his first offer to appear in stellar roles. Less than four weeks ago young Henry resigned as vice-president of one of the largest shoe manufacturing concerns in New England, owned by his father, and came to Los Angeles to join the ranks of motion picture players. When it became known that the young aristocrat was in town he was beseiged with invitations to social affairs, entertainments and house parties, and he soon became a popular figure in filmland.

While being entertained by the social set in the film city young Henry made the acquaintance of a well-known film producer who, impressed with his magnetic personality, gave him a try-out in his current production. The young Bostonian photographed remarkably and convinced the producer of his ability to interpret difficult roles, all of which has led to the signing of a contract between young Henry and the producer whereby the former is shortly to appear as the featured player in a series of stories dealing with society life.

Ballins Go to New York

Hugo and Mabel Ballin, respectively director and star of Goldwyn's "Vanity Fair," have left for New York. Final negotiations on several production offers which they are considering requires their presence in the east, from which they have been absent nearly a year.

MISSION ASSEMBLES 16 STARS FOR NEW FILM

No less than sixteen stars of recognized prominence have been engaged by the Mission Film Company to portray the principal roles in "The Barefoot Boy," an original story from the pen of Wallace Clifton, who has also prepared the screen adaptation. Among the artists are John Bowers, Marjorie Daw, Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton, George MacDaniel, Virginia True Boardman, Sylvia Breamer, Brinsley Shaw, Otis Harlan and Frankie Lee.

The picture is now in production at the Fine Arts studios under the direction of David Kirkland, formerly director for Selznick, who received high praise from photoplay critics for his capable direction of "The Virtuous Vamp," "Reported Missing," and other successes made under the Selznick banner.

According to Leon Rice, president of the company, "The Barefoot Boy" is being made for release through one of the country's largest releasing organizations.

DOUG AND MARY TO KEEP BUSY

The Pickford-Fairbanks studios will be a place of perpetual activity during all of the present year, according to production plans which have just been announced.

Even though Mary Pickford plans to finish "The Street Singer," her new picture, by the end of May, there will be no let-down, as it is expected that Doug's newest contribution, "The Thief of Bagdad," will be in full swing by that time.

Gigantic sets for this spectacular production are now rising with almost the same magic as self, with its magic, carpets, will be expressed in the film itgeniis, fantastic adventures and Arabian Nights flavor.

One of the features of the new Fairbanks picture will be the acre and a half of concrete plaza, around which will be erected the buildings of Bagdad.

Miss Pickford will plunge immediately into a new picture—either "Dorothy Vernon of Hadden Hall" or "Faust," both of which she has scenarios for, as soon as she completes her current film. This will be in accordance with her plans as announced early in the season—to do two pictures while her husband is completing one, thus supplying a larger output for the United Artists Corporation, which releases the photoplays of these two stars.

It is also expected that Jack Pickford will soon start production on a new film play. At present he is supervising the preparation of a story of the Kentucky mountains somewhat similar to previous films which have proved excellent vehicles for him.

MAURICE IS A MODEST MAN TO MANAGE THIS

Many friends of Maurice Canon, a native Frenchman, who is portraying the role of "Zouzou" in "Trilby," have been attracted to an unusually large gold signet ring which the actor wears. Not until the other day, however, would Canon disclose its origin and significance. But now that his friends have learned the history of the ring they have bestowed upon the Frenchman the title of a "perfectly modest actor." It seems Canon was formerly a count in France and that the ring was the family seal. Imagine an actor, three months in America, who had hesitated about telling anyone of his foreign title, to which he is actually entitled!

PICTURE THEATRES MAY VANISH IN TEN YEARS

Can you imagine this country with no screen theatres in ten years?

No?—but this is the opinion of one who knows!

"There will be no pictures in ten years—unless the public is educated up to them," is the startling statement of Wallace Worsley, directing "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" at Universal City, the biggest photodrama of the season, with Lon Chaney and twenty big stars. It will take over four months to produce, and will not be ready for showing until fall.

"We must enlighten the public, then retain their confidence," states Mr. Worsley, a student of the films and life in general.

"Many people have not been in a picture theatre in over a year. This is wrong, because they have missed many inspiring plays. They are dwellers in the past; holders of ancient aversions to the nickelodeon and trashy theaters, before the advent of the modern photoplay palace.

"They must understand the progress of pictures; must be brought back to the celluloid shrine and be shown that we are putting more money and effort into our productions each year.

"When Belasco gave his audiences a real door instead of the old shaky canvas affair, they gasped and went away to talk about it. But he educated them; gave them more for their money, and put the stage on a more solid foundation. That has followed in a general way on the screen. But we are now in a condition of change and improvement. Instead of flimsy settings we are today building sets of stone, cement and wood. We exert every possible ounce of effort to make the picture a living reality—for the amusement and edification of the public. Now we must go out and tell them about it.

"If we do not retain the public's favor, they will forget us. The readjustments of the past two years have wrought untold good, but now is the time, the supreme moment, to 'make the sale' and keep Old Man Public's order."

Wilson Finishing Picture

Ben Wilson is drawing near the finish line on his latest feature production, "Mine to Keep," according to Ashton Dearholt, production manager. Dearholt declares this latest picture will surpass any effort heretofore made by Mr. Wilson, and will include such celebrities in its cast as Bryant Washburn, Mrs. Bryant Washburn, Wheeler Oakman, Charlotte Stevens and Kate Lester.

BOY DOUBLES FOR GIRL, DEFIES IDENTIFICATION

Among the several important productions to be completed in Hollywood this week is the Victor Fisher production of "Youth Triumphant," in which a very remarkable feat was accomplished. It happened thus: Virginia Lee Corbin, the child artist who is the star of the picture, was taken ill just as the filming reached its height, and to postpone activities for a week at that time would have entailed a tremendous financial loss. Hence Jack Murphy, another child prodigy, was called and substituted for little Miss Corbin. Despite the fact that he is a regular boy in all the term implies, he was "made up" to look so identically like the star and he imitated her style of acting so accurately that it is said even experts cannot ascertain in what scenes he actually participated. This is probably the first time in the history of the cinema art that a boy has ever taken a girl's place so successfully, and although it was necessary to use him in only a few scenes, unlimited credit is due Master Murphy who, by the way, gives promise of developing into one of the screen's truly great dramatic artists.

DOUG. AND MARY ADD TEN ACRES TO STUDIO

The additional ten acres which Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford purchased adjoining their already extensive studio holdings now appears inadequate for the massive sets being built for their forthcoming productions, "The Thief of Bagdad," and "The Street Singer."

The first structure for Doug's picture is well under way and covers approximately five acres built partly on a triangular and partly on a hexagonal ground plan. This set when completed will represent a street scene of Old Bagdad, carried out on an elaborate scale. It is a fantastic replica designed from actual photographs of this picturesque city in Persia.

The proposition which Doug is now confronted with is how many more acres will he have to acquire in order to construct the balance of sets being designed.

Miss Pickford hopes to complete "The Street Singer" by the end of May, which will leave the Fairbanks company as the only unit producing on the lot.

Clary Advising King

Charles Clary, "handsomest villain of the screen," is cultivating a moustache for his part in the Emmett Flynn production, "In the Palace of the King." Incidentally, Clary does not have a villainous role in the sixteenth century spectacle Flynn is making for the Goldwyn studios. He will play the role of Gomez, advisor to King Philip II

MILDRED HARRIS DUE IN HOLLYWOOD JUNE 1

Max Graf, supervising director of the Graf productions for Metro, who has signed Mildred Harris on a two years' contract to be a featured player in his productions, has some interesting plans for Miss Harris, at present in New York, where he has loaned her to a producing company for a picture. Upon completion of her work, she will return to Hollywood about June 1 to be in readiness for the role she will enact in "The Grain of Dust," which Mr. Graf has adapted from the book by David Graham Phillips and which will be produced at the San Mateo studios.

Between pictures Mr. Graf will loan her to an English company for one picture to be made in London, this to be combined with a personal appearance tour in England.

MONTE WEST, M. P. P. A., TO JOIN BOB HORNER

Monte West, who was one of the prime factors in establishing the Hollywood office of the Motion Picture Players' Association, has severed his connections with that institution and is now actively on a new job as production manager and casting director for the Bob Horner productions, with offices at 1442 Beechwood Drive. Monte will co-operate with Mr. Horner in the production of the remainder of his current series of mountain dramas. The one recently finished boasts an all-star cast, including Marjorie Daw, Jack Perrin and Otto Lederer. Mr. West is one of the most energetic workers in all fildom, and he thinks nothing of sixteen-hour days when in the midst of production. His many friends will wish him well in his new executive position.

LLOYD GETS HIS MITS READY FOR SOME SOCKING

When it got nosed around the Hollywood motion picture colony that Lloyd Hughes was spending an hour a day taking boxing lessons at the Hollywood Y. M. C. A. the film players of that part of the world began to sit up and take notice.

Is he going to desert the screen for the squared ring?

Is he getting ready to thrash someone?

These were the questions which naturally arose in the minds of his many friends. For a while there was wild speculation. Then the truth came out.

Hughes was simply preparing for his part in "The Huntress," a First National picture, in which he is called upon to stage a thrilling fist fight with Walter Long, who plays the part of a brokendown prize fighter and fights with Hughes in one of the most dramatic scenes of the picture.

USES STEER HORNS FOR COWBOY HAT RACK

Back in the days when Jack Hoxie, Universal Western star, was a "forty a month" cowpuncher down in Oklahoma he used to indulge in that favorite and most dangerous of all rodeo sports, "bull dogging."

And there wasn't a steer in the southwest that could stand up against the husky youth when Jack got his hands on his horns. That he was an expert at this particular type of death-risking enjoyment he proved to the west's satisfaction in 1910 by establishing a new time record which the boys are still shooting at. He bulldogged a steer in ten seconds flat, and this still stands as the world's record in this particular event.

Now that he is a motion picture star and such pastimes no longer form a tangible part of his bread-winning endeavors, Hoxie often has a childish yearning for the days of old.

A few days ago he surprised his pals at Universal City by tramping down dressing room row with a pair of steer horns that he had to carry side-ways to keep from hooking out the windows on each side. They were more than five feet from tip to tip.

The horns were souvenirs from Jack's victory over one of the most vicious steers in the southwest, which won for him the championship title at Bakersfield, Calif., in 1910. The steer had killed three men. So in honor of Jack's victory the managers of the rodeo had the steer killed and presented Jack with the horns.

Until a few days ago the horns had been decorating one corner of a stable at Hoxie's ranch. Now the cowbodys in his outfit at Universal City hang their sombreros on the horns when they visit Jack in his dressing room.

JEWELER IS ADDED TO GOLDWYN'S BIG STAFF

Now comes the jeweler and his tools and torches to join the group of artisans who make Goldwyn pictures. R. A. Mattey, diamond setter and platinum worker of note, who for two years headed the Southwest School of Industrial Art, training disabled soldiers for the government, is the jeweler. Mattey is making the many bits of carved and figured ornaments of gold and silver for use in Emmett Flynn's "In the Palace of the King," and Marshall Neilan's "The Rendezvous."

Because of the periods and distant lands in which the stories are laid, many of the articles being made would be impossible to obtain in the shops.

MEDICINE SCIENCE AIDS FILM REALISM

Several of the most noted chemical and medical experts in the United States acted as technical advisers with William Parke, film director, and Milton Sills, star at Universal City, during the filming of the final scenes of "Legally Dead," new mystery play, which has just been completed. The experts supervised the scenes showing life being restored by the use of adrenalin, the strange chemical whose properties, just discovered, have upset the entire medical world.

The play is based on the bringing of a man, killed by hanging, back to life by use of the uncanny drug. It has been done in real life—news dispatches are full of it daily—and Charles Furthmann's play, written three years ago and then deemed a "dream," today is a play based on reality.

The actual details of the operation, as portrayed on the film were supervised by George C. Frolich of Boston, sales manager of the drug and chemical division of the United Drug Company, an international organization. Frolich, twenty years ago, put the first adrenalin on the market in America, when a member of the research staff of the Parke-Davis laboratories and since then has been internationally known as an expert on the drug. With him were H. L. Simpson, vice-president of the firm; George A. Wilson, research expert, and his son, Russell Simpson, and G. F. Pfaffenberger, general manager of the Owl Drug Company.

Milton Sills, as the executed convict in the play, underwent the operation in mimic several times while the experts checked every move. Several physicians also were on hand to criticize and suggest.

The play stars Milton Sills supported by Claire Adams and a large cast. It was filmed behind closed doors and practically completed before the idea was allowed to be made public, lest other producers seize on the idea.

Hines is Hurt

Johnny Hines, star of "Little Johnny Jones," now in production by Warner Brothers, is taking a forced rest as the result of an injury he sustained last week while on location. He received a deep cut about the hand when some thick glass overhead worked loose of its frame and fell. Director Rosson rendered temporary aid until Johnny could be treated by a doctor. His hand was dressed by Dr. Harry W. Martin of Los Angeles on board an English tramp steamer, "The City of Pekin," which is docked in the San Pedro harbor.

A BOY IN A MILLION AND ONE THAT LOOKS LIKE A "A MILLION," TOO

When it comes to child prodigies, will wonders never cease? Can you imagine a boy of eight years who can sit at a piano and play Chopin or Mendelsohnn perfectly without ever having had a single lesson? And then can you imagine that same extremely artistic youngster hopping into "sea-going togs" and win a championship swimming contest, perhaps after a friendly boxing contest in which he had knocked out a couple of young huskies?

Well, just such a boy is Maurice Murphy, son of John F. Murphy, noted attorney of New York and Seattle. Maurice at present is all enthused over moving picture work and since someone who witnessed his performance in "The Self-Made Wife," recently completed at Universal City, has called him "the little aristocrat of the screen," he is frankly out to live up to the name, and despite all the dissuading tactics his distinguished father can interpose, he's going to stick to the cinema ship to the finish.

Nor does it seem as though he will experience much difficulty in keeping busy inasmuch as his interpretation of the character of Tim, Jr., opposite Ethel Grey Terry in this new Universal feature is said to be an outstanding high-light of the whole production. He also plays an important part in the prologue of the Hal Roach production of "The Call of the Wild."

As a pianist, Maurice is so extraordinary that his parents have been offered almost fabulous sums if they would consent to let him tour various vaudeville circuits. He has such a soul for music that to create it impromptu is as natural for him as it is for the average person to converse. Many of his best compositions have never been recorded on paper, but if he plays one once he never forgets it. However, there are several of his best compositions well on the wa yto publication right now and his friends freely predict that he is destined to become one of this country's foremost composers of more serious works providing he does not concentrate too much of his time on screen work.

The accomplishments in which Maurice excels always have been natural traits with him. For instance, the first time he was ever in a swimming pool he proceeded to swim as if he had always been an expert at it and very soon he developed into something of an aquatic marvel. On a recent occasion he was participating in some water scenes in a Johnny Jones comedy in which he was supposed to swim across a lake with a dog. The canine in this case was Buck, the well-known screen dog, and when the scene was being photographed for the first time, Maurice outdistanced the animal with the greatest of ease. Ask anyone who knows and you will learn that the matter of outswimming a dog is some difficult matter. But Maurice accomplished this to such an extent that the scene had to be retaken with instructions for him to "hold back" in order that both he and the dog might stay in camera range.

Maurice Murphy

There are all kinds of highly talented children in motion pictures today, but it is doubtful whether or not there is one more versatile than Master Murphy. He should be able to find his place—and a very high one—in the cinema sun, primarily because he is a natural-born little master of dramatic acting, according to such directors as King Baggot and Jack Dillon.

"BABY" LEADING LADY IS ENGAGED BY NEILAN

The youngest "leading lady" in motion pictures has been found.

Likewise Lucille Ricksen, sixteen-year-old actress, has been given her big opportunity that will start her on the road to stardom.

By reason of his selection of little Miss Ricksen to portray the feminine role in his newest production, Marshall Neilan is responsible for the introduction of filmdom's youngest "leading lady." The part in the Russian story now being produced at the Goldwyn studio is a grown-up character which many older and more established actresses have aspired to portray.

Miss Ricksen will play opposite Conrad Nagel in "The Rendezvous." Others in the cast include Sydney Chaplin, Emmett Corrigan, Elmo Lincoln, Eugenie Besserer, Richard C. Travers and Cecil Holland.

POLA'S RIVAL NOW HERE TO WIN FAME

Pola Negri has a screen rival.

Sylva Nadina has arrived in Hollywood, fresh from Poland, the land where the famous Pola hails from, and she has journeyed these thousands of miles to California's famous film colony to make her name in the American movies.

In Poland, Sylva Nadina is noted for her beauty and talents. She has been in theatricals since her childhood and appeared before the footlights in both dramatic offering and light opera. She has toured Europe and appeared before the footlights in both dramatic offerings and light opera. She has toured Europe with several noted repertoire companies, playing Paris, Berlin, Moscow, London and practically all of the principal cities.

She has also appeared in several foreign films and her success in these has brought her to America in search of a better field.

Miss Nadina is somewhat on the Negri type, but taller. She has dark hair and eyes and is a little over five feet six in height.

She speaks English fluently but with a broad accent.

She says that she is not a Pola Negri imitator and will not attempt to emulate her famous countrywoman, but will try to express her own personality.

Miss Nadina is stopping at the Hollywood hotel, but will soon move to a bungalow in the foothills which has been rented for her.

She has several offers from film producers under consideration and her first American screen appearance will probably be in a leading role in a new production to be made by William P. S. Earle, well-known producer, who is just completing the film spectacle, "Tutankhamen."

BAGGOT DENIES HE HAS PLANS TO ACT AGAIN

King Baggot has issued an emphatic denial of the report that he is to return to the screen as an actor.

The Universal director, who used to star in the early days, branded as false the report published in a New York paper that a syndicate of Gotham business men were organizing a company to star him in big productions. Baggot says:

"I have just signed a new contract to direct for Carl Laemmle, and I have no intention of leaving the organization. Mr. Laemmle has just entrusted me with a big Jewel production starring Baby Peggy, and our relations are extremely cordial."

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Lewis Gets London Offer

Ralph Lewis has just received an offer from the London Film Company in England to go there and play the featured role in a big screen drama based on the life of the famous Dr. Samuel Johnson. According to the offer Lewis' splendid characterization of the miser in "The Conquering Power" was responsible for him getting the offer to portray the role of one of the greatest and most unique figures in English literature. Husky Ralph will be unable to accept the offer, owing to his newly signed long-time contract.

When N. G. is N. G.

Muriel Frances Dana gave her friends a laugh the other day at the Metro studios during the filming of scenes for "Desire." Muriel's mother was speaking to members of the cast regarding a trip that the company was to make for locations. She mentioned Muriel's school lessons, and said that Muriel would have to continue them during the trip.

"But, mother," spoke up the tiny starlet, "can't we N. G. the lessons for a while?"

Bevan to Vacation

His contract with Mack Sennett being all but completed, Billy Bevan who has been appearing in two-reelers at the Edendale studio, is making plans for a vacation which will last several months. He is considering several propositions, and has decided to remain on the screen. Bevan is an Australian by birth and was formerly a member of the Pollard Opera Company. His first engagement was at the Morosco stock company theatre, and shortly thereafter he was signed up for the comedies.

Mrs. Webb Seriously Ill

Millard Webb, production manager for Warner Brothers, left Hollywood this week for his father-in-law's home in Chicago, where his wife is seriously ill. Mrs. Webb is the daughter of G. E. Stocking, president of the American Canners' Association, and has been confined to a sick bed since January of this year. Failure to respond to medical treatment has resulted in a serious condition. At the time of his departure, Webb, with Jack Warner, was making preliminary preparations for the "Tiger Rose" production which Sidney Franklin is to supervise for the Warners.

E. R. Hickson, art director for the Ben Wilson productions, operating at the Berwilla studios, claims the distinction of being one of the very few technical experts about a studio who has received fan letters. A letter reached Los Angeles last week from Honolulu, written by a native son, who evidently became enthused over Mr. Hickson's work in the last Ben Wilson production to be released. Mr. Hickson has served as art director to Mr. Wilson for the last two years.

Takes Typewriter in Hand

Louise Fazenda has been hitting the keys of the typewriter she received last Christmas until 1 a. m. this week and has now completed and sent to an eastern fan magazine an installment of "Screen Impressions," in which she has characterized ten notables of filmdom. About a year ago Miss Fazenda had space monthly in this magazine with her impressions which made such a hit that she has been assigned to a second series. The comedienne plans to have more installments ready before she commences the role of "Mabel," which she will negotiate in Warner Brothers' "The Gold Diggers."

Bruce a L. A. Baby

Bruce Guerin, the clever youngster who will be seen next week at Loew's State with Viola Dana in "Love in the Dark," is a Los Angeles baby. His mother was a well-known Orpheum star in his father is technical director at a local studio. The work of this three and a half-year-old kiddie has won such favorable comment from both critics and public that he is now called "the Baby David Warfield" of the screen.

Syd a Bashful Juggler

Sydney Chaplin, who is now playing the part of an English Tommy in Marshall Neilan's Russian story, "The Rendezvous," displays a trait which has been attributed to such geniuses as Ethel Barrymore, Mary Pickford, and even Syd's famous brother, Charlie—he is bashful. Syd has a difficult juggling feat to perform, and although he enacts it with dexterity and skill when the camera is pointed at him, no one ever sees him practicing. Between scenes he disappears—his fellow actors accuse him of having a dugout somewhere—and practices in solitude until called by Mickey Neilan to "do his stuff."

Directors Cry for Him

Cecil Holland, known in film circles for his uncanny ability to change his face into anything required for motion pictures, and who recently signed a long-term Goldwyn contract, is now enacting a difficult role in "The Rendezvous," Marshall Neilan's production. Holland's assignment to the Neilan picture made three directors envious. Tod Browning, who is to direct "The Day of Faith," wanted Holland; Charles Brabin wanted him for "Six Days," and Emmett Flynn, who is directing "In the Palace of the King," also wanted the make-up expert for a part in his picture.

Vidor Seeks New Story

The days are not long enough for King Vidor. Here he is spending an average working day editing "Three Wise Fools," which he has just finished directing for Goldwyn, and then he turns around and lets himself in for another eight-hour shift when he attempts to read all the manuscripts, novels, plays and synopses which are stacked up in his office waiting his decision.

In a Quandary

Architects, contractors and accountants are busily engaged with Allen Holubar in estimating whether it will be cheaper for the young Metro producer to take a company to the Orient to make "East of Suez" from Lloyd Sheldon's stage play, or whether money can be saved by building the Oriental streets and structures required in the production in Hollywood. "East of Suez" will be Holubar's second picture under his new million-dollar contract with Metro. The production will be made on a lavish scale with an all-star cast.

Hazel Deane Recovering

Hazel Deane, Christie leading woman, who has been seriously ill in the hospital for seven weeks, is on the road to recovery, and has been able to return to her home. Miss Deane was stricken with peritonitis and for four weeks lay at the point of death, when with four doctors in consultation an operation was decided upon. She won on the bare chance of recovery and is now rapidly regaining her strength. It will be several weeks, however, before she will be able to resume her film work.

Woodsmen Washed Up

"Back to the Woods," the Christie comedy which was filmed in the main near Mount Lassen in Northern California, has been completed under Scott Sidney's direction, and is scheduled for release in June. This comedy, preceded by "Plumb Crazy," will complete a year's series of pictures, twenty in all. Neal Burns is starred in "Back to the Woods," while Bobby Vernon is the comedy star in "Plumb Crazy."

Mrs. Corrigan Joins Husband

Mrs. Emmett Corrigan, lovely Irish girl on the stage of not so many years ago, and known professionally as Mary Ilene Mack, has arrived in Los Angeles from New York to be with her husband, who is playing an important part with Marshal Neilan in his Russian drama, "The Rendezvous." As Mr Corrigan was in the costume of a Russian colonel and under a heavy coat of grease paint at the time of the arrival of Mrs. Corrigan's train, William Farnum, Corrigan's fellow "Ben Hur," did the honors in welcoming her to screenland. She will remain until her husband completes his picture work here.

"Asquittal" Script Ready

Jules Purthman, whose scenario successes have included such special productions as "The Queen of Sheba" and "Victory," has finished his latest effort, the continuity of "The Acquittal," which is Priscilla Dean's next Universal-Jewel starring vehicle. As a stage play, written by Rita Weiman, it was a pronounced success, having a great run in New York, and just recently opened to an appreciative public in London. Clarence L. Brown will direct the filming, with a cast of importance in support of Miss Dean.

Turpin On His Feet Again

Under the supervision of Mack Sennett, Herman Raymaker has completed the second Ben Turpin special, for Pathe release, titled "Pitfalls of a Big City." The zigzag orbed comedy star claims to be happier this time than at almost any other, that his picture is finished, because as he says himself, "Now I will be able to stay in an upright position for a while. The last few days I worked in 'Pitfalls' I was on my head most of the time."

CREIGHTON, BEING LATE ONE, IS "HELD UP"

In order to complete his screen version of "Trilby" on schedule time, Richard Walton Tully's company has been doing much night work recently. Several nights last week the troupe worked until morning, and frequently during that time were back on the job at 1 o'clock in the afternoon.

Creighton Hale, the "little Billee" of the play, insists that upon his arrival home in the cool, gray dawn of one morning he was mistaken for an intruder and assaulted by his two sons, who had grown up and forgotten their daddy, while Philo McCollough, the Taffy in Trilby, tells in all sincerity of having been bitten by his own dog upon his return home after an all-night session.

WONDER CHILD OF STAGE RETURNS TO SCREEN

Following a tour of the Pantage's circuit in a special dancing act, Lynwood Crystal Rapp, six-year-old child artist, has resumed her work in motion pictures, having been engaged this week by James Calnay to play an important child part opposite little Philippe deLacy in "Why Do We Live?" a story exposing the evils of capital punishment.

Lynwood Crystal Rapp

Little Miss Rapp made her screen debut several years ago in support of Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna." This followed her work on the stage as a singer and dancer in Gus Edwards' Revue, in which she toured vaudeville circuits for some time. Her work in motion pictures was also preceded by her work as an artist's model, she having posed for such notables as Charles Dana Gibson, Earle Christy, and others.

Miss Rapp is considered a child of rare beauty and this, together with her ability to enact emotional roles, has added the greatest interest to pictures in which she has appeared. She is a direct descendant of the Duke of Wellington and her beauty reverts back to his time.

She is a native of Memphis, Tenn., where her family is among the more select and prominent.

Her talents are such as to have inspired Gus Edwards to declare that the amusement world never has seen any artist like her since Lillian Russell. She is a dazzling little beauty, who, besides being alluring in her vivacious moments, is claimed to be the most emotional child artist before the public today.

LESSER CHANGES PLANS, BUT NOT AUTHORS

The millions of Harold Bell Wright readers who have been awaiting the filming of "The Barbara Worth" by Principal Pictures Corporation, will have to wait a few months longer.

Sol Lesser, president of the organization, announces that due to the huge amount of research work necessary to properly film the story and due also to the many important details necessary before starting, it is decided to postpone actual filming on the story until early in September.

However, the Wright fans will not be utterly disappointed, for with this announcement from Lesser, comes word that another Harold Bell Wright story will take "Barbara's" place. This is 'When a Man's a Man," a story which has almost an equal number of book sales throughout the world.

And strange to say, the characters that were cast for "Barbara Worth" are ideally suited to "When a Man's a Man." Florence Vidor and John Bowers will have the principal roles and a strong supporting cast is now being assembled.

Work is being rushed at top speed on the script and the company will shortly leave for Arizona, the "location" or practically all of the famous author's works.

Meanwhile research workers will be kept busy preparing full data for "Barbara Worth," so that when September appears on the calendar, the Principal Pictures Corporation will be fully prepared to film this great story.

Harold Bell Wright has telegraphed Mr. Lesser to the effect he will be prepared to assist in every manner on the filming of his "When a Man's a Man" and that he is already making preparations to journey from his Tucson ranch to Prescott, Arizona, where most of the episodes will be given to the screen.

"It is against the policy of our organization to start a story until every detail pertaining to its filming is in readiness," said Sol Lesser, in speaking of the postponement of "Barbara Worth." "We found," continued the film official, "that there was still much preparation to complete before we could proceed very far, and consequently it was decided to wait until every detail irrespective of its importance, had been arranged.

"I have every reason to feel that 'When a Man's a Man' will be an equally popular story and fortunately, there is not nearly as much advance preparation necessary. Edward F. Cline who was contracted for to direct 'Barbara Worth,' will act in a like capacity for the new Wright story and I am convinced that in this novel we will be able to obtain a truly remarkable photoplay—one that will have a wide appeal and one that the Harold Bell Wright readers and all the picture fans will relish viewing."

FOR THOSE WHO MAY INQUIRE FOR MISS McGUIRE

Kathryn McGuire is a very busy girl nowadays who is amply justifying the Wampas' inclusion of her among the 1922 series of the Stars of Tomorrow. She has just finished playing the "leads" in two independent productions made by Richard Thomas at the Hollywood studios and entitled "The Silent Accuser" and "Other Men's Money." Today she starts at Warner Brothers' studio, creating the role of Vivian Gates in the Julien Josephson story of newspaper life in a small town. Its present title is "The Printer's Devil"; Wesley Barry has the name part and Harry Meyers will also be featured in the cast, which is being directed by William Beaudine.

In the short space of eighteen months, since she played in Mack Sennett comedies, Miss McGuire has worked in eight dramatic productions and one feature length comedy. These include "The Silent Call," "The Crossroads of New York," "Bucking the Line," "Playing With Fire," "The Woman in Bronze," "The Flame of Life," the two Thomas productions, and "The Shriek of Araby." Recently she completed her long-term contract with Sennett and since the first of the year she has been freelancing.

A recent distinction which visited this young star of tomorrow was her invitation by the Beta Delta Beta fraternity of St. John's College in Annapolis to be the guest of honor at the annual June ball of the institution. This is the first time in collegiate history that any motion picture actress has been chosen for this, the greatest tribute of popularity and esteem within the power of the student body.

Another signal honor which came to Miss McGuire was her selection as honorary first prize winner in the American beauty contest recently conducted by a group of prominent eastern motion picture publications. From the thousands of film players whose photographs were entered in this contest Kathryn McGuire was chosen as the American beauty by so eminent a group of connoisseurs as James Montgomery Flagg, Clarence Underwood, Eugene V. Brewster and others.

Richard Bennett has been engaged by Sam Goldwyn to create the role of "Bruno," in his forthcoming production, "The Eternal City," which will be made in Italy, under the direction of Mr. George Fitzmaurice.

FINIS FOX GETS A NEW RELEASE CONTRACT

After one of the quickest trips on record, Finis Fox, author, director and independent film producer, returned last week from New York, where he closed a releasing contract with Associated Exhibitors for his latest feature production, "The Man Between," a drama of modern life in the quaint old city of Quebec.

Mr. Fox cut and titled his picture while en route east and notwithstanding the fact that he was offered several releasing contracts by other companies, he signed with Associated Exhibitors three days after his arrival in the eastern metropolis.

"The Man Between" was written and directed by Finis Fox and adapted to the screen by Lois Zellner. Sam Landers, who has to his credit such successful pictures as "The Clansman," "The River's End,' and others, was in charge of the photography.

Included in the cast are such well-known artists as Alan Forrest, Vola Vale, Edna Murphy, Kittie Bradbury, Philo McCullough, Fred Malatesta and little Doreen Turner.

Mr. Fox will resume production activities at once at the Fine Art studios. His next picture will be a comedy drama written by himself in collaboration with Miss Zellner, entitled "Bag and Baggage.' Practically his same production staff will be re-engaged and a cast of exceptional names will be selected to portray the principal roles in the story.

BOLAND IS SUPPORTING JACKIE COOGAN AGAIN

Eddie Boland is playing with Jackie Coogan again. This time he's the personal bodyguard to the Crown Prince Ferdinand William Otto, which is the role being created by Jackie in the picturization of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Long Live the King," now being filmed at the Metro studios under the direction of Victor Schertzinger and the personal supervision of Jack Coogan, Sr.

Eddie Boland is an old-time favorite on the coast, who started in child parts with the Grand Opera House stock company in San Francisco and later became treasurer of this theatre, only to return behind the footlights after he achieved long trousers and a bass voice.

Boland played the role of Toby Crackitt in the Jackie Coogan picturization of "Oliver Twist."

Bob Dillon is directing the "Santa Fe Trail," a Neva Gerber production, at the Brentwood studios.

Boyce Combe is in Miami working on the finishing scenes of T. Hays Hunter's production, "Wild Love."

In real life Claude King and Evelyn Walsh Hall are husband and wife. In Charles J. Brabin's production of "Six Days" they are brother and sister.

Mary Jane Sanderson, who plays one of the leading roles in "Blow Your Own Horn," for Robertson-Cole, has purchased a bungalow in the Hollywood Hills.

Ben Lyon will leave the cast of "Mary the Third," having been engaged to play one of the leading roles in Sam Goldwyn's screen version of "Potash and Perlmutter."

Elias Bullock, popular Russian actor, late of the Khanjonkoff Company, Moscow, has been engaged to play Arthur Rand in the "Santa Fe Trail," a Neva Gerber production.

Wyndham Standing is now playing one of the leading roles in "Little Johnnie Jones," the George M. Cohan stage play being produced by Authur Rosson for Warner Brothers.

Warner Baxter, who plays one of the leading roles in "Blow Your Own Horn," has gotten the real estate fever and has purchased several lots in the vicinity of the Power Studios.

Pierre Collings has completed shooting "Blow Your Own Horn" for F. B. O. and will shortly begin work on "Alimony" under the direction of Emile Chautard for the same organization.

"Tiny" Sanford, who just finished playing the "heavy" with the Andy Gump Company at Universal City, is now supporting Milbourne Moranti in a new comedy being filmed at the Russell studios.

Derelys Perdue has finally convinced the executives of the Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., that her screen name should be Derelys. The F. B. O. organization held a contest in a film "fan" magazine for a new name for Miss Perdue, and the name Ann Perue had been chosen as the most appropriate. Miss Perdue thought the name did not fit her personality and resorted to a suit against her employers. Now her name is Derelys Perdue.

George Hackathorne has completed his role in "Human Wreckage," Mrs. Wallace Reid's anti-narcotic film. Hackathorne's portrayal of a down-trodden addict of drugs is said by critics to be most impressive.

Lucille Ricksen, youngest leading lady in films, now enacting the leading feminine role in Marshall Neilan's "The Rendezvous," can boast of a line of Danish ancestors dating back to the courageous vikings.

After nearly three months in the leading character role of "The Eleventh Hour," the William Fox special, Edward Martindel has been cast in a similar part in Tod Browning's production at Goldwyn's "The Day of Faith," which has just gotten under way.

Charles Whittaker, who adapted Balzac's "The Magic Skin," has many screen successes to his credit. He has adapted scripts for such stars as Mary Pickford, Nazimova, Olga Petrova, John Barrymore, Clara Kimball Young and Pauline Frederick.

Blanche Sweet made her stage debut at the age of one year when she was carried on as "the babe in arms," and her little blonde curls were braided into tiny pigtails to denote the poverty of the mother, who unknowingly held a future screen star in her arms.

Wally Van, who plays the role of Rastignac in "The Magic Skin," which George D. Baker is directing at Goldwyn's, was one of the first screen comedians. He played with John Bunny in the old Vitagraph days and later directed him in several pictures.

Charles Conklin, known from Tasmania to Siberia as the moustached comedian in Mack Sennett comedies, has been signed by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to interpret his first dramatic role, that of Yegg Darby in "The Day of Faith," the Arthur Somers Roche story that Tod Browning will direct.

Dorothy Phillips, star of "Slander the Woman," an Allen Holubar production, and other notable screen successes of recent years, has been presented with a fast sailing boat with auxiliary engine by her famous husband, Allen Holubar, producer and director. The gift was in the nature of a wedding anniversary present and it is one of the trimmest and speediest craft of its kind registered at the San Pedro Yacht Club, of which Miss Phillips is a member.

Ralph Lewis will shortly begin work on Emory Johnson's latest F. B. O. Production, the title of which is as yet undecided. The story is from the pen of Mrs. Emilie Johnson, the producer's mother, and narrates the romance and home life of a mail man.

Marrie Astaire, who is making her debute in feature productions in "Lights Out," the F. B. O. Production under the direction of Al Santell, is an eccentric dancer of note. She is the proud possessor of a series of Benda Masks, which typify the spirit of one of her most popular numbers.

Molly Malone has been engaged to play the feminine lead opposite Johnny Hines in the Warner Brothers' film version of George M. Cohan's stage play, "Little Johnny Jones." Harry Myers has also been added to the cast, and Arthur Rosson is directing the picture.

Little Billy Windsor, who plays Indian at home, met his Waterloo when attending "The Covered Wagon." His pretty mother, who is Claire Windsor, you know, wanted him to go up on the stage and meet the Indians who take part in the prologue "No," little Billy voiced in protest, "I'm afraid—because they're real."

Maurice Murphy, son of John F. Murphy, noted attorney of Seattle, Wash., and a child prodigy both as a photoplayer and a pianist, has just completed an engagement in the Universal production of "The Self-Made Wife," in which he plays the part of Tim, Jr., sharing the stellar honors with Ethel Grey Terry.

Irving Cummings has completed casting for his mammoth independent production, "Broken Hearts of Broadway," which he is now filming at the Hollywood studios. Among the prominent screen players appearing in the heartthrob romance of the world's most famous street are Colleen Moore, Johnnie Walker, Alice Lake, Kate Price, Creighton Hale and others. The picture is being produced on a lavish scale and upon its completion will be taken to New York by the young producer personally and it will be given its premier at a large Broadway theatre.

Allen Holubar is preparing to "shoot" scenes for his first production under the Metro banner and he will begin casting some time this week. He has purchased "East of the Suez," the sensational New York stage success, which will be filmed as his second Metro release. The famous producer-director has been assigned Joseph Schenck's old office in the new Metro administration building of that concern's Hollywood studios.

Two brand new McFarland motor cars have been added to the Al St. John string of "speed buggies." Last week the young Fox comedian visited the motor sales rooms of Los Angeles, and before he completed the rounds of auto row he ordered the two cars—one a handsome touring model and the other a striking sedan—wrapped up and delivered to his palatial Hollywood home. Evidently throwing custard pies and making monkeyshines pays big! St. John now owns nine motors and one aeroplane.

Eulalie Jensen, celebrated featured player of the screen, is acting as guardian over a school of goldfish for Leah Baird, during the absence of that charming young artist from Hollywood. Recently Miss Jensen, who will be shortly seen in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," attempted to change the water in the bowl home of the golden-hued members of the finney tribe and while doing so she caused the sudden demise of one of the fish colony by pinching it while attempting to catch the slippery little fellow. The pinch proved fatal, and Miss Jensen has been sorrowing over the loss ever since.

Dr. H. W. Wall, physician and surgeon who was formerly associated with Bellevue and New York postgraduate hospitals in New York City, where he was engaged in special surgery and gynaecology research, has opened offices at 6702 Hollywood Boulevard, where he will cater to professional patronage.

Ed Yeager, formerly manager for the Reliable Photoplayers Association, has severed his connection with that organization. He is succeeded by Miss Betty Jean, who is receiving the cooperation of Merwin Gouldthrite as studio representative.

Ruth Stonehouse, now appearing in the role of "Hairpin" Annie in "Lights Out," the Paul Dickey-Mann Page stage play, just received an old still picture from one of her early productions when she was playing in Triangle productions. The still was marked: Production still—Story No.567—Ruth Stonehouse and Jack Gilbert—Director Jack Conway. The still was a present from an old friend who formerly worked with Miss Stonehouse.

MANY THINGS NECESSARY

swim, to ride horseback, play golf, tennis, bridge—these are all necessary things if one is to win—but they may all be learned with study.

"Acting—here is the most important point of all—and I honestly believe it is the most essential thing for a screen success—this is today the prime requisite.

"By acting, I do not mean ranting all over the place or following any of the old rules, but the ability to put over a point on the screen with conviction, naturalness and sincerity

"Times have changed in the moving picture industry as well as elsewhere.

"It is not customary now to refer to a moving picture actress as the beautiful Miss So-and-So, but as the girl who did such marvelously interesting work in such and such a picture.

"Screen acting is something much more subtle than making faces or expressive gestures—it is the capacity for making a character live without words to help.

"Personality is as important as beauty, and there are still two other attributes of vast importance—common sense and a good disposition.

"If a girl possesses all these qualifications, she must still remember that she has something like ten or fifteen thousand competitors who are professionals and already solidly entrenched in the various studios."

Miss Moore is one of the youngest of the stars, but she started work before the camera at the age of sixteen and has been constantly on the screen ever since.

FROM U TO YOU

Work has started at Universal City on "Lonesome Luck," a new western story. It will be followed by several similar offerings. William Craft is directing. Jack Daugherty stars. Margaret Morris plays opposite him.

From Los Angeles to San Francisco by steamer, a few hours' wait and back on the next boat, was the queer trip taken by King Baggot, director; Baby Peggy, diminutive film star, and a big cast from Universal City engaged in the filming of the new Baby Peggy play, a full-sized feature in which she is supported by a big cast of grown-ups.

The Baby Peggy play, "Wanted, a Home," was written by King Baggot and Raymond L. Schrock. In the big cast surrounding the tiny actress are Fred Esmleton, Sheldon Lewis, William Conklin, Dave Lawrence, Betty Francisco and others. The picture deals with the adventures of a small emigrant whose mother dies on shipboard, and how she finally wins a new home in America. It is a dramatic story, but rich in heart interest.

Production has just been completed at Universal City on "The Self-Made Wife," which was produced with an all-star cast under the direction of Jack Dillon.

The film play was adapted from the Elizabeth Alexander novel, published first as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post. Edward T. Lowe made the screen adaptation and Charles Kenyon wrote the scenario. The cast includes such well-known players as Ethel Grey Terry, Virginia Ainsworth, Crawford Kent, Phillips Smalley and Dorothy Cummings. Jack Dillon, who directed the play, has directed many outstanding screen successes, including "Suds," with Mary Pickford.

Perley Poore Sheehan, who adapted "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" to film from Hugo's classic, is taking up magazine writing again. He recently completed several stories. Before coming to the films, Sheehan's work was well known in Munsey's, Century, and other magazines.

Edmund Mortimer, directing Herbert Rawlinson in "Thicker Than Water" at Universal City, might have been an engineer if he hadn't become a film director. He graduated from a noted technical college, and today loves to delve into mechanical problems as a recreation after his film work.

Mike Donlin, famous baseball player of a few years ago, is a member of the cast of "Railroaded," just completed at Universal City with Herbert Rawlinson as the star.

Laura La Plante, playing opposite Hoot Gibson in "Out of Luck," has become an airplane fan. Al Wilson, the Universal City stunt aviator, started it—he took her for a flight. Now she's indignant because Wilson won't teach her how to operate a plane. "And he says himself it's safer than driving an auto," she complains. "Men are the peculiar sex, all right."

Caesar Gravina, who has returned to Universal City following a visit to San Francisco, has the unique distinction of being an author as well as an actor. On his arrival he received the news that a story he recently wrote has been accepted by a large South American magazine. Gravina has written considerable fiction in Spanish which has appeared in Madrid and South American publications. His home is in Brazil.

Mary Philbin, who displays unusual emotional dramatic ability as the little hand organ girl in "Merry-Go-Round," the Universal spectacle of Vienese life, soon to be released as a Universal-Jewel production, has been cast for the leading role in "Where Is This West?" in which Jack Hoxie is starred.

It will be Miss Philbin's first appearance in a western drama. A dozen cowboys in the Hoxie production at Universal City have volunteered to work overtime to teach the little Chicago beauty to ride horseback.

Her work in "Merry-Go-Round" afforded one of the distinct surprises of the year at Universal City and is predicted by Rupert Julian, who directed the picture, to make her one of the outstanding emotional actresses of the screen.

"Where Is This West?" is a comedy drama written by George C. Hull of the Universal scenario staff and is being filmed under the direction of George E. Marshall, who directed Hoxie in his last feature, "Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande."

R. William Neill, director, Lucy Fox, star, and W. P. Woolbridge, production manager, arrived in New York last week from Naples after a seven months' stay in Italy, during which "Toilers of the Sea" was made. Holmes Herbert and Lucius Henderson are also in the cast.

Margaret Anglin will present "The Hippolytus of Euripides," in the Greek Theatre at Berkley, Cal., on May 21st at the invitation of the U. or C. extended through its president.

There was a great rush for seats for the mammoth benefit performance of the N. V. A. It was a triple affair and was given simultaneously on Sunday evening, May 13, at the Metropolitan Opera House, Hippodrome and at the Manhattan Opera House. These are Gotham's greatest playhouses and the list of artists who appeared on the bill included the names of every vaudeville headliner within travel of New York on Sunday.

Frank Lloyd has been placed under contract to make a series of Frank Lloyd Productions for First National.

Lynn Reynolds, for nine years a director of features, has joined the forces of the First National Pictures, Inc., at the United Studios. His first picture will be "The Huntress," and will be made on location in the high Sierras.

Joseph Schenck has arrived from the coast to attend the First National conventions at Atlantic City and New York and to make arrangements for renting a Broadway theatre next September in which to present "Ashes of Vengeance," Norma Talmadge's new feature. This is the first time Schenck has rented a theatre for picture purposes. His plan is to give two performances a day charging two dollars to two-fifty top.

Marguerite Courtot (Mrs. Raymond McKee) has signed to do "Rainbow," a special for Distinctive Pictures, which wi'l be filmed in Virginia.

IN BEHALF OF MOTHER'LAW

the rearing of the walls of the big setting. "It'll take a lot of music to fill that place, but we'll have it."

Whereupon he moved his own piano and violin to the studio and organized an orchestra of his former co-workers which are providing the music for the scenes—music which, by the way, is of Schertzinger's own composing.

Tourists who acquired rheumatic necks watching the rearing of Doug. Fairbanks' castle settings for "Robin Hood" a year ago are being offered new thrills in an even more ambitious castle for Emmet Flynn's "In the Palace of the King." The ancient home of King Phillip II. of Spain is being reconstructed for the picture, in the general mode of the century preceding the coming of Phillip, when the structure actually was built. But occasional concessions are being made to the dramativ requirements of the story which will compel the building of even more towering spires and turrets than were known by the famous villain of history.

Garry O'Dell, former Mack Sennett comedy star, who is now becoming one of the screen's best villains. He has just finished an important characterization in the Richard Thomas production of "Other Men's Money."

Svengali! Just as if he has come to life and stepped out of the book. This is how completely Svengali-ized Arthur Edmund Carew is in Richard Walton Tully's picturization of "Trilby," the filming of which has just been completed.

Just in Thinking Things Over

Proof of the claim that the public wants to laugh is furnished in the fact that comedy features are drawing at least fifty per cent more than ever before in the history of the screen. The habit of fans to make known their demands for laugh-producing film fare is obviously influencing producers extensively.

Here and there even now in this advanced age in free America, there crops out a desire on the part of the occasional extremist to foist an unsavory dictatorship onto the public. Generally this sort of preposterous presumption is aimed at the photoplay art for no other reason than any amusement is in the reformer's category of assailable objects.

When will the American people awaken to a realization of the fact that two-thirds of the political speeches of modern times consist of simon-pure, unadulterated hocus-pocus? Moral: always try to determine why any man seeking political preferment is for or against the paramount issues of the day. Don't be content to simply admire a good argument; make it your business to learn why that good argument is made. Let us not forget there is sometimes more shimmer than steady enlightenment in much of our silver-tongued oratory.

Ambition is a sparkling beverage whose principal ingredients are optimism, stick-to-itiveness and ginger in about equal proportions. It has been the inspiring stimulus behind every worthy industry known to the world, and dates back to Adam, poor fellow. Eve spiked his.

Mixing drinks is a risky proposition, hence ambition should be taken straight.

The Kaiser mixed greed with his and got on a pamboree that precipitated the world war.

William J. Bryan mixed free silver and grape juice with his and not only missed the presidency, but was hooked off the stage and forced to direct his conversation to himself.

Some people mix love with their ambition. This does not necessarily impair its quality, but renders it exceedingly gooey.

Ambition will prompt a man to get up at five o'clock in the morning when he would much rather sleep until eight. A great many people mix inertia with theirs and never do wake up.

Ambition often works both coming and going. For instance, most women are ambitious to obtain husbands. Then, in many instances at least, they become ambitious to get rid of them. An extreme case is that of the Oklahoma woman who killed her husband after three days of wedded bliss. Even the most radical must concede that this was entirely too soon. It is just possible, though, that this blushing bride believed in signs and killed her newly acquired spouse in the dark of the honeymoon.

While ambition is a dangerous concoction when mixed with virulent ingredients, devoid of these it is the chief impetus to progress and development, and the person who never tastes it is as useless as a vermiform appendix.

Now the point we desire to impress on this score is, these veiled and insidious newspaper attacks being made spasmodically upon certain motion picture people who happen to be openly ambitious to serve more exalted purposes than mere mercenary ones, are far more ridiculous than those they seek to ridicule for aspiring. Evidently the writers of those nasty, little "digs" have their ambitions mixed with sheer idiocy.

There is not the slightest cause for any apprehension as to the final outcome of the present Old World conditions. Civilization is going to score its greatest victory and the uplift of all the heterogeneous races dwelling upon this mundane sphere is assured. Religious fanatics who interpret the passages of the Bible as if it were an opera-bouffe are proclaiming the near-arrival of the end of the world, citing the stirring and tragic events of the recent past as "proof." However, you can always discount the hallucinations of a deluded wildman one hundred per cent and remain within the bounds of perfect security. Meanwhile, every principle of sound logic and every current trend in all this raging political conflict certainly indicate a glorious fruition of the plans of the United States of America for making every nook and corner of the earth safe for democracy, which means there will be a revived splendor in the perpetuity of this orb's revolutions instead of any abrupt discontinuance so contrary to all rules of Providential sciences.

When the German people meekly submitted to the dictation of the ex-Kaiser and his conspirators to undertake the crushing of all opposing races for the purpose of establishing a Teuton world dominion, they brought upon themselves a curse which centuries of retribution and penitence may not remove. The moment they resorted to rapine in Belgium back in 1914, they sealed their own fate so far as conquering all mankind, because mankind will never permit beasts of lower mentality to get the upper hand. Practically all German leaders of that time proved themselves to be simply beasts of lower mentality, and, to this fact can be attributed the plain reason why the United States entered the war on the side of Right as positively against Might. And this is therefore the very apparent reason for feeling completely assured that despicable militarism cannot prevail. In this connection, just remember, America never has lost a war and she never will, because she is governed by a whole people of superior morality, who will never condone the slightest unfair aggression either for their country or for other nations. Moreover, America will never allow royal families to convert the business of war into an auriferous traffic.

As must be unmistakably obvious to even the most stupid citizen, there is but one radiant star on the horizon, and that is the star of human determination to hasten the inevitable forthcoming triumph of civilization. No foul plutocrat or no hare-brained idiot or no gluttonous hog or no weakling puppet or any other like craven creatures will ever be able to cast this world's peoples down in chasms of gloomy, helpless submission to their imbecile minds. Upon this you can rely, and therefore you can count on your effort in behalf of maintaining peace being richly fruitful of gratifying results.

DIRECTORS CANNOT AGREE ON MUSIC QUESTION

Producer-Director Maurice Tourneur and Producer-Director James Young disagree.

Young says that music is an aid to motion picture making. Tourneur says it isn't. The verbal battle waxes warm.

Young, who has just completed the direction of "Trilby," for First National and is about to begin on "Ponjola," for the same company, claims that he was the originator of the idea of having musicians play while movie actors "do their stuff."

"It stimulates the emotions," he says. "It creates atmosphere for the players. They can enact their parts far better if appropriate music is played during the taking of the scenes."

Now comes Tourneur, who says, music is the "bunk."

The producer of "The Isle of Lost Ships," and "The Brass Bottle," never has had music on his sets, and never will, he says.

"They say music stimulates the emotions," he declared. "Bah! Bunk! Funny music for a comedy? Frightful music for a scene where the actor shows fright? Nonsense!"

"Music is a detriment to a good actor's art, not an aid. He thinks he looks sad, his director thinks he looks sad, in a funeral scene, because they hear sad music. A scene looks lively when there is jazz music enlivening the director when really it may be dragging. Music destroys the sense of value in both actor and director. An accomplished actor is able to display the emotions at will, to exhibit anger or fear or sorrow without artificial stimulation. If he cannot, he is not an actor and I don't want him working on my picture."

But he can't convince Jimmie Young—neither can he convince the members of the Musicians' union. So that's that!

Sid Grauman Takes Trip

Sid Grauman, accompanied by his mother, Mrs. D. J. Grauman, took the East-bound train out for New York last Tuesday. The busy managing director of Grauman's four Los Angeles theatres has been waiting and watching his opportunities to take a few days off, several months, and at last is bidding au revoir to his arduous duties, for a little vacation and rest. Grauman expects to return in about ten days or two weeks, which means he will not see all the new motion picture palaces in the East. A trip to New York doesn't mean so much to the average motion picture star or producer, but to a busy theatre exhibitor it is something of an event.

GREAT SWEDISH DIRECTOR FREES AMERICAN ACTOR

DeWitt C. Jennings is to be emancipated from his fate of playing policeman by no other than Victor Seastrom, the noted Scandinavian director preparing his first American picture.

Seastrom has assigned to Jennings an important role in "The Master of Man," by Sir Hall Caine.

The role of Dan Collister is a new screen type for DeWitt Jennings. The actor made a hit playing police inspectors and ever since then directors always wanted him to be an officer of the law.

Jennings spent nine years in whiskers on the stage, but he has never worn them for motion pictures. He is now cultivating a set of "mutton chops."

Among stage parts, Jennings considers his best work was done in the original production of "Within the Law," as the inspector in "The Woman in Room 13," in "The Thirteenth Chair," "The Unknown Purple," and "The Blue Flames."

ROUMANIAN ACTOR GETS HIS FIRST PART HERE

Georges Calliga, the young Roumanian actor signed by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, will make his first screen appearance in America in "Six Days."

Calliga appeared before the motion picture camera under Charles J. Brabin's direction this week in scenes with Corinne Griffith and Myrtle Stedman for the Elinor Glyn story.

Calliga was a boy soldier in the Roumanian forces on the Bolshevik front, was wounded, and after the war studied in Paris, where a French Cinema producer "discovered" him.

His family sent him to London to study to get him out of "the clutches" of motion pictures, and he arranged his university lectures for the evenings, and played in pictures in the day time.

Last Christmas he came to New York and officials of the Goldwyn company signed him up and sent him to Culver City.

BABY MURIEL HAS SARTORIAL PROSPECTS

"The best dressed kiddie in pictures." This is the proud distinction which Baby Muriel MacCormac, clever child actress, may win should her mother decide to take advantage of an unusual offer which has recently been made to her by one of the country's largest manufacturers of children's clothes.

According to the manufac turer, Baby Muriel was selected as a model by his concern as a result of a contest staged some time ago. Judges were selected from different departments of the business and for more than two months the closest attention was given to the appearance and mannerism of several children in pictures. It was finally announced that Muriel MacCormac was the choice of the judges, her delightful personality and perfect little figure creating a most favorable impression with them.

The offer specifies that should Mrs. MacCormac agree to allow Baby Muriel to act as their model the youngster will be supplied free of charge with samples of all clothes and hats which they manufacture for children's wear. They only ask that she wear this wardrobe exclusively in her work at the studios and in private life. Choosing a film youngster to act as their model is explained by manufacturers as simply an advertising proposition with them and that the expense of the garments will be charged to such account.

In view of the fact that acting as a model will not interfere with her studio activities it is more than likely that Baby Muriel will accept the offer and will no doubt soon be displaying many new and stunning hats and gowns, which should attract considerable attention because of their charm and individuality.

Dorothy Dunlap, who will abandon the comedy field to embrace opportunities in dramatic pictures.

A Lottery-named Babe

Director Fred Caldwell, whose picture, "Night Life in Hollywood," has just completed a successful two-weeks run at the Symphony Theatre, has just named his baby in probably the most unique fashion ever adopted for labeling a new-born. Following announcement of the son's birth Mr. Caldwell received dozens of letters from friends all suggesting various names for the baby. The director was confronted with the possibility of disappointing his friends and did not want to assume the responsibility. So he hit upon the scheme of putting all the names in a hat and holding a regular lottery drawing. The result was that the boy has been named Cecil Fred Caldwell.

THIS PICTURE TO BE BOON TO GOLFERS

Golfers and non-golfers will be interested in the announcement of the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., that they will release in the near future a sport special, "Golf, As Played by Gene Sarazen."

This picture will show the open champion of the United States as he illustrates every phase of his mastery of the game. To see Sarazen in action is to have a golfing lesson of unsurpassed value to those who are either taking up the sport or who are seeking to improve their game. To those others who have wondered what clubs with the queer sounding names such as "niblick," "mid-iron" or "mashie" are for, and who think that a "stymie' is something that happens to the eye, the picture will prove just as interesting.

Every stroke known to golf is demonstrated by Sarazen before the camera and his actions are duly recorded, first at normal speed, and then in slow motion that shows every movement of the master golfer.

It is now admitted that the slow motion camera is the greatest of all teachers of athletic form, and it is particularly adapted to the peculiarly complicated combination of things to do and things not to do that constitute a golf stroke. By slowing the action to one-eighth normal speed it is possible to show the proper amount of back-swing and follow through, the position of legs, arms, head and body at the moment of impact of club head and ball more clearly than is possible for any professional by word of mouth or by actually making the strokes on the links.

Further interest is added to the picture, and its value as an instructional medium is vouched for by the statement that Sarazen himself assisted in editing and titling the finished production.

Wins in South America

In a motion picture popularity contest held in Buenos Ayres recently, Alma Rubens was adjudged the most popular star, and Miss Armita Gonzalos, who represented Miss Rubens, was awarded a silver loving cup. Besides being a famous South American beauty the Senorita is the daughter of a wealthy American plantation owner. Yesterday Miss Rubens received a wire from Miss Gonzalos saying that she was coming to New York and wished to have the pleasure of meeting Miss Rubens. Miss Rubens not only readily assented, but assured Miss Gonzalos that she would give her a part in her next production.

Why Those Brothers

By DAVID BELASCO

"There are great truths that can only be expressed by silence," so said St. Martin a long time ago. It was this thought in its relations to a new way of telling a story that lured me into moving pictures. The motion picture has come to stay. It has possibilities of amazing delicacy and power and they have come into a consciousness of their purpose.

I don't think there should be any rivalry between the stage and the screen. They each have endless possibilities for expressing their story of the human soul and they can each do it from totally different angles. Every artist wishes to tell his or her story to the greatest number of people. That, I suppose is the humanitarian motive back of all art. What possibilities the pictures give for that! How wonderful it would be if only we had a screen record of the greatest and most glorious actresses—Sarah Bernhardt, during the early part of her career. Bernhardt as she was in Paris when she first played "Camille." It was real belief in the Warner Brothers sincerity of purpose that made me enthusiastic about having Miss Lenore Ulric do "Tiger Rose" for the screen.

"Tiger Rose" carries a great message and Lenore Ulric with that intense sincerity that is part of her character will be able I am sure to tell the story, in pictures, of that little French Canadian girl, who through love found her spiritual outlook on life. Any belief that exists in the mind writes itself in the eyes, in fact on the entire body. Moving pictures can, and do show, the inner spirit. They can create the life of the human soul.

The stories I think will change, even now they are changing. Audiences today are more analytical. Therefore they seek logic back of the emotions. The trend of the new plays, and photoplays, will be to represent normal human beings as they are, whose actions spring from their characters, rather than from the old idea of serving the plot.

Shakespeare's observation about "The tide in the affairs of men, which taken at its flood, leads on to fortunes" can be understood in more senses than one but in connection with pictures I think it applies to the Warner Brothers. They have shown wisdom and courage in the selection of their stories and an American intuition in grasping opportunities.

THE FIRST MOTION PICTURE MACHINE

The first motion picture machine ever made was a half penny toy which appeared in England in 1825, the invention of which has been variously credited to a Dr. Paris and a Dr. Finton, two London physicians, and Sir John Hershell, the famous scientist.

This little trick was simply a disc of cardboard with a string running through its diameter by the loose ends of which the disc was twirled, thus exposing to the eye in rapid succession the two sides of the disc upon which were printed certain pictures.

On one side, for instance, might be a bird, and on the other side a cage; by twirling the disc the bird would at once appear to be in the cage. Or on one side might be a picture of your favorite star and on the other side a frame so that by whirling the disc the picture would appear as though framed.

In this way one may make a boy roll a hoop or a girl jump a rope or make any of scores of combinations showing action. It all depends upon one's ingenuity. This clever little contrivance was the very first apparatus made to demonstrate the principle of the persistence of vision, the basic principle of the motion picture.

The Rockett-Lincoln Film Company, producing "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln," have seized upon this old idea and have utilized it in an ingenious manner in the exploitation of their picture. On one side of the Thaumatrope disc is a picture of the young Abraham Lincoln as a rail splitter, a sapling between his feet and his axe swung high preparatory to hitting a mighty blow. On the other side the same figure is bending over the sapling, having struck the blow, the axe being stuck tight in the wood. By twirling the disc toward one the young Lincoln appears to split rails just as he did it in the Sangamon River bottoms ninety-two years ago.

MELODIC TECHNIQUE AIDS FILMING

The inter-relation of the various arts has just been proven again.

Victor Schertzinger, who is now directing Jackie Coogan in "Long Live the King," his first Metro production, is also a well-known musical composer. Jackie Coogan, Senior, who is supervising his son's productions, was also a composer of popular songs while he was in vaudeville and musical comedy, before entering pictures. It is natural, therefore, that when they collaborate on a production, the element of music should enter into it.

Coogan and Schertzinger have introduced the "leitmotif" into the making of motion pictures. This is a technical factor in the writing of music perfected in the operas of Richard Wagner. It consists of a theme or melodic strain, which serves to introduce the principal characters as they come on the stage from time to time, or to preface recurring bits of important action. In short, the "leitmotif" is a musically characteristic background for the players and the action.

In the settings for "Long Live the King," the "leitmotif" idea is carried out to this extent: The architectural lines and interior decorations are not only beautiful and correctly expressive of the national charac-

LYNWOOD CRYSTAL RAPP, who is returning to the screen in "WHY DO WE LIVE?"

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

San Francisco, Cal., May 21—Max Graf, of the Graf Productions, returned from Los Angeles on Tuesday and left for New York on Thursday morning. "The Fog," the latest picture made by the organization, has recently been released through Metro. While in the East, Graf will attend the Metro Sales Convention in New York, and complete arrangements for the other pictures to be made this year. The continuity for "The Grain of Dust," the next picture of the company, has already been begun, and the actual shooting will begin July first at the Pacific Studios at San Mateo. The following picture will be a big sea story, the title not yet announced, but the theme is both interesting and unusual.

Merthold Berger, general manager of the Gerson Picture Corporation, returned from New York last week, after having arranged for the release through American Releasing Corporation of their picture, "The Cricket on the Hearth," and the future handling of their other films. The organization will begin production again in the immediate future on a large program of pictures.

Joan Standing, daughter and little sister of the famous Standing family that has given so many stars to the silver-screen, and herself well known to the cinema world, arrived in San Francisco last Thursday to begin work on her part as "Selina" in Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed."

"Snub" Pollard, famous comedian, and his wife Betty, landed in San Francisco last Tuesday on the steamer Ventura, after an extended trip to Australia.

The company making "The Rendevous" for Goldwyn arrived in San Francisco this morning, and will be here for two or three days shooting some scenes of embarcation on the United States Army Docks. The outfit includes Marshal Neilan, Director, and Frank Urson who is co-directing, Conrad Nagel, leading man, Sidney Chapman, Kate Lester, Lucile Rickson, and twenty others of the cast and staff. Leeds Baxter, location man for Goldwyn, has been in town for a week making arrangements for their work.

Madge Bellamy was a guest at the Palace Hotel for several days last week.

"Brass" was given a private showing here this week on quite an elaborate scale. George A. Oppenheimen, Inc., was the host at a banquet given in the Colonial ballroom of the Hotel St. Francis to exhibitors, newspaper men and motion picture dignataries, followed by the showing of the picture made from Charles G. Norris' novel on marriage made by Warner Brothers. Norris was the guest of honor, coming from Los Angeles for the occasion as did Sidney Franklin, who directed the picture, Monte Blue, Marie Prevost, Irene Rich and Harry Myers, who played in it.

William H. Crane, grand old man of the screen, was in San Francisco several days of last week.

Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed" is making rapid and satisfactory progress, a large part of the work on the interiors on the set at Hayes and Laguna Streets being completed. On Sunday Von Stroheim took the principals of his cast to Shell Mound Park in Oakland, to make the first of the trans-bay sequences in Frank Norris' masterpiece. The little Oakland cottage which is one of the sets on that side of the bay is all ready for use, and looking very homelike. With the recent arrival of the three children of the story, little Austin Jewell, who plays "August," and Otto and Oscar Gottel, the twins, the cast is entirely complete, with the exception of one or two characters who are only in the sequences to be shot at Colfax.

Robert Warwick, matinee idol and screen star, will not appear in Margaret Anglin's production of "Hippolytus," at the Greek Theatre in Berkeley on May 29th as announced. The cancellation is the result of Mr. Warwick deciding he had not received the proper amount of publicity in advertising for the production. Who will take his place has not yet been announced. Warwick is now playing a starring engagement in "The Dover Road" at the Fulton Theatre in Oakland.

Along New York's Rialto

By RAYMOND McKEE

The Friars Club has opened a campaign for membership. The initiation fee has been lifted for a short time and prospective members are swamping the club with applications. If you would like to become a member of one of New York City's leading clubs, send in your name to Raymond McKee at that address and he will gladly take your name to the investigating committee.

Mrs. S. J. Goldstein, mother of E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of Universal, died last week in her home, 220 West 98th street. Her husband survives her.

Ernest Shipman announces the launching of his latest enterprise, an organization to be known as the Long Island Cinema Corporation for the making of big features on Long Island. The company has been incorporated at Albany with an authorized capital of $500,000 preferred and 10,000 shares common of no par value.

The old home of First National,6 and 8 West 48th street, is now abandoned. The new home will be 383 Madison avenue at the corner of 46th street. The organization will occupy an entire floor one block square. Perfectly appointed projecting rooms will be a new feature of the Madison avenue offices. The phone number is Vanderbilt 6600.

Sol Lesser and Mike Gore are taking in the sights.

Ruth Roland arrived here the other day via steamer from New Orleans. Ruth, like Madge Bellamy, is here in the interests of the convention.

Constance Binney and Raymond McKee will do a series of four features for C. C. Burr at his Glendale Studio. Pathe will release them.

Michael Tellegen, who has just returned from San Francisco and northern points where he was engaged with a theatrical company. He is once more ready to throw terror into the hearts of cinema ingenues and accompanying fillum heroes with his wicked heavy work. Tellegen has a small part in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," in which Lon Chaney stars.

Elmer Clifton's picture, "Down to the Sea in Ships," and termed "the gem of the ocean," is playing in 50 New York theatres this week. A record.

One hundred and eighteen actors joined the A. E. Association last week. Just in time to escape the raise in dues. From now on the fee is $25.00.

Minta Durfee(Mrs. Roscoe Arbuckle) will shortly be seen in a new comedy by Roy Briant. This will be Miss Durfee's first appearance around New York in several years.

John Barrymore, upon his return from abroad, will go on tour presenting a series of plays under the management of Arthur Hopkins.

A lion-tamer, Tearle Jacobs, was fined yesterday for being too rough with his wild lion. Humane Society officers fined him $10.

Theatrical Broadway is awaiting to hear today whether Wilton Lackaye will accept Henry Dixey's challenge issued to him yesterday to fight. Dixey sent the challenge to Lackaye with a $100 bill enclosed, a forfeit should he not appear. They are old enemies having been at sword's points for years. Dixey is 61, Lackaye 64.

Coney Island and Luna Park are open. The world's greatest playground all anew in color and brilliancy with a new board walk will rival Atlantic City, with its hundreds of free acts and many band concerts.

From U to You

By BEN WESTLAND

Edward Laemmle, director of some of the most popular of the Universal historical and chapter plays, received a feature play to direct as a wedding present on his return from Chicago with his bride. He has been assigned to direct "Two Bells for Pegasus," one of Gerald Beaumont's sport story successes. He recently married Miss Peppi Heller of Chicago.

Ruth Royce, appearing with Jack Mower and Eileen Sedgwick in "Daniel Boone," is the latest aspirant for fame as a flyer. She has asked Al. Wilson, the Universal City stunt aviator, to give her lessons. Miss Royce is an expert and daring motorist, and hopes to find new thrills in the air.

Albert Conti, steeplechase rider and actor at Universal City, has perhaps had more adventures than any man on the big lot. Educated in an Australian Military Academy, he was a captain in the Austrian Army, later an aviator; came to America as a laborer, and now has risen to film fame.

Hydraulic engineers are interested in a fact performed at Universal City that is not big in scope but is out of the ordinary.

The Los Angeles river skirts the film city, and across the river and a mile north are two wells owned by the Universal Pictures corporation which supplies the immense amount of water required.

At first the main carrying the water was built above the river, in the air on a trestle. It was found that this was impractical and that in high water the trestle was almost wrecked by floating timbers and the water suffered from leakage into the main from the river.

The river was treated rather roughly in dry weather, a dam being built in sections. The main crossing was laid several feet under the bed of the river. Now there is no trouble—in spite of numerous predictions that there would be.

Clarence L. Brown's "shingle" is out on director's row at Universal City. The celebrated director is engaging his staff and making final preparations for the Universal-Jewel filming of "The Acquital," the first production to which he was assigned under his new contract with Universal.

"The Acquital" is Rita Weiman's successful stage play, and the star of the motion picture version will be Priscilla Dean, whose past successes include "Outside the Law," "The Flame of Life," "Under Two Flags" and "White Tiger." "Drifting," John Colton's play, was her last completed production. Jules Furthmann ,scenarist of "The Queen of Sheba," "Victory" and other notables screen attractions, is finishing the continuity of "The Acquital."

Following "The Acquital" Mr. Brown will probably direct several other features for Universal—but that is quite a way in the future since "The Acquital" will require months of eleborate effort.

Several of the most noted chemical and medical experts in the United States acted as technical advisers with William Parke, film director, and Milton Sills, star, at Universal City, during the filmnig of the final scenes of "Legally Dead," a new mystery play, which has just been completed. The experts supervised the details of the scenes showing life being restored by the use of Adrenalin, the strange chemical whose properties, just discovered, have upset the entire medical world.

The play is based on the bringing of a man, killed by hanging, back to life by the use of the uncanny drug. It has been done in real life—news dispatches are full of it daily—and Charles Furthmann's play, written three years ago and then termed a "dream," today is a play based on reality.

The actual details of the operation, as portrayed on the film, were supervised by Geo. C. Frolich of Boston, Sales manager of the drug and chemical division of the United Drug Company, an international organization. Frolich, twenty years ago, put the first adrenalin on the market in America, when a member of the research staff of the Parke Davis laboratories, and since then has been internationally known as an expert on the drug. With him were H. L. Simpson, vice-president of the firm, Geo. A. Wilson, research expert, and his son, Russel Simpson, and G. F. Pfaffenberger, general manager of the Owl Drug Company.

'TIS POPPY DAY

By Janet Andelson

Millions of poppies with heads bowed low,
Where only a cross remains to show,
As tho' in prayer for those who are dead,
The poppies' hearts for them have bled—
'Tis Poppy Day.

In memory of yon Flanders Field,
Where heroes brave their lives did yield
On foreign land where they had trod,
Fearless, faithful to country and God—
'Tis Poppy Day.

'Tis but a message from land unknown
That begs of us, mercy be shown,
That cries for Peace to take the place
And break forever war's fierce embrace!
'Tis Poppy Day.

JANET ANDELSON

Milton Sills, as the executed convict in the play, underwent the operation in mimic several times while the experts checked every move. Several physicians also were on hand to criticize and suggest.

The play stars Milton Sills, supported by Claire Adams and a large cast. It was filmed behind closed doors and practically completed before the idea was allowed to be made public, lest other producers seize on the idea.

The William Desmond Company is back at Universal City after two week's so-journ in the Feather River country in Northern California.

The unit has been working on exterior shots of Desmond's latest starring vehicle, "The Skyline of Spruce," which is being filmed under the direction of Robert Hill.

The story is of placer mining and claim jumping in Northwestern Canada, written by Edison Marshal and adapted to the screen by Paul Scofield. Filming of the interior scenes of the play is now under way at Universal studios.

The play presents Desmond in his second feature production under his new starring contract with Universal. He recently finished the title role in "McGuire of the Mounted," produced under Richard Stanton's direction.

The play also represents Hill's first feature for Universal. He was one of the most popular directors of chapter plays before he was transferred to feature productions. Among the notable successes which Hill directed are "Aound the World in Eighteen Days," and "The Phantom Fortune," Desmond was starred in both productions.

Virginia Brown Faire, the clever actress who scored such a dramatic triumph in "Without Benefit of Clergy" and "Omar the Tentmaker" plays the feminie lead in the play.

Others in the cast include William Welsh, well known character player, Albert Hart and Fred Kohler.

An important part in the picture is taken by the famous police dog of the screen, Rin Tin Tin.

With beams from a hundred searchlights cutting the blackness of night, flood lights casting a glow over the nearby hills, and an army of grotesque silhouettes wandering in the vast courtyard, the sets of the "Hunchback of Notre Dame" at Universal City presented a ghostly aspect during the night scenes photographed during the past week.

An entire week's work on the giant set was practically all done at night, the action of the play calling for midnight roystering, adventures by moonlight, and several dramatic fights and other action of the Hugo Classic.

Lon Chaney as "Quasimodo" and Patsy Ruth Miller as "Esmeralda" appear in practically all of the "night shots" taken. Hundreds of arc lights and Kleig units were used. A special power plant had to be assembled to supply current for the vast blaze of light used in the filming of the scenes and practically all available lamps in other studios were rented for the picture.

Fully nine acres of courtyard and buildings were lighted for the spectacular "long shots" taken during the week of night phothe big picture. Less than two months according to the present schedule, will see the completion of photography, after which will

REAL REEL VETERAN

No list of the pioneer players of the screen would be complete without the mention of William Orlamond, who has been cast for a comedy character role in Metro's all-star picturization of "The Eagle's Feather."

Nearly twelve years ago, Mr. Orlamond returned to his home in Philadelphia, after completing a tour with a road attraction, to find that his wife was working with the new historic Lubin company. Not to be outdone, he joined the company and appeared in many pictures with the late Arthur Johnson. He later appeared with the old Alliance and Gaumont companies and managed a studio at Jacksonville, Florida. Kathlyn Williams, making animal thrillers there, was considered the most fearless actress on the screen.

William Orlamond was born and educated in Copenhagen, and came to this country in 1882 to portray the title role in "Rip Van Winkle," upon the retirement of Joseph Jefferson from the role. He appeared on the stage in this country for 29 years prior to his screen career.

Mr. Orlamond has been termed "The Frank Bacon of the Screen" because of the quaint comedy characters he invariably portrays. His versatility, however, is remarkable, for it would be hard to imagine a greater contrast in characterization than his comedy interpretation of the ship's carpenter in "All the Brothers Were Valient" and the tragic role he has recently finished in Allen Holubar's "Slander the Woman." On the screen he has also scored individually in "The Sin Flood," "Broken Chains," "Doubing for Romeo" and with Nazimova in "Camille" and "Madame Peacock."

Other members of the cast for "The Eagle's Feather" are Mary Alden, James Kirkwood, Elinor Fair, George Seigman, Barbara La Marr, Lester Cuneo and Adolph Menjou.

De Mille Signs Cloninger

Ralph Cloninger has just been signed for an important role in Cecil B. De Mille's "The Ten Commandments," now in preparation at the Lasky studios. He recently finished a sympathetic portrayal in support of Dustin Farnum in "The Man Who Won."

YOUTH INVINCIBLE FORCE IN SCREEN WORK AS IN LIFE IN GENERAL

"Youth is an invincible force that helps to move the world. Youth, with its hopes and its aspirations, is a potential factor in the swift development of the motion picture industry. And it will ever continue to be a vital power."

Thus, briefly, does Beatrice Van, scenarist, sum up the reasons for her own success and for the achievements of many young men and women who, not far beyond twenty, have already won incomes extended to five figures.

Having won distinction as a result of her unusually successful adaptions of the H. C. Witwer "Fighting Blood" stories, now being shown at Grauman's Metropolitan weekly, Miss Van reveals how, by keeping the spirit of youth always dominant, she invested these stories on the screen with a degree of realism that has made them popular the country over.

Moreover Miss Van has established herself overnight as the only woman writing for the screen who has ever been able to catch accurately the real spirit of the prize ring. Her screen adaptions, now alternately setting audiences shrill and agiggle, have been compared by critics to the newspaper reports of trained boxing writers in their unfailing fidelity to detail and the colorful atmosphere of the prize ring.

Notwithstanding the fact that "The Eagle's Feather" is a story of the West, this Metro all-star special has neither two-gun men nor Indians in it.

Several hundred pounds of antique silverware has recently been received at the Metro studio from Paris for use in Rex Ingram's production of "Scaramouche."

Traffic on Los Angeles' Broadway was paralyzed when Viola Dana filmed some scenes for "Rouged Lips" in the very heart of the cinemetropolis. This is the first time Miss Dana has ever appeared before the camera under such circumstances.

SPEED VERSUS CERTAINTY

It isn't always speed that counts!

Astronomers will tell you that many of the most permanent stars have consumed millions of years before coming into range of the most powerful telescopes.

Swiftly moving stars are seldom permanent. Usually they are but meteors whose rapid rise dooms them to a fall even more rapid.

The North Star, the only permanent fixture of the firmanent never moves at all.

The same astronomical laws apply to cinema stardom.

During the last four and one-half years the charming Colleen Moore has played the feminine lead or featured role in thirty-two big motion picture productions yet she has not been starred.

Girls' who entered the picture field years after she did, have been starred—vanished and forgotten. Some have been stars for a few years, some for a few months and others for a few weeks but they were not prepared for stellar honors and the vast majority of them failed to make good.

Colleen's rise to fame has been slow and sure. She has builded a permanent foundation which will never crumble. And now stardom is in sight.

Associated First National Pitures, Inc., pursuing its policy of grooming its own stars by selecting the most versatile young players and signing them to long-term contracts, has selected the winsome Colleen as the most potential starring material available.

Her name is now affixed to a contract with First National whereby she will appear under that organization's banner during the next three years.

Thereby Colleen is awarded two of the greatest roles of the year; the titular role of "The Huntress," production on which is to be started by First National's own producing unit within a week at the United Studios, and the role of the naive flapper in "Flaming Youth," which First National is also to produce.

The former is to be directed by Lynn Reynolds and the latter by John Francis Cillon. Both will be big specials.

The mills of the gods grind slowly but they grind exceedingly fine. Colleen Moore has "arrived" and she is now a permanent cinema luminary.

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1923

THEATER BUILDING PLANS FOR 8 MONTHS OF 1923 WILL EXCEED $3,500,000

In their announcement of the huge theatre construction program for the first eight months of the 1923 season, officials of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., see prosperity ahead for every community which will benefit materially by an estimated total expense of $3,500,000 for the construction of new theatres.

It is contemplated that every one of these houses will be ready by September 1st, 1923, and all forms of labor are to receive a great share of the appropriation within which the construction program will func tion.

Seven new theatres are now being built in various parts of Southern California.

They include an 1800 seat house in San Pedro, which will be ready for opening within five weeks. This theatre will represent an investment in excess of $500,000. The building is a solid block, with stores, offices, and basement. The stage of the theatre has facilities to house road shows and vaudeville. Officials of the West Coast Theatres, Inc. attribute much of the progress of this theatre's construction to the development of the Los Angeles Harbor District.

In Pomona, California, a 1500 seat house is being built for the Gore Bros., Ramish and Sol Lesser interests by the Milwaukee Building Company, in the heart of the city. This house will be ready for opening about August of this year and required an investment of $200,000.

At Hermosa Beach, California, one of the most prominent citizens there, Mr. Mattison, is constructing a huge block into which are incorporated a bank building, a theatre, stores and offices. On this structure no money is being spared to make it the most beautiful in the entire bay city district. The Hermosa Chamber of Commerce is solidly and most energetically backing this investment. The front of the building will be faced in tile and the theatre will have 1000 seats. When West Coast Theatres, Inc. will announce the opening of this theatre the entire bay city will hold a special celebration in honor of the event, according to announcement by the Venice Investment Company, partners in the undertaking. $200,000 is the appropriation represented for this construction work.

At Santa Monica, California, at 3rd and Arizona Sts., a high-class theatre and office building is being constructed by West Coast Theatres, Inc. on a syndicate property, which is 150x200 feet on a corner. The investment is in excess of $400,000. The theatre will be 1700 seats capacity equipped with all modern facilities.

In Hollywood the Hollywood Theatre, near Highland, will be entirely remodeled at an expense of $75,000. The theatre is to be beautified and redecorated with many new chairs added to make it a 1000 seat capacity house. During the remodeling the back wall of the theatre will be torn out and 75 feet added to the rear end in order to provide the increased capacity.

On Western Avenue, at 54th Street, on the Southwest corner, a Class A theatre seating 1500, fully equipped, with stores and offices is being built by R. F. D. List for West Coast Theatres, Inc. The property is 175x175 feet, and the investment approximates $250,000.

On the corner of Washington, Vermont and New Hampshire, a Los Angeles key corner fronting on two main boulevards accessable from all parts of the city, will arise a magnificent 2500 seat theatre of Class A construction. Plans for this theatre are now being prepared so that construction can begin at an early date. The property on Washington from the Northwest corner of Vermont is 192 feet, while the depth is 161 feet. The total investment of the building alone, not including real estate will be in excess of $750,000. The theatre itself will be as magnificent as any in Los Angeles. It will be the largest neighborhood theatre in the West, and, officials of the West Coast Theatres, Inc. state, operated on a magnificent scale.

On York Boulevard, between 51st and 52nd Streets, J. A. Badely is erecting a theatre which will be of an Egyptian architectural design. Construction and real estate estimated at $165,000.

For all of these houses Messrs. Gore Bros., Ramish, and Sol Lesser, are awarding contracts for organs, masonry, carpentry, decorating and other manual labor, the sum total of these contracts being estimated to keep thousands of workmen busy for an entire year. The total cost of Class A organs, which will be installed in these various theatres, is in excess of $250,000, and not included in the construction appropriations.

Three more deals are now pending for theatres contemplated and in stage negotiation ready for announcement at a very early date. All of them will be situated in Los Angeles at a total investment of $750,000.

West Coast Theatres, Inc. also announce that their associate, Mr. Claude Langley, has closed negotiations in conjunction with them for a new theatre which will be announced soon. The investment in this instance will be $400,000. Mr. Langley has just recently remodeled and re-equipped the DeLuxe Theatre on Alvarado Street, the Pasadena Theatre at Pasadena, and the Hippodrome Theatre at Taft, California, at an expense of $50,000.

Taking into consideration that several new theatre deals are now pending and that during the winter season of this year officials of the West Coast Theatres, Inc. expect to add more houses to their string as certain communities develop in various parts of Southern California, it will not be an unwarranted conclusion that with the beginning of 1924 at least twenty new houses have been added to their chain.

DOUG ANNOUNCES FIRST NAME FOR "BAGDAD" CAST

To Julanne Johnston, one of the most promising young players in filmdom, has come a new honor, according to an announcement today from the Douglas Fairbanks company. She was the first person to be chosen for the cast in Doug's new picture, "The Thief of Bagdad," a play which it is reported will out-do "Robin Hood" both for splendor and in point of story value.

Miss Johnston's knowledge of Terpsichorean art had considerable bearing, it is said, in influencing Doug to assign one of the important roles in the new film to her. Her work as a classical dancer, coupled with her acting ability, formed a rare combination which especially fitted Miss Johnston for the part of an Oriental whose adventures play conspicuously through the story.

Sets are now under construction at the studio and it is expected that actual filming will commence within the next two weeks. Raoul Walsh will direct and Arthur Edeson, who photographed "Robin Hood," will be behind the camera.

HARDING TO GET UNIQUE GIFT HERE

When President Harding visits Los Angeles in August, he will be the recipient of many presents, all more or less typical of California and motion pictures, but the outstanding token which he will carry back to the White House with him is a solid silver copy of Ella Buchanan's "Young Lincoln," a statuette twenty-two inches high, now in process of casting by Gorham, Providence, R. I.

The donors will be Al and Ray Rockett and the Rockett-Lincoln Film Company of Hollywood, now producing "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln," which work inspired Miss Buchanan to create this new study of the Great Emancipator and, by special arrangement with the artist, "The Young Lincoln" will be used in the exploitation of the picture. President Harding's copy of "The Young Lincoln" will be the first to be done in metal. It will be enclosed in a casket of California hardwoods.

In Miss Buchanan's work, Lincoln, the youth, stands hatless by the stump of a tree. In his right hand he holds his axe, his fingers gripping it close up to the bit. The gaunt figure is clad in hickory shirt open at the throat, pants, baggy at the knees and the heavy boots of pioneer days. His thick, windblown hair is piled above his noble brow, and his gaze is directed downward toward the stump, wherein is perched a baby squirrel, nestling in the left hand of the kindly woodsman. The poise of the body is that of a workman weary with his task, pausing to snatch a moment's breathing space, while upon the lean, homely features there is an expression of tenderness and compassion that almost moves the beholder to tears.

"Meanest Man" Leaves

Bert Lytell, who has just completed the leading male role in "The Meanest Man in the World," departed this week for New York, where he will take a steamer for Rome, Italy. Lytell will join George Fitzmaurice in Europe and will take the leading role in the production of "The Eternal City." According to present plans, the star will personally attend the world premiere of "The Meanest Man in the World" at the George M. Cohan Theatre, New York City early in September.

BARRYMORE SIGNS FOR "ETERNAL CITY"

Lionel Barrymore, stage and screen star, and a member of America's foremost theatrical family, will play one of the important roles in Hall Caine's "The Eternal City," which Geo. Fitzmaurice will produce in Rome for Samuel Goldwyn as a First National picture.

Probably no figure in the theatrical world is more universally known or better thought of than Lionel Barrymore, brother of Ethel and John, and one of the acknowledged leaders of the dramatic art in America. Trained in the fine arts and successful as an etcher in bronze, Lionel soon joined the profession in which the Barrymore-Drew-Rankin family had always excelled. Co-starring with his brother John, the new First National player toured the country after a long run in New York, in "Peter Ibbetson," in which he played the irrascible renagade, Col. Ibbetson. A similar success with John was registered in "The Jest," and Lionel, starring alone, enjoyed a tremendous personal triumph in "The Copperhead," which was later transferred to the screen with the same star.

Recognized by his work in "The Copperhead" as a star equally effective on the screen as on the stage, Lionel Barrymore was signed to star in a series of pictures, produced by Whitman Bennett, which were distributed through Associated First National. These included "The Master Mind," "The Devil's Garden," "The Great Adventure," and "Jim, the Penman." The latest screen production of this popular player is "Enemies of Women."

In securing the services of Lionel Barrymore, Samuel Goldwyn is living up to his promise to make his re-entry into the ranks of motion picture producers an auspicious story, director and cast will be the best that a thorough search of the industry could unearth, states Mr. Goldwyn, and in sending the entire company to Rome in order to film the exact locations of the story, he expects to be able to offer one of the forthcoming season's biggest successes.

Moranti Adds Star

The Milburn Moranti Comedy Company is starting this week on their third two-reel situation comedy of the Irish Series of eighteen to be released by the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc. Every comedy brings a more complete all-star cast. The cast supporting Milburn Moranti in the third comedy includes Eddie Barry, Helen Kesler, Billy Franey, Violet Schran, Russell Tizzard, S. J. (Tiny) Sanford, Olga Gordon and Harry Belmore.

CAMERAMAN COMPLETES REVOLUTIONARY INVENTION

Antonio Gaudio, veteran cinematographer, forwarded to the U. S. Patent Office this week an invention which will be of vast service in the motion picture industry. The invention is known as a magnification focusing telescope for camera attachment. Gaudio is perhaps the best known cinematographer in motion pictures. His new contract with the Joseph M. Schenck organization calls for a salary said to be the largest ever paid in that branch of studio work.

For some years cameramen and directors have been handicapped because the available methods of focusing were not covering the desired requirements. The cameramen had difficulty in seeing the entire field of the picture through their focusing lenses and at close enough range to work with confidence on double-exposures, matting, etc., without making exhaustive tests, especially with the commonly used gauze mats.

Working independently, Gaudio began solving the problem as a result of which he has invented a magnification focusing telescope. This telescope gives a clearer view of the entire field on the ground glass with a five-times magnification. By turning a small lever, which changes the optical system, a twelve-times magnification of nearly the entire field also can be obtained. In both the five-times and twelve-times magnification an erect and normal image is obtained with the Gaudio invention.

The eye-piece is especially large, permitting a clear view of the field. By this invention all "doubles" or split stage work can be lined up with positive assurance by reason of the large magnification and the fact that the lens is not disturbed between the focusing and photographing periods.

Gaeteno ("Tony") Gaudio was born in Italy and educated in the University of Rome. He is now filming Norma Talmadge in "Ashes of Vengeance," under the direction of Frank Lloyd. His recent Talmadge pictures were "The Eternal Flame" and "The Voice from the Minaret," in which Norma appeared, and "East is West," in which Constance was the star.

STARS ORGANIZE CLUB TO ENCOURAGE SPANISH

Carmelita Geraghty, who speaks Spanish as readily as English, has organized a Spanish club among some of the film stars. As the name of the club is "Habla Espanol," when the girls convene, speaking Spanish is compulsory, for back of some of the social aspects of the club and cultural advantages is a plan to keep abreast of the linguistic demands in motion pictures.

"Since in so many French stories it is getting common to give the lines to the actors in French, we anticipate the same thing will happen in Spanish productions which are so popular now, and we decided to be ready with a working knowledge of the language," explains Miss Geraghty, who has charge of the club.

The personnel of the club in addition to Miss Geraghty includes Colleen Moore, Julanne Johnston, Jean Haskell, Katherine Key, Gertrude Olmstead and Constance Wilson.

D'Auray Recovering

Jacques D'Auray, well-known technical director and portrayer of several "suave gentleman" parts, is on his way to health again. Though the burns suffered in the explosion of his gasoline tank are many and painful, the verdict of his physicians is that his eyesight is safe now and that in due time Mr. D'Auray will be able to resume his camera work. Mr. D'Auray takes the opportunity through means of "Camera"! to thank his friends and colleagues for the many marks of sympathy received since his accident.

CARL WANTED TO LOOK PART OF "DEAD MAN"

"Why in thunder are you putting on lighter makeup?" implored Charlie Chaplin of Carl Miller, male lead in the comedian's "Public Opinion."

Mr. Miller, only two minutes before had died on the Chaplin set, but when the above question was put to him he was all energy with his makeup box.

"When death ensues," said Mr. Miller, patiently, "the blood immediately leaves the body and a pallor steals over and remains on the countenance. For the first five hours there is no material change.. Then——"

"Wha—? How—? Why—?" gasped Charles Spencer.

Then Carl, the thorough, explained that in order to look right in death, he had consulted for two long hours an undertaker who had given him the correct "dope."

"He also offered if the rushes don't look right to come over and supervise the death scenes," added Miller.

"Alimony" Under Way

With production work actually begun on "Alimony," the drama of social life from the story by A. T. Locke, at the Powers Studios under the direction of Emile Chautard, the studio is buzzing with activity. The production is being filmed with an all-star cast headed by Ruby Miller and Warner Baxter, and including Jackie Saunders, Vola Vale, Clyde Fillmore and Lila Leslie. Joseph Du Bray and Pierre Collings are at the cameras.

APFEL IS SIGNED TO DIRECT VIOLA

Oscar Apfel, a leading motion picture director for the past twelve years, has been signed by Metro to direct Viola Dana in "To Whom It May Concern," the little Metro star's second starring picture for the coming season.

"To Whom It May Concern," is a mystery story by Rita Weiman which has been adapted for the screen by Rex Taylor. Actual production is to be started at the Metro studios about June 1st.

Mr. Apfel has only recently returned to Hollywood from a trip abroad where he directed "Bulldog Drummond" for a Dutch producing company. Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley accompanied Mr. Apfel and enacted the leading roles in this picture.

Previous to going abroad Mr. Apfel was with Edison, Famous-Players and Fox for a number of years. One of his earliest successes for Famous Players was "The Squaw Man," in which Dustin Farnum was starred.

While with Fox, Mr. Apfel directed William Farnum for more than a year and among some of the pictures he made were "A Soldier's Oath," "The Battle of Hearts," "Fighting Blood," and many others.

Miss Dana has just completed her work in "Rouged Lips," another story by Rita Weiman, which will be her first release for the coming season. "Rouged Lips" was directed by Harold Shaw.

HUGHES RUNS (AWAY) TRUE TO USUAL FORM

Lloyd Hughes is always running away from home—that is, in pictures.

Every character which this popular motion picture juvenile has enacted has been that of a young chap who either runs away from home, is kicked out, or, for some other reason, skips the parental roof to seek romance and adventure elsewhere.

To prove his claim that he is the star runaway of filmdom, Hughes points to his parts in, "Turn in the Road," "Dangerous Hours," "Homespun Folks," "Mother O' Mine,' "Hail the Woman,' "Love Never Dies," "Tess of the Storm Country," "Judgment of the Storm," and "The Foot of the Hill."

And now comes "The Huntress," a First National picture, in which he is playing opposite winsome Colleen Moore.

True to form he is playing the part of a scion of a wealthy family who quarrels with his relatives and goes into the wilds to meet romance in the Indian country.

LASKY ANNOUNCES BIG PROGRAM FOR YEAR

The dawn of a new era in motion picture history was heralded before delegates to the semi-annual convention of the Department of Distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation which took place in Los Angeles this week. According to an announcement made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production, fifty-two photoplays will be released by the Paramount organization during the season of 1923-24. Only special productions whose themes and stories of the highest appeal and with casts of the biggest stars of filmdom will be offered.

"The day of the bigger and better picture is no longer a hope of the future," Mr. Lasky said. "It is here. 'The Covered Wagon' is proving it. The new season of Paramount pictures, each with the production standard of 'The Covered Wagon' will continue to prove it. Never has it been truer that what the public wants is great stars superbly directed in great screen stories.

Attending the convention of the Distribution Department of Paramount Pictures were executive, salesmen, bookers, exploiteers and other employees from all the West Coast Exchanges and executives from the home office in New York City. Among the latter were S. R. Kent, General Manager of Distribution, who presided at the Convention; John D. Clark, Divisional Manager; Eugene Zukor, E. E. Shauer, Mel Shauer, Claud Saunders, Charles E. McCarthy, A. M. Botsford and G. M. Spidell.

The session opened at the Hotel Ambassador May 21st, and lasted three days. Production and sales policies for the coming season were discussed.

OWEN MOORE

Owen Moore, one of the screen's foremost comedy and dramatic players, has been engaged by First National to enact the principal male role in "Thundergate," a tensely dramatic picturization of Sidney Hershel Small's novel, "The Lord of Thundergate."

Few actors in pictures today have had such a wide experience before the camera as Moore, and, it was because of his extensive and versatile career, that he was chosen for the part in "Thundergate."

In the First National picture Moore will portray a young engineer, whose resemblance to a Chinese lord precipitates him in a series of adventurous, exciting and romantic situations and finally wins him a white wife, who was forced on him when, through circumstances, he was compelled to take the place of the real lord.

Other well known film celebrities who will have parts in this picture are Sylvia Breamer, Virginia Brown Faire and Robert McKim.

"Thundergate" promises to be the most colorful Chinese play since "East is West," a First National picture, which starring Constance Talmadge, proved the most entertaining and successful story of oriental life that has so far been screened.

Production on "Thundergate" will begin at the United Studios within the next two weeks. Joseph deGrasse will direct it.

UNIVERSAL ADDS A CHAMP ATHLETE TO ROSTER

Joe Bonomo, an all-around athlete and winner of a contest staged sometime ago to find the most perfectly built man whose features resembled closest those of Apollo Belvedere, has been signed by Universal to a long-term contract and is now at work at the company's studios in Universal City.

Out of 18,000 contestants Bonomo was adjudged winner of the contest and thereupon was given a contract with the Hope Hampton Productions in New York. Following a year's service with that company, during which time he gained wide recognition for his remarkable athletic ability, Bonomo was signed by Pathe to appear in pictures produced by them at their New York studios. He, therefore, goes to Universal with considerable training before the camera and it is being freely predicted that he will soon be heading his own company at this studio.

Bonomo weighs 190 pounds and stands five feet, 11½ inches in height. He won his letters as an expert swimmer and wrestler at the New York Military Academy. Before coming to California he was looked upon as one of the best amateur boxers in New York. For some time he conducted a boxing and wrestling club there under his own name. He is the son of Albert Bonomo, a well-known candy manufacturer of New York.

Tote Finishes Another

Tote Du Crow has just finished the role of Punchinello, the hunchback clown in "John of the Woods," featuring Dinky Dean, child protegee of Charlie Chaplin, which was filmed at the Universal studios. Immediately upon completing this part Tote was signed to portray the role of Sun Mun, an old Chinaman, in "The Lord of Thundergate," which is to be made at the United studios under the direction of Joseph De Grasse.

"Trilby" is Completed

The Richard Walton Tully production of du Maurier's "Trilby" is now completed and in the hands of the cutting department. No more will Arthur Edmund Carew, Philo McCollough and Wilfred Lucas be forced to don the fantastic hirsute decorations with which they have been forced to glorify their physiognomies during the filming of this classic. And the temporary blond aurora of McCollough's manly locks has once more given way to the natural auburn of his tresses. Oh, yes, and Andree Lafayette has taken to wearing stockings again. "Oh, death, where is thy sting?"

SERGEANT PROVES QUITE LIKE SARGENT

A short time ago Lewis Sargent, youthful comedy star who is now devoting his histrionic efforts to serious dramatic pictures, was on location with his company at a small northern city. The day following his arrival there he was arrested was brought before the police for speeding and the next day sergeant ,who in this town served as the judge.

"Have you got your license with you?" asked the presiding officer. Sargent started fumbling through his pockets, knowing right well, however, that he had left his operator's license at the hotel in his other suit.

"Do you mean my driver's license or my registration certificate?" the actor inquired, stalling for time.

The sergeant, who is considered a "hard-boiled" man by those who are brought before him, glanced down at the actor rather suspiciously.

"You know what we do with people who drive automobiles in this town without a license, don't you? We don't fine them. We put them in jail for a few days." The actor winced. "If you don't know which license I mean I'll show you mine."

As he put his hand in his inside coat pocket the stern expression on his face turned to a smile. He also, it seems, had left his license in his other clothes. Without further hearing, the actor's case was dismissed.

Editing Dupont Film

William C. Thompson, production manager, and Thomas Dixon, Jr., dramatic editor, of Shadowland Productions, Inc., are just completing the titling and editing of a new feature production starring Miss Dupont and which will be released soon through the Shadowland concern. This will be the first production featuring this star to ever be released on the independent market.

FINE ART'S NEW STUDIO NEARLY FINISHED

The task of reconstructing the Fine Arts studios is now in the final stages of completion and according to John Rikkleman, secretary and treasurer of the plant, it will be ready shortly to offer accommodations to as many as fifteen producing companies.

One of the greatest jobs that the working crew was compelled to face was the moving of one of the largest stages from one corner of the lot to another, but now that it has been moved in place the remainder of the remodelling work is progressing with the greatest speed.

Although most of the old wooden buildings have been wrecked, plans were arranged by the management so that production activity at the plant has not been delayed by the reconstruction work. In place of the wooden buildings the studio management has constructed stucco buildings of the latest designs and with every modern improvement. As a part of the studio expansion plan twenty-six new dressing rooms and fourteen executive offices have been constructed and are now ready for occupancy. A new enclosed stage is rapidly nearing completion.

More than $250,000 is being spent by the studio for the reconstruction work, but when it is completed the plant will be one of the most up-to-date and best equipped studios on the West Coast.

Among the companies at present engaged in production at the Fine Arts studios is the Mission Film Company, which company is producing "The Barefoot Boy" under the direction of David Kirkland; the Finis Fox Productions making "Bag and Baggage" under the direction and supervision of Finis Fox; Fred Caldwell productions, making another "Hollywood" story, and the Jess Robbins Production.

New Illumination Angle

Another new angle in the illumination of moving picture sets has been developed. This time the inventor is E. R. Hickson, art director for the Ben Wilson Production, at present filming an all-star feature entitled, "Mine to Keep." Instead of using one large lamp, each big light is replaced by two of smaller power, which Hickson avers, is not so strenuous on the eyes of the players facing the powerful, starey arcs. Hickson is known in filmland as one of the most original and efficient art directors in the business, and has to his credit, many ideas and inventions which have served potentially in making motion picture work easier and of better quality.

DERIDED RABBIT'S FOOT RIDES TO TRIUMPH

This is the tale of a rabbit's foot and four brave nimrods.

Director Frank Borzage and Producer Arthur H. Jacobs went a'fishing after they finished shooting "Children of Dust," taking with them Cameraman Chet Lyons and Bunny Dull, production manager.

They wanted just a bit of a rest between pictures, a mountain trip and the limit of trout.

Frank Borzage carries a rabbit's foot.

The others derided his superstition, but the rabbit's foot did its duty.

Upon their return the following was submitted by Borzage in favor of his talisman.

Jacobs lost his car in a smash-up in which another motorist ran into it while left at the curb.

He caught only nine trout.

Dull stepped on a rusty nail and could not go into the water to fish. He caught three.

Lyons whipped the streams too hard and caught nothing.

Borsaze landed the limit and had no trouble of any sort.

"MEANEST MAN" TO HAVE NOVEL NEW YORK OPENING

"The Meanest Man in the World," adapted to the screen from George M. Cohan's famous stage success of the same name, has been completed by Principal Pictures Corporation and will have its world premiere in Mr. Cohan's theatre on Broadway, New York.

The opening will take place early in the fall and Cohan personally will attend to many of the arrangements necessary to bring the production to Broadway in genuine George M. Cohan style.

Bert Lytell, who portrays the "meanest man" on the screen (Cohan having played the part on the stage) will also be in Gotham at this time and there is every reason to feel Lytell will participate with Cohan on the presentation of the picture.

A cast of excellent artists besides Lytell are featured in this new offering. Chief among these are Blanche Sweet, Bryant Washburn, Forrest Robinson, Maryon Aye, Helen Lynch, Ward Crane, Frances Raymond, William Conklin, Victor Potel, Lincoln Stedman, Carl Stockdale, and others of equal popularity. The picture is in feature length and is said to be one of the outstanding productions of the coming season.

BARKER LEAVES FOR 3RD LOCATION ON ONE FILM

With eight weeks of location work already to his credit in the making of "The Master of Woman" for Louis B. Mayer-Metro release, Reginald Barker has again started for the great outdoors to film exterior scenes for the production. Big Bear Lake is his destination this time, and while his stay will not be as long as his trips to Alberta, Canada, and the Feather River country, it will be fully as exciting if he achieves half of the spectacular thrills prescribed by the scenario.

Among the stars accompanying Mr. Baker on the Big Bear expedition are Pat O'Malley, Earle Williams and Renee Adoree, who has sufficiently recovered from her severe attack of "Klieg eyes" to face the camera where artificial lights are not used. "The Master of Woman" an an adaptation by Monte M. Katterjohn of the G. B. Lancaster novel "The Law-Bringers." Among the other stars is the cast are: Barbara La Marr, Wallace Beery, Josef Swickard, Pat Harmon, Anders Randolf, George Kuwa, Robert Anderson and Ed J. Brady.

CONFUSION IS CAUSED BY A TITLE CONTEST

Considerable confusion has been caused in the mind of the public of a misunderstanding regarding a title contest held within the Mary Pickford organization recently.

Miss Pickford offered a prize of a jewelled wrist watch or two hundred dollars in cash to the member of her own organization who suggested the best title for her forthcoming production, "The Street Singer." It seems that the impression got abroad, probably gained from published accounts of the contest, that it was open for the general public. This has resulted in the studio being deluged by title suggestions, and the clerical staff has been overwhelmed by work in writing letters of explanation.

The contest was won by Dennis F. O'Brien, attorney for Miss Pickford, who suggested "The Street Singer." This was the very first title offered, and seemed best suited to the picture.

Van Dyke is Signed

Associated Authors have signed up Woodward S. Van Dyke to direct "Harbor Bar," the Peter B. Kyne sea story which will be their second release for Allied Producers and Distributors. Van Dyke recently directed "Forget-Me-Not," a Metro release featuring Bessie Love and also a number of Leah Baird specials. Thompson Buchanan, who will supervise the production with the assistance of his associates Frank Woods and Elmer Harris, has just completed the script for the picture. Camera work will begin as soon as the cast is signed up.

MONTY'S FAMILY MUSICAL BUT HE PLAYS FUNNY

Monty Banks, one of the three "toppers" who are making two-reel feature comedies at the Grand Studio in Hollywood, says, although his entire family is musical, he can't play a note.

"Back home in Milan, Italy," says Monty, "my father was a musical director, my cousin was —and is—a tenor in opera; my sister a violinist. But while they stayed home and practiced, I was out having a good time playing monkey-shines. That's my nature. Always to laugh. But I like also beautiful things around me—fine pictures, statuary, books. I have just bought a new home in the foothills of Hollywood and I shall accumulate as many art objects as I can to make it beautiful. I make foolishness all day in the pictures; when I am through, I become different. Oh, yes, I love a good dinner—but though from Italy, I do not care for spaghetti. No, sir. It does not suit my taste at all. Not all Italians like spaghetti. Not all Irishmen like potatoes, I suppose either. No?"

THOUSAND ORIENTALS TO BE USED IN THIS FILM

Southern California is being combed for Chinese and Japanese "types" to play parts in "Thundergate," an elaborate and tensely dramatic story of Chinese and American life which is to be filmed by First National.

More than 1000 Orientals—men, women and children—will be employed during the filming of the huge production, which will be made under the direction of Joseph De Grasse at the United Studios.

Prominent parts in the play will be filled by Virginia Brown Faire, Sylvia Breamer and Robert McKim.

"Thundergate," which is a screen version of Sidney Herschel Small's "Lord of Thundergate," deals with the thrilling, dramatic experiences of an American who, through a series of unusual circumstances becomes mistaken for a Chinese over-lord; is forced to masquerade as such and is compelled to accept as a slave-wife, a beautiful white girl who had been kidnaped as a child and reared as Chinese.

Miss Faire will fill the role of the slave-wife. The part of the American has not yet been filled.

Gordon Returns to Mayer

Having completed his role as leading man in Gloria Swanson's new picture, "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," Huntly Gordon has returned to the Louis B. Mayer Studios as a prominent figure in the all-star cast of John M. Stahl's new First National attraction, "The Wanters," Mr. Gordon was placed under a long-term contract by Mr. Mayer following his wonderful performance as Jeffrey Fair in Fred Niblo's "The Famous Mrs. Fair."

MILADY OF FRANCE LAUDS MILADY OF L. A.

Los Angeles women are the most distinctively dressed in America, certainly this side of Fifth Avenue.

This is the judgment of Mlle. Andree Peyro, the screen idol of France, who recently has come to Hollywood to fulfill American motion picture contracts negotiated in Paris.

Mlle. Peyro, in voicing this view, takes into consideration even New York women, who have the advantage of representation in their city of internationally known French designers and first call upon all ideas in gowns which come from the fashion arbiters of Paris.

Commenting upon this point, Mlle. Peyro said, when seen at her home in Hollywood: "One might suppose that modes, like the sun, would have come and gone in the east before they reach the west, but it is not so.

"From observation, I believe that in this part of the United States the new idea is accepted more readily than in the older cities, excepting, possibly, New York. They hesitate and modify, without doubt, many of the Parisian ideas; whereas, here it seems that, if a new design is suitable to the American style of beauty, it is taken up quickly. That it is beautiful is enough; that it has never been done before is never considered. Distinction is bound to follow."

MR. AND MRS. WASHBURN WORKING IN SAME FILM

For the first time in several years, Mr. and Mrs. Bryant Washburn will be seen in the leading roles of the same photoplay. This duo of screen celebrities are playing the stellar roles in Ben Wilson's latest feature production, "Mine to Keep," which is now in the course of filming at the Berwilla Studios, with Ashton Dearholt, former screen star in his own right, serving as production manager. Dearholt declares this new picture will boast an enviable cast, having in addition to Mr. and Mrs. Washburn, such well-known favorites as Wheeler Oakman, Charlotte Stevens, Kate Lester and numerous others.

Ash With Rock

Jerry Ash, camera expert, is now shooting the Joe Rock Productions at the Grand Studio. Jerry is a wizard with the lens. He has invented several appliances for motion picture photography and in addition is a talented sleight-of-hand performer. It takes a pretty good man to be two kinds of a wizard!

FISHER IS NORTH ON BIG FILM DEAL

Victor B. Fisher, producer of "Youth Triumphant" just completed at the Hollywood Studios, left here this week for San Francisco, where he will confer with his associates on a deal involving increased producing activities and the signing of several leading motion picture players.

The result obtained in filming "Youth Triumphant,' 'it is understood, has prompted the producers and those interested in Fisher Productions, to enter the Los Angeles producing industry on a much larger scale than originally planned and upon Mr. Fisher's return here the latter part of the week, some important news in this connection is promised.

While in San Francisco, Mr. Fisher will close arrangements for the next story to be filmed here. Although the title of the picture is not announced, it is stated that rights are about to be closed for a current stage success of New York involving the filming of one of the biggest hits on Broadway the past season.

"Youth Triumphant" in the meantime, is receiving its final editing and titling under the supervision of Lillian Ducey, the director. The production, including in its cast Virginia Lee Corbin, Anna Q. Nilsson, Raymond Hatton, Mary Anderson, Kate Price, Joseph Dowling and other popular players, will be shown publicly within the next three weeks.

It is planned to give the picture its premiere in Los Angeles, to be followed with special showings in the leading cities throughout the country on a road-show basis.

TRAVERS BACK IN FILMS AFTER 4 YEARS ABSENCE

Richard C. Travers, former screen idol and more recently famous as a war hero and ace, has been induced to resume his motion picture career by Marshall Neilan.

For the first time in four years, Mr. Travers donned the grease paint this week and appeared before the camera for Neilan's "The Rendezvous," in the dashing costume of a Russian officer.

Travers, for the past year has been with the Aerial Marines, making long distance flights out of Mineola, Long Island, and had no intention of returning to the screen until the earnest persuasions of Mickey Neilan won him over. His return will make his first appearance under Neilan's direction, his first Russian characterization, and his first picture made on the Coast.

THIS BABE STARTS VERSATILITY EARLY IN LIFE

Among all of filmland's budding starlets there is probably not one who can put forth a stronger claim for versatility than Baby Josephine Adair who recently finished one of the most important roles in Frank Borzage's "Children of Dust," which was filmed at the United Studios. This little screen Goldilocks has interpreted all sorts and manners of characters, and in two Mack Sennett comedies was seen as a dainty young Miss of 5, and a rough-and-tumble "Buster Brown" boy, which were as different as night and day. Lloyd Hamilton was responsible for her initiation as a "boy" actor for it was in one of his farces that she first appeared in the regalia of a street urchin. At the present time she is playing the part of a tough and ragged youngster in Hughie Fay's picture at the Grand Studio, and it would be difficult to identify her as a demure young lady with ingenue ambitions.

In Borzage's picture she enacts the part of a girl three years older than herself, which is later carried on by Pauline Garon, and has proved that she is as genuine in dramatic parts as she is in comedy roles. Her inclusion in a cast including such well-known names as Pauline Garon, Johnnie Walker, Lloyd Hughes, Frankie Lee, and Bert Woodruff is an encouraging indication for her.

DANISH ACTOR MAKES NEW START IN NEW WORLD

Prominent among those chartacer actors who have been in the limelight so much of late is Otto Matiesen, who recently finished the role of Philippe de Vilmorin in Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" at the Metro studios. Although comparatively new to the silversheet he is by no means a novice in dramatic work for he has been on the stage all of his life, appearing with some of the world's most renowned artists. He is a Dane by birth and regarded by his countrymen as one of their foremost dramatic actors, especially in the interpretation of Ibsen, Shakespeare and Washington Irving in which roles he created a sensation on the Continent several years ago when he played before many of the crowned heads of Europe. London, Paris, Copenhagen, Berlin, Vienna . . . . all know this young man ,and have accorded him tremendous applause upon his appearances there.

It was during a tour of America, giving performances in the art and little theatres of the country that he came to Southern California. His work aroused the interest of the film moguls and he was immediately approached with cinema offers, several of which he accepted. Matiesen, who is the personification of the European artist, embodying grace and dignity, and whose striking good looks compel attention wherever he goes, does not exploit these attributes, preferring to win his laurels upon his acting ability alone. The wide range of characters he has played would convince even the most skeptical that he has no parallel in his particular phase of work. Several interesting studies of these characters by Margrethe Mather, the, eminent Danish photographer, who is now a resident of Hollywood, have been awarded prizes in London and Paris art salons.

His most recent screen appearance was as Napoleon Bonaparte in Hugo Ballin's screen version of "Vanity Fair." As Philippe de Vilmorin in Ingram's production, he plays the part of a clergy-scholar of the period preceding the French Revolution and the Fall of the Bastile, who is killed in a duel in the early part of the story and whose death forms the basis of the subsequent adventures of his friend, the redoubtable Scaramouche. His interpretation of this part was so artistically perfect as to win the commendation of the director and a statement to the effect Matiesen was destined for film success of the highest order. Knowing the customs of Europe, and having specialized for so many years in historical characters he is probably better equipped to bring this type to the shadow stage than any other film artist. His success, when it does come, will be lasting, for it will be founded upon portrayals of established merit and distinction.

The Warner Brothers have completed one of the largest studios in Los Angeles at an approximate expenditure of $250,000. The new studio covers nine and one-half acres of ground, has all the latest lighting and stage equipment, 100 dressing rooms, thirty executive offices, library and all other appliances in addition to the largest stage in the world, fully 300 feet in length.

HERE'S A CHANCE FOR SOULFUL DAMSEL

If you are eighteen, an old-fashioned girl, demure, with a soul, and a depth of sympathetic understanding, fairly pretty, and if you have ambition and want to work hard and diligently, then hurry and get in touch with Director Frank Borzage, for there is an excellent opportunity awaiting you to become a real motion picture player and perhaps eventually a star.

Mr. Borzage, who is preparing his next picture at the United Studios for Producer Arthur H. Jacobs, is held up because in all filmdom—and even on the stage—he is unable to find the exact type of girl to play the ingenue, a leading part opposite Wm. Collier, Jr., who is coming from New York to be in this all-star production released by First National which will also have Virginia Pearson in the cast.

They want a real girl with sweet personality and charming manner; an anti-flapper, yet a modern girl. "She does not have to be pretty, but must have brains," says Director Borzage, "and it is a wonderful part and a great chance for an unknown girl to get a real start."

It will be remembered that Borzage, who has a peculiar faculty for discovering screenable faces, has brought out a number of stars in his many pictures, perhaps the most notable case being Vera Gordon, who played the mother in his famous screen epic, "Humoresque." Borzage saw in her a real actress with a soul, and so she was acclaimed a star almost overnight.

FORMER SLAVE, 104, IS NOW A PICTURE ACTOR

At the tender age of 104, John Currie, colored, has embarked upon a career in the motion pictures. He is without doubt the oldest actor before the camera.

Currie, white haired and shaking with age, was born in Atlanta, Ga., in the summer of 1819. His parents were slaves owned by Major James Comer, a wealthy southern planter.

Currie grew up with the Major's son, James Comer, Jr., and became his personal body servant. When the Civil War was declared Currie and his master fought side by side for the Confederacy.

Currie photographs excellently, according to Tod Browning, Goldwyn director, who has signed him to play the part of Isaac Hendricks, a slave, in "The Day of Faith," the Arthur Somers Roche story that Browning is to direct.

Currie has eighteen great grand children, the youngest of whom won the Croix de Guerre and the Medaille Militaire in the great war.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Claire Windsor Returns

Claire Windsor who, ever since she completed her role in Marshall Neilan's "The Eternal Three," has been sojourning in New York, returned to Los Angeles Thursday. Miss Windsor, during her short stay in the metropolis, was extensively feted by society. Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt and her sister, Mrs. John Converse, entertained her, as did Mrs. Bernard Baruch. Miss Windsor was also an honored guest at the Belmont Hunt, which is quite the social affair of the season.

A Girl and Her Name

Duane Thompson, the new leading lady with Christie Comedies, who makes her bow with Bobby Vernon in "Plumb Crazy," has had a lot of trouble with her name. Duane Thompson happens to be her real name, but she used to be known in comedy pictures as Violet Joy. The latter name was wished on her some time ago when she first featured in pictures, no one knows why. We've always wondered who thinks up some of the fancy names for movie people and Pullman cars. At any rate, Miss Thompson likes her own name and isn't ashamed of it, so she went back to her real "nom de movie" as soon as she had the opportunity.

To Film "Paradise"

Richard Walton Tully is to produce for the screen his famous stage success, "The Bird of Paradise," in the Hawaiian Islands, locale of the story. The production, which will be a First National release, it is said, will be anywhere from three months to a year in the making. The cast is now under consideration, but as yet no final selections have been made. "The Bird of Paradise," one of the most successful of foot-light attractions, played for twelve years on the stage. Among those elevated to stardom in the port of the Hawaiian princess were Laurette Taylor, Lenore Ulrich, Carlotta Monterey, Bessie Barriscale, Florence Rockwell and Muriel Starr. Guy Bates Post played "Ten Thousand Dollar" Dean, the beachcomber.

Grand Corners Directors

A galaxy of high-class comedy directors is to be found at the Grand Studio on Gower Street, Hollywood, where Monty Banks, Sid Smith and Joe Rock are all engaged in making two-reel fun films. Among them are Alf Goulding, Grover Jones, Archie Mayo, Hugh Fay, Harry Edwards, Herman Raymaker and Gil Pratt.

Betsy Plans Party

Betsy Ann Hisle, five-year-old beauty contest winner, who is one of the features of Hal Roach's "Our Gang" comedies, is going to have a birthday party at the Hollywood Hotel next Wednesday, May 30th, and has invited Baby Muriel MacCormac, Baby Peggy, Jeanne Dawson, Jackie Condon, Mickey McBan, Richard Headrick, Jackie Parker, Walter Wilkinson, and several other screen kiddies to be her guests. As yet no estimates have been made as to how much ice cream and cake will be consumed, but a corps of caterers are being held in readiness for the onslaught.

Miss Wales in Two Films

Ethel Wales, well-known character actress who is scoring in "The Covered Wagon," has just signed two interesting contracts. Miss Wales started work Friday in "The Harbor Bar," a Peter B. Kyne story being made by Associated Authors at Ince's in which she is cast as "Penny," an old maid. Following this she goes to the Lasky Studios to negotiate a leading character role in "The Faun," a William de Mille production. She recently completed character roles in "Gigi," a Dinky Dean Production and "The Fog," a Graf Production for Metro.

Carr on New Job

W. H. ("Bill") Carr, well-known art director, who was for many years with the Lois Weber Company, has assumed the management of the rental department of Foster's Antique Shop. Carr entered film work with Universal eleven years ago, and was immediately assigned to the Weber outfit, with which group he remained until 1921. Then he free-lanced, handling the art direction on Constance Talmadge's "The Primitive Lover" and "East Is West"; Norma Talmadge's "The Eternal Flame"; Jackie Coogan's "Oliver Twist"; B. P. Fineman's "Don't Marry for Money," and several other big productions. His association with Foster will place this establishment among the foremost in the southwest, for Carr has hosts of friends in the professional field, and a complete understanding of what is expected of him in his new position.

C. C. Burr has just finished putting the finishing touches on the next Earl Hurd-Bobby Bumps Cartoon Comedy, "Their Love Growed Cold," which will be released through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

After having been second assistant for the past three years, Lou Borzage has been promoted to first assistant with Frank Borzage, who is starting his next picture for Arthur H. Jacobs to be released through First National.

Because "The Eleventh Hour," the title of Bernard Durning's latest Fox film creation, is symbolic of their ritual, many lodges of the Elks national organiaztion will sponsor the premier showing of the picture in their respective communities. The screen production, which is an adaptation of Lincoln J. Carter's sensational melodrama, was made by Durning in eleven weeks, and the cast features eleven principal parts. Likewise it is the eleventh picture "Berney" has filmed under the Fox banner.

Under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, production has started at the United Studios on a new First National picture, "The Huntress," in which Lloyd Hughes has been given the featured role to portray. The popular actor has recently completed an important characterization in the Universal production of "Grandpop."

The Mission Film Company has assembled a notable list of artists for the principal roles in its latest virile drama of rural life, "The Barefoot Boy," which was written by Wallace Clifton and is now in production at the Fine Arts studios. Among the players are John Bowers, Marjorie Daw, Tully Marshall, Sylvia Breamer, Raymond Hatton, George MacDaniel, Harry Todd, Otis Harlan, Frankie Lee, Virginia True Boardman and others. David Kirkland is directing the picture.

Helen Kesler, who has appeared opposite many of the screen's foremost comedians and who recently completed a year's engagement as leading woman for Jimmy Aubrey, Vitagraph comedian, has been signed by Milburn Moranti to act as his leading woman in a new series of two reel comedies which he is to produce for the Anchor Film Company.

More lumber has already been used in the building of the sets for Rex Ingram's production of "Sacaramouche" than in any picture ever produced at the Metro studios, and the picture is not yet one-fourth finished.

"Bull" Montana was not satisfied with the color of his new automobile, so is now having it repainted. When it comes out of the paint shop it will resemble something between a western sunset and a mechanical representation of Will Irwin's "Trimmed in Scarlet."

The clever little Joys and Glooms of the cartoon page play an important part in "Rouged Lips," Viola Dana's new Metro picture. Instead of being in animated form, however, they are portrayed by skilled actors.

Edward Sloman, who is directing Metro's all-star production of "The Eagle's Feather," started on his theatrical career at the age of 18 by portraying the role of Friar Laurence in "Romeo and Juliet" at the Pavillion Theatre in London.

It is estimated that approximately 300 dozen candles of all sizes and shapes will be used in Rex Ingram's Metro production of "Scaramouche."

A real dentist was called upon to portray such a role, in order that the part in Viola Dana's Metro production, "Rouged Lips," would be enacted technically correct.

Hunt Stromberg, who produces, and often personally directs the "Bull" Montana comedies for Metro, is the youngest producer in motion pictures.

James Kirkwood, who is cast for the leading male role in Metro's all-star production of "The Eagle's Feather," was at one time leading man for Mary Pickford.

TRUESDELL IS ENGAGED FOR BORZAGE PICTURE

Arthur H. Jacobs has signed Frederick Truesdell, noted New York stage and screen actor, to appear in his new Frank Borzage production for First National, the temporary title of which is "Dust in the Doorway."

Mr. Truesdell is to play Malcolm Trask, husband of Virginia Pearson, who is one of the all-star cast which includes Josef Swickard and others.

He just arrived from New York where his last stage work was in the long run of "The Gold Diggers," the Belasco success. For many years he was associated with such popular stars as Lillian Russell, Mary Mannering, Lilly Langtry, Elsie Ferguson and many others. He was one of the original cast of "Ben Hur" and is today one of the only three living players who appeared in that notable first presentation. The others are Wm. S. Hart and Emmett Corrigan.

HOME FOLKS ARE STRONG FOR HANK

When Hollywood beckons, clerks drop their pens, carpenters lay down their hammers, cowboys sell their beloved mounts and business men dispose of their holdings. Many come to Hollywood, girls and boys, men and women. Many hear the call, but few are chosen.

One of the chosen few is Frederick Hank, formerly of Cheyenne, Wyoming. Mr. Hank, who was born near Omaha, Nebr., could ride a cayuse before he could walk. As the saying is, he was "born in a saddle." After a sojourn in Cheyenne, Mr. Hank came to Hollywood, but not until he had broken every dirt track automobile and motorcycle racing record in the Rocky Mountain region. Those records will stand for a long time to come, they say in Cheyenne, as Mr. Hank is known as a reckless driver in a state known for its dare-devil youth.

Mr. Hank began his motion picture career playing a "heavy" in Eugene Manlove Rhodes' "Stepsons of Light," a western role that called for hard-riding and considerable histrionic ability. Later Mr. Hank appeared in "Blood and Sand," "Manslaughter" and in "Robin Hood."

When the "home folks' in Cheyenne heard of Mr. Hanks progress in Hollywood a company was formed to further assist their fellow townsman to a position as an outdoor star. The new film concern is the Rocky Mountain Productions, Inc., and in "The Dangerous Trail," its first production, Mr. Hank has the juvenile role, playing opposite such artists as Irene Rich, Noah Beery, Tully Marshall, Jack Curtis and William Lowery. The director-general of the Rocky Mountain Productions is Alvin J. Neitz, director and writer of outdoor stories. F. W. Raymond is general manager. The new concern will confine all its studio activities in Hollywood. While Mr. Neitz is preparing a ten-reel western "thriller" as the first starring vehicle for Mr. Hank, the Rocky Mountain firm will produce a series of eight outdoor pictures featuring Bill Patton, who will be supported by Peggy O'Day.

Mae Busch Presents Mascot

During recent maneuvers conducted by the 160th Infantry at the Glendale rifle range, Mae Busch presented the regiment with a new mascot, "Kilo," a four-months old Belgian police dog. Colonel Walter P. Storey, commanding the 160th, accepted the mascot in behalf of the doughboys of the regiment.

STAHL, WITH GREAT CARE, ESSAYS NEW GREATNESS

With a cast of exceptional brilliance, and a story of universal interest and appeal, John M. Stahl's new picture, "The Wanters," is getting well along on the road of production as a Louis B. Mayer-First National special.

Approximately two months was consumed in the selection of the cast which is composed entirely of stage and screen stars of long-standing popularity with the public. An absolutely true portrayal of characters is a personal ideal with Mr. Stahl as well as being one of the reasons for his great success, each player was chosen for his or her particular adaptability for a certain role.

As Myra Hastings, a demure little maid who, overnight, is transformed into a society debutante, Marie Prevost not only has the greatest opportunity of her career, but also one of the most fascinating roles ever offered on the screen. Robert Ellis, who has just returned to filmdom after a trip around the world, will be seen as the chivalrous knight of her wonderful romance, while Huntly Gordon and Gertrude Astor will provide an air of bored aristocracy, as well as considerable plot, in the characters of Mr. and Mrs. Van Pelt.

Norma Shearer, a new star in the Mayer Studio fold, will make her West Coast debut as a beautiful but susceptible little flapper in "he Wanters." This picture will mark Lincoln Stedman's second performance under John M. Stahl's direction, playing a much-refused, but ever hopeful Romeo part that is reminiscent of his role in "The Dangerous Age." Little Richard Headrick will enact Sonny, a precocious youngster who rattles the family skeletons at inopportune momenis.

Three comedy favorites of old, Louise Fazenda, Hank Mann and Lydia Yeaman's Titus, will add mirth to the picture, balancing well with the severe hauteur of Lillian Langdon in the part of Mrs. Worthington, a society leader with an important family tree. Other important roles are taken by Vernon Steele, Eddie Gribbon and William Buckley. J. G. Hawks and Paul Bern wrote the scenario from the story by Leila Burton Wells, and Ernest G. Palmer is in charge of the photography.

NEW CONCERN HAS BOUGHT PACIFIC STUDIO

The Interstate Pictures Corporation, a newly formed $1,000,000 corporation, has just taken over the Pacific Studios at the corner of Venice Boulevard and Durango, Culver City. The lease was signed this week between Fred L. Hunt, owner, and J. B. Calvert, who is at the head of the new organization.

A series of five to ten-reel dramas will be filmed at the studio, the first to start production in about sixty days.

All the stories are those of a famous novelist, but at the present time it is undecided as to the name of the first story to be produced.

The American Releasing Corporation has the releasing rights for the first story.

J. B. Calvert is directing and Frank F. Cameron will assist.

About $300,000 will be spent on the first Interstate production.

Lee in Casting

Rowland V. Lee is casting parts for his first special production at the Fox Studios. The photoplay is based upon Gouverneur Morris' short story, "You Can't Get Away With It," and will bear the original title to the screen. It has been adapted for author of Rex Ingram's recent "Where the Pavement Ends," and the continuity is being prepared by Robert N. Lee.

STAR WILL KIDNAP A MAN FOR HERSELF

If you were a white girl—

If you had been brought up as an Indian—

If you decided that you wanted a white husband—

How would you go about getting him?

In "Huntress," Hulbert Footner's novel ,now being filmed at the United Studios by Associated First National, "Bela," played by Colleen Moore, the dainty and winsome young screen actress, is faced with that problem.

Bela wants a husband so much that she just goes out and takes one—kidnaps him in fact. And "then the fun begins."

The kidnapping of the white man forms the basic plot of this highly amusing picture play, which, replete with humor, is not without a good leaven of tensely dramatic situations.

"The Huntress," which is the initial all-First National picture to be produced under the production counselship of Richard Walton Tully, promises to be one of the outstanding motion pictures of the year. The role of "Bela," the vivacious white-Indian girl, is one which is especially adaptable to Miss Moore's versatile ability and is one that should add still more laurels to the crown of this most capable young woman.

"SCARAMOUCHE" IS GAINING DAILY IN EAST

It would seem that if Rex Ingram continues to increase the personnel of the cast he is assembling for his production of "Scaramouche," which is now in the course of filming at the Metro studios, he will have a safe majority in so far as celebrities assembled in one group is concerned.

The latest well known name to be added to the list of those to whom important parts are entrusted in this promising screen classic is Truman Van Dyke, who was signed to enact the role of Leandre.

Mr. Van Dyke started his work in this picture last Monday and under the terms of his contract, he will be kept busy before the battery of Ingram cameras for the next five weeks.

Mr. Van Dyke has been one of the foremost serial stars on the screen for the last several years but after completing a long engagement in the stellar role in the Selig chapter play entitled "The Jungle Goddess," he decided to abandon that field and concentrate his attentions on feature production work, and until recently he has been among those active at Universal City.

Although he is among the younger generation and distinctly juvenile type, Mr. Van Dyke is one of the veterans of the screen, he having been among the few to start his cinema career simultaneous with the establishing of the picture industry in Southern California. He won his greatest fame in serials because of his ability to do two very important things exceedingly well. One of these was to fight manfully and the other was to love the heroine. Forsooth both as for a fighter and a romancer he is considered the ideal American type.

Lila Leslie Engaged

Lila Leslie, popular stage and screen actress, has been engaged by First National to play a prominent part in "The Huntress," a comedy drama of "The great outdoors," which is being produced at the United Studios with Colleen Moore and Lloyd Hughes in the leading roles. Miss Leslie's stage career covers appearances not only in this country but also in England and Australia. In London her name is as well known in musical comedy circles as it is to screen patrons in this country. She also had a brilliant career in the Antipodes. In New York she played an important role in the original production of "Peg O' My Heart," "The Boomerang," "The Man Who Came Back," and "All for the Ladies."

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Edward Clayton, juvenile and dancer, has finished work in "Skidproof," directed by Scotty Dunlap for Fox.

Belle Stoddard is playing at present the part of the nurse to little Jean Carpenter in Norma Talmadge's "Ashes of Vengeance."

Malcolm McGregor, one of Metro's leading men has been loaned to Universal to appear in one picture with Gladys Walton.

Hope Hampton, who will be featured in the screen version of David Belasco's play, "The Gold Diggers," has arrived here from New York.

Oscar Apfel, who is to direct Viola Dana in "To Whom It May Concern," her next Metro starring picture, only recently returned from abroad where he produced "Bulldog Drummond" for a Dutch company.

Bowditch Turner, who is appearing in Rex Ingram's production of "Scaramouche" for Metro, enacted the role of Argensola the servant of Julio in Mr. Ingram's Metro production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

Clyde Fitch's "Beau Brummel," in which John Barrymore will be starred by the Warner Brothers, is being adapted for the screen by Frances Marion, one of the most prolific writers in the picture industry.

William Orlamond has a comedy character role in the Metro all-star production of "The Eagle's Feather." Mr. Orlamond scored a big hit with his comedy part of the ship's carpenter in the Metro screen version of "All the Brothers Were Valiant," a recent release.

Shirley Mason, the sister of Viola Dana, is in the Good Samaritan Hospital in Los Angeles recovering from an appendicitis operation. Miss Mason is occupying the same room in the hospital Miss Dana had when she was operated on several months ago and has the same doctor and nurse.

Frank Borzage, director for Arthur H. Jacobs who releases through First National, ten years ago was a leading man for Thomas H. Ince. Chester Lyons was a cameraman there. Borzage, recognizing his exceptional worth, remembered, and several years ago when he became a director, secured Lyons as his own cameraman. He is to photograph his next production also, which will be commenced in a few days at the United Studios.

Leslie Austen, who appears nightly before the public in "The Wasp," is putting in his spare time acting before the camera

E. H. Griffith, who returned last week from Canada, is now filming the interiors for Cosmopolitan's feature "Unseeing Eyes," which was tentatively titled "Snowblind."

Daniel Carson Goodman, who has a nack for original titles, has tentatively named his forthcoming production "You Get What You Give.'"

Jane Thomas will play the dutiful daughter immediately upon the completion of "The Exciters," and will take a hurried trip to Chicago to visit her mother before starting work on her next special.

Virginia Pearson, absent from the screen for three years while headlining in vaudeville, returns to the films in a leading part in Frank Borzage's next production for First National release.

Arthur H. Jacobs and his director, Frank Borzage, hied themselves away to the high Sierras to fish for trout between pictures. Ever since he has been in pictures Borzage has made such a retreat when time permits.

Melville Burke, who is at present directing a stock company in Cincinnati, is working on a plan whereby he intends to make a motion picture with the stock players as actors. If this venture is successful, it will be the first time a thing of this sort has been done.

William Collier, Jr., who has just been engaged by wire by Arthur H. Jacobs, is preparing to migrate from New York to Hollywood, where he is to play a leading role in the next Frank Borzage production which is to be released through First National.

Gertrude Astor has returned to Los Angeles following the completion of her work as one of the principal players in Alice Brady's production of "The Ne'er Do Well" in New York and she is now appearing in the John M. Stahl production of "The Wanters."

Monte Blue and Irene Rich will be co-starred in the Warner Brothers' picturization of Kathleen Norris' novel, "Lucretia Lombard." It will be made by Harry Rapf, the scenario having been completed by Sada Cowan.

Lloyd Hamilton is wintering in New York this spring.

Mae Murray has departed for New York for a month's stay. Upon her return to Hollywood she will start work on "Conquest," her next production for Metro, which Robert Z. Leonard will direct.

Carry Odell, character actor of note and former Mack Sennett comedy star, has finished his interpretation of "Spike Louis" in the new Richard Thomas production, "Scarlet Shadows," which is being made at the Hollywood studios.

John Henry, scion of a wealthy Boston family who recently wended his footsteps Hollywoodway to seek fame in motion pictures, has just completed work in Joseph Henaberry's production of "A Gentleman of Leisure" at the Lasky studios.

Fat Carr has replaced Harry Myers in the role of the chauffeur in the Warner Brothers picturization of George M. Cohan's play, "Little Johnny Jones," featuring Johnny Hines. Mr. Myers will be co-starred in one of the new series of pictures to be made by the Warners this season.

Bert Woodruff, one of the stars of "Children of Dust," Frank Borzage's current First National picture, started the first theater in Redondo, California, about seventeen years ago. It was in an abandoned railway station and was made light-proof with cheap calico. It rained, but the audience remained, putting up their umbrellas for protection.

Little Philippe deLacy, adopted French orphan and clever child actor, has completed an important child part in Mary Pickford's latest picture, "The Street Singer," and has been signed for one of the principal supporting roles in "Why Do We Live?" a picture exposing the evils of capital punishment, which is being made at the Cosmosart studios.

Dulcie Cooper, who has gained an enviable reputation the past year as an ingenue with such stars as Clara Kimball Young in "What No Man Knows"; with Tom Mix in "Do and Dare"; "The Desert Blossom" with William Russell"; "Hands of Nara" with Lowell Sherman; and "Live and Let Live," a Christie Cabanne Production, has been engaged to play the ingenue leads at the Broadway Strand Theatre, San Diego.

Miss Cooper has had several years on the speaking stage, having played a season with Virginia Brissac in San Francisco.

"Held to Answer," a gripping story of today by Peter Clarke MacFarlane, will be the second of the new series of Metro's all-star specials.

Dorothy Revier, former star of the legitimate stage, is making her initial bow in motion pictures as leading woman in the new James E. Bowen production, "The Supreme Test," being made at Cosmosart.

After experiencing some of the coldest days of the coldest spring New York City has suffered in many years, Jack White, producer-director of Educational-Mermaid Comedies, is back in the sunshine of Southern California.

"Broken Hearts of Broadway," a story dealing with the bright lights of New York, is being produced for the screen by Irving Cummings at the Hollywood studios. The leading male role in the picture is being portrayed by Johnnie Walker, popular actor, who has often been referred to as "the typical American boy of the screen." As soon as he completed his work in this picture Walker will resume production of his own series of pictures at the Robertson-Cole studios.

Creighton Hale, debonair leading man, is the first player to be signed by Victor Seastrom for one of the principal roles in his forthcoming production, "The Master Man," which is to enter filming processes at the Goldwyn studios on June 4th. Mr Hale recently completed his portrayal of "Little Billee' in the Richard Walton Tully production of "Tirlby" folowing his work as co-star in "Just Suppose," the popular stage play, which was presented at the Mason Opera House in Los Angeles a few weeks ago.

Coy Watson, Jr., ten-year old film starlet, who has recently finished an important part in the latest Edgar Lewis production of "The Right of the Strongest," was taken to a revival meeting the other night by his mother. A gospel role was being sung to the tune of "Old Black Joe" as the new arrivals seated themselves. The soloist started to sing the chorus when to the surprise of all present Coy sang out loudly, "I'm coming—I'm coming—," apparently unaware of the fact that only he and the soloist were singing. His mother quickly touch his arm, whispering that the song was a religious song and a solo at that. "Ah, go on, mother!" exclaimed the youngster, "You can't fool me That's 'Old Black Joe.' "

Once upon a time, a man grew interested in a glowing film title, and when he saw the film, it really lived up to the press agentric promise. The surprise killed him.

Tyrone Power said yesterday that he would leave for the coast shortly to assume his role in "The Day of Faith."

Sidney Olcott is directing George Arliss in "Green Goodess," for Distinctive. Saul H. Harrison is assisting him.

Mary Roberts Rhinehart is here to confer with Wagenhals and Kamper on her new play "The Breaking Point."

Famous Players gained a point in its court battle with Valentino when New York's Supreme Court Justice O'Malley ruled that certain defences interposed by the "Sheik," should be stricken out. This allows said "Schreek" to file an amended answer.

Marjorie Rambeau apparently attempted to make a secret getaway from this country on the "Homeric," last Saturday. Her name was not among those present and the night before, her home, denied her departure. But the sleuth reporters cornered her. Still she would not talk. "Just leaving," she said. Guess she's tired. She left for London.

Douglar Fairbanks, Jr., arrived in New York, May 8th, on the Majestic. His mother, Mrs. James Evans, accompanied him. Young Douglas will go to Hollywood to follow in his father's footsteps as an actor.

Chas. Reed Jones, once publicity man for many of the beaux monde of Hollywood, is now manager for W. E. A. F., which means New York City's big radio station.

If Thomas Meighan were as shy as his brother William J., he would not be a great movie star. William J., who lives in Washington, D. C., has been photographed only twice during his life. Yesterday the photographers called on Meighan, attempting to take his picture, but failed. William is in the automobile business and is single, and girls, he is just as, if not handsomer, than his brother. Address all mail to 4328 Seventh street North West.

MELODIC TECHNIQUE

teristics and the period—they are also fitting backgrounds for the people that pass through them and the action that transpires in them. The straight lines and excessive orderliness of the playroom of the Crown Prince (played by Jackie) bespeak the excessive zeal with which his daily life is ordered. Somber Gothic tones in the bedroom of the king (played by Robert Brower) are a fitting background for the grim warrior who is living in his last months on earth. Louis Quinze fittings decorate the boudoir of the Countess Olga Loschek (Rosemary Theby) appropriately, for the intrigue and plots hatched there.

"Long Live the King" was adapted by Eve Unsell from Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel of the same name. Jackie Coogan's supporting cast includes Rosemary Theby, Ruth Renick, Vera Lewis, Alan Hale, Alan Forrest, Walt Whitman, Robert Brower and Don Franklin.

Mary Philbin, beautiful actress of "Merry-Go-Round," and who is also an accomplished musician, is adding horsemanship to her list of gifts. She begged for a role with Jack Hoxie at Universal City to learn Western plays, and now is taking lessons in trick riding. "I want to learn every angle of pictureplay acting," is her explanation.

Georges Rizard, who is photographing "The Eagle's Feather" for Metro, is one cameraman who has never been known to wear the traditional reversed cap while filming a picture. He invariably wears a soft hat and is often mistaken by visitors for the leading man.

come the stupenduous task of editing and cutting.

Edmund Mortimer, director of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "The Road Through the Dark," "The Hush Hour" and "The County Fair," all outstanding box office successes, has added another attractive production to the noteworthy list.

"Thicker Than Water," the screen version of Margaret Bryant's "Richard," in which Herbert Rawlinson starred under Mortimer's direction, has been completed and in roughly edited form looks like a picture of which any director might be proud. Charles Kenyon adapted the novel to the screen form and such well known players as David Torrence, Lionel Belmore, Esther Ralston, Mike Donlin and Alfred Fisher handled the principal supporting roles. The atmosphere switches from the thrilling scenes of underworld spots in America to the quiet location of an old estate in England.

Production has been started at Universal City on a Gladys Walton starring vehicle that promises to be one of the most interesting of her career.

The story is weird and different from anything that Miss Walton has ever done. Instead of being a flapper heroine, she is a woman with two natures, a dual soul-one-half evil and one half good. The drama of the story is intensified by the fact that there are only four characters of importance—the woman, her Chinese servant woman, her sweetheart and a doctor whose evil influence over her is the cause of her lightening transformations from good to bad.

The Chinese servant woman will be played by Etta Lee and the doctor by John Sainpolis. The young lover will be played by Malcolm McGregor, the promising young "find" that Rex Ingram brought to the screen.

Gelette Burgess wrote the story as a novel and Hugh Hoffman wrote the continuity. Herbert Blache, whose recent directorial achievements include "Nobody's Bride" and "Fools and Riches," starring Herbert Rawlinson will guide the production.

"Legally Born" will be the title of Charles Furthmann's sequel to "Legally Dead," recently completed at Universal City with Milton Sills in the title role. It is a story of a man brought back to life by adrenalin after being legally proclaimed dead. The sequel tells his legal difficulties as an officially "dead" person, and how he overcomes them.

Getting a double for Virginia Valli at a younger age was the rather difficult task achieved by Hobart Henley in "A Lady of Quality," filmed at Universal City. Little Peggy Cartwright depicts her at the age of six and the likeness between the two is striking.

William Watson has started to work on a new comedy for Walter Ford, the English comedian, at Universal City. Gladys McConnell plays the leading feminine role.

"Sawdust," Jack Conway's new picture starring Gladys Walton, has proved useful to Edward Sedgwick, who directed Hoot Gibson in "Out of Luck." Sedgwick used Conway's circus tent for a county fair background in one of his village scenes in the navy play.

Jack Dillon has completed the filming of "A Self Made Wife," with Ethel Grey Terry and other famous players at Universal City. The film is now in the hands of the cutting department.

DO YOU KNOW THAT—

Noah and Wallace Beery are brothers?

Lucy Beaumont, one of the screen's best known delineators of mother roles, played the part of Mrs. Wiggs in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" several years ago on the legitimate stage?

Alberta Vaughn, who has recently been placed under contract by Mack Sennett, is a sister of Ada Mae Vaughn, leading woman for Charles Ray in his new picture, "The Courtship of Miles Standish?"

Creighton Hale and Alan Hale are not related to each other?

Garry Odell, character actor of note and former Mack Sennett comedy star, is a nephew of John Fleming Wilson, the famous author?

Gloria Hope in private life is Mrs. Lloyd Hughes, wife of the debonair leading man of the screen?

David and Ernest Torrence are brothers?

Leatrice Joy is married to Jack Gilbert, William Fox star?

Peggy Brown, who plays opposite William Desmond in "McGuire of the Mounted," was formerly a Ziegfeld Follies' dancer?

EXPERT CITES SOME HAIR HISTORY

Dr. Rudolph Martin, of Boston, one of America's leading specialists in the care and arrangement of the coiffure, has become greatly interested in the style of hairdressing recently brought to this country by Andree Lafayette, the girl who is portraying the title role in Richard Walton Tully's screen production of "Trilby."

"Attractive arrangement and adornment of milady's hair," he says, "is a custom dating back to the early Egyptians, and one which will undoubtedly go in to infinity. Even the casual observer of hair styles will note that certain arrangements reappear from time to time, again being pronounced the mode of the day.

"The bobbed hair, which has just ended one of its periodical terms of favor, was originally adopted by the Egyptians, and apparently was as much in vogue at that early date as it has been recently.

"The desire to dress the hair in a new and becoming fashion has led many to adopt the latest, known as the "Trilby Bang," popularized by Andree Lafayette, the Parisian motion picture actress, now playing in Richard Walton Tully's production of "Trilby," for First National. Her introduction of this style will undoubtedly be the forerunner of a period of favor for this method of arrangement. It will be remembered that bobbed hair was popularized to a great extent by Mrs. Vernon Castle. This and other instances serve to indicate that new styles often become popular through adoption by some prominent member of the social or theatrical world.

"The length of time such styles remain popular is usually governed by the number of women who can adopt them becomingly. The style which can be attractively taken up by the greatest number of women retains its popularity the longest."

Miss Lafayette rolls her golden locks under until they attain the ordinary length of bobbed hair, and when securely fastened with but two pins, the result gives all the appearance of bobbed hair. In fact, one nationally known photographer had been posing Miss Lafayette for an hour or two before he was astounded to discover that she really possessed long, luxuriant locks "of her very own."

FOREIGN STORIES TO PREDOMINATE IN THEATRES THE COMING YEAR

Photoplays with foreign stories will predominate in motion picture theatres the coming year.

Lillian Leighton, who offers one of her unique characterizations in "The Eternal Three"

A survey just completed by Marshall Neilan, prominent motion picture producer, involving a canvass of theatre managers as well as studio producing officials, shows that movie audiences throughout the country are keen for stories laid in foreign locales and that American producers are planning increased picturization of plots with foreign backgrounds to meet the situation.

An interesting angle to the situation as announced by Mr. Neilan is that despite the increased production of foreign stories, the trend of producers in Los Angeles is to make all pictures, regardless of locale, in Southern California rather than in the countries where the plots are laid.

As a result of the survey, Mr. Neilan announced yesterday, a policy of production which will involve the concentration exclusively upon foreign stories. It was this situation that prompted the producer to include a Mexican sequence in "The Eternal Three," an American drama recently completed at the Goldwyn studio. "The Rendezvous," his next production, is a Russian drama and this is to be followed by "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," an English story.

Verifying his contention, Mr. Neilan points out that the large majority of the super productions to come during the next months will offer foreign stories. This in a large measure, holds true of the smaller productions as well. Among the bigger film plays to come and which offer foreign locales are "Ben-Hur," Goldwyn's most ambitious film; Mary Pickford's story of Spain, "The Street Singer"; Douglas Fairbank's Arabian tale, "The Thief of Bagdad"; "In the Palace of the King," a story of Spain; "The Magic Skin," a French plot by Balzac; "The Spoilers," Alaska; "The Master of Man," England; "Six Days," England; "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," France; "Scaramouche," France; "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," France, and "The Ten Commandments," Palestine.

Mr. Neilan's survey shows that nearly 40 per cent of the foreign stories to be produced within the next few months are laid in France, 30 per cent in England and 15 per cent in Spain. The percentage of stories laid in other countries is smaller.

Editorial Views of the Gossip and News

The photoplay art is busy growing and it would be a fine thing if some of the ultra-mercenary and totally inartistic producers got busy going!

It's a great world of make-believe. "Kidding" the other fellow is perhaps the most popular indoor sport extant at present. Of course "kidding" oneself is not obsolete yet, either.

Life is a riddle to only those who are riddles themselves. Riddle any of them with searching inquiry and you'll find that when they use the word "life" they mean themselves personally.

Some eastern firm is announcing a picture entitled "Mules of Musherton." Sounds like one with a kick in it or else, perchance, there'll be some mighty "kicks" from those called upon to see it.

It would seem utterly foolish to give a lot of advice when everybody knows the donor of same needs a lot of it himself. However, if some people couldn't give advice, they'd be deprived of ever giving away anything.

Jimmy Aubrey announces he will not desert the two-reel comedy. Evidently Jimmie believes someone has got to stay with the ship. Most all the other comedy stars have stepped forward into the full-length field, you know.

Now, according to despatches from the east, there are fears of a shortage in labor. Well, anyway, we'd rather see a shortage in workers than a shortage in work. Give 'em time and they can build many a Rome over and over again.

If it is true that Henry Ford has a good chance to be elected president of the United States, there is reason to start trembling because it will be the first time in the history of the nation that the White House has housed a flivver king. Somehow anyone having anything to do with flivvers of any variety simply does not belong in that White House.

If Hollywood got one-half of the fine new theatres promised from week to week, it would be the most theatre-infested city in the world within a few weeks. Meanwhile it does need several first-class theatres very much and much prosperity awaits the business groups wise enough to build them. Also meanwhile, many are tiring of so much promise and so little performance.

Very seldom do we complain about anything, but there is one thing we cannot overlook supinely or otherwise and that is, the smart bird who is spending much of his time running around and telling everybody about what he intends doing to (not for, mind you) somebody else. We consider the man a perfect jackass if he doesn't know enough not to brag about what he is going to do even if the thing he's bragging about is good and worthy. Unfortunately, there has been too much of this sort of thing within Filmland lately.

Judging from the speed with which they are building new studios and re-modeling old ones, there's going to be a place to make any and all pictures ere long. However, incidentally, "any and all pictures" cannot possibly be what the public wants. Indeed, it's just as patent as patent medicines are in a drug store that what the public craves year in and year out is, less of a series and more single, good pictures, which should not be construed to mean anything singular at all since it must be admitted we are living in an age of intensified civilization.

Sometimes it so happens that a truly great genius is left out in the cold of distress only because he lacks business acumen enough to "sell himself" to the world. Just think of what would happen if a successful business man was furnished by Fate for each great genius! It would be a world of far greater happiness than it is today, because, primarily, a genius contributes prodigiously to the joys of living in general. And, the queerest part of it is, most of us know of a genius in oblivion to whom we seem utterly incapable of giving any aid whatsoever. 'Tis something more to think about.

It begins to look as if we are going to have a right merry war between big and powerful factors within the film industry. It is understood one very potential multi-millionaire has announced his intention of "breaking" the biggest producing organization now in the field and meanwhile the United States government is taking a hand in affairs by stirring up some questions relative to breaking trust laws. Contrary to first impressions, the prospects for a little conflict between the big leaders are most encouraging since they encourage independent production, which, after all, is the real life blood of the business. If you have been a keen observer, you have, of course, noticed that whenever the independents were kept hors de combat by financial difficulties and a gutted market, there has been a panic, while, on the other hand, when they have been left free to follow their plans, prosperity has blessed all. Inevitably if only a few giants can work with profit, the legions of lesser lights must suffer, and, if the latter do not happen to be called upon to suffer, no one suffers. Verily, the little fellow must be unrestrained to vie with the big fellow or else there shall be chaos in a world struggling for equality such as this! Let the big boy weigh this incontrovertible fact, too.

Motion pictures, great as is their present, are nearly all in the future.
Their yesterdays are few and almost insignificant, as compared with their all powerful tomorrows.

Letting The King Live at $600,000 Per

Jackie Coogan's first production under his Metro contract, the picturization of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Long Live the King," will undoubtedly be the biggest film of his career to date, surpassing all his earlier vehicles from every point of view. The slogan of the year, "bigger and better pictures," has been kept in mind by Jack Coogan, senior, who is supervising every detail of Jackie's films, and he interprets it to mean not only "bigger," but really "better"—in gorgeous but not extravagant mounting, dramatic direction and capable characterization.

Careful estimates set the cost of production for "Long Live the King" at $600,000. And every cent of expenditure has been checked and double-checked by Coogan, his director Victor Schertzinger, his studio manager E. A. Biby, his art director J. J. Hughes, his costumer Walter Israel, his cinematographers Frank Good and Robert Martin and the other members of his production staff.

One innovation which is keeping down the cost of production while it simultaneously aids the continuity of filming is the erection of the interior sets for "Long Live the King" in groups as they actually would appear in a house and according to plot sequence. Thus continuous action is made possible without the annoying and expensive processes of moving lights and players, changing shooting angles, or keeping sets standing longer than necessary.

The interior of the Opera House was built all together and will show the ground-floor foyer, the upper foyer, and the connecting stairs, the royal box and several corridors. Similarly, the bedchamber of the old king, played by Robert Brower, has been built in conjunction with the long stone corridor leading to it and the great drawing room adjacent.

There are 20 groups of sets showing interiors; the most important of these and their construction cost are the opera house, $23,000; the King's bedchamber group, $38,000; the Crown Prince's bedchamber, $15,000; the boudoir of the Countess Olga Loschek (Rosemary Theby) $11,000; the Prince's schoolroom, $16,000; the boudoir of the Archduchess Annunciata (Vera Lewis) and the Princess Hedwig (Ruth Renick) $14,000; the huge throne room, $42,000. Then there is the group of interiors representing the Inn, consisting of entrance hall, Bobby's (Don Franklin) apartment, Black Humbert's (Sam Appel) chamber, the lodging of Old Adelbert (Monti Collins), and the secret meeting place of the revolutionary committee of ten—all of which are being erected together at a cost of $23,000.

Much of the important action of the picture occurs in and around the square of the City of Lavonia; this is now being constructed to cover over 100,000 square feet of ground. It shows the intersection of two streets, lined with thirty-six buildings besides the castle, the Inn, the Cathedral, and the Opera House. A viaduct passes through the square, surmounted by a bridge, fountains play before the Opera House and the Cathedral, and a canal cuts the square twice in the course of its 250 feet of length.

The Opera House is modeled after the one in Dresden, the palace is an exact replica of the Castle of Neuschwanstein in Bulgaria, and the Cathedral combines the characteristic attributes of the mediaeval Gothic structures. The palace will occupy almost a quarter of a million square feet of ground, and is being built up to a height of seventy feet from the ground, with spires twenty feet still higher. Its cost will exceed $50,000. The Cathedral is elevated from the center of a square over a ramp, or up hill street, which is being constructed, leading to thirty feet above level. Upon this hill the Cathedral will rise to a height of 60 feet, with spires that much higher again. The less important houses that line the square are being erected up to heights varying from 45 to 80 feet. In addition to the cost of the four important buildings, the square set will involve an expenditure of almost $60,000.

Jackie Coogan as he appeared in "Oliver Twist."

One of the biggest and most colorful scenes in "Long Live the King" is the carnival scene in the square, for which over 2,000 extras will be employed, most of them clad in typical Carnival costumes, while others wear the picturesque garb of the Middle European peasants. Walter Israel and his assistant, Larry Fisher, who are handling the costumes, have been rounding them up by telegraph from New York, Chicago, New Orleans, Minneapolis, and San Francisco. Two special wardrobe buildings are being constructed for the extras who will play in these scenes, in addition to Metro's present large dressing-room space. Sixty-five seamstresses are working day and night to complete these costumes and to fit them to the players. Four barges, each 20 feet long and 12 feet wide, will be drawn through the canal in the Carnival scene, in addition to numberless small boats that will ply over its waters. Fifty bags of confetti, 25 bags of paper streamers, 2000 masks—these are just part of the order of props for the Carnival scene, which promises to outdo all similar scenes ever filmed. Other exteriors include, the secret stair from the castle, the underground passage and escape, the roof of the palace, the "gate of the moon," the borderline frontier of Lavonia, and the Shrine of Saint Cecelia, to which the Crown Prince makes a pilgrimage for his grandfather's recovery.

Production is nearing an end on "The Sky Line of Spruce," Edison Marshall's story in which William Desmond is being starred under Robert Hill's direction. The first part of the filming was done at Feather River, where remarkable scenic effects were achieved. Ten days have been spent on interiors and completion of the feature is in sight.

Virginia Browne Faire, William Welsh, Al. Hart, Fred Kohler and other popular players support Desmond.

Flashes from Frisco

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 29.—The Stereoscopic Productions will begin work on their next picture the latter part of this week at the Pacific Studios at San Mateo. The title of the picture will be "The Poppy Girl." Walter W. Bell will direct, with Joseph Gonyea as assistant director. Patrica Palmer and Ranger Bill Miller will co-star.

"Her Accidental Husband," first production of the Belasco Productions, is the feature picture at the California Theatre this week, and is meeting with a very warm reception from large audiences at all performances. Not only is it a mighty good picture, but it was made by a local organization, and part of the scenes were shot in our own Palace Hotel, although the larger part of the picture was made in the South.

Joe Brandt, Harry Cohn and Mrs. Phyllis Usban, all of the picture world, were among last week's guests at the Palace Hotel.

The film of "Youth Triumphant," recently made at the Hollywood Studios by the Fisher Pictures Corporation of this city, now being edited, will be brought to this city about June 1st, and pre-viewed before the stockholders of the organization, after which Victor Fisher, head of the company, and David Chaplin, business manager, will leave for New York with the film to arrange a release.

Abraham Lehr, general manager of Goldwyn, spent the week-end in San Francisco looking over the progress of the filming of Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed."

Thomas Ince was a guest at the St. Francis for several days the early part of last week.

Twenty-eight members of the cast and staff of the company now engaged in the making of "The Rendevous" for Goldwyn under the direction of Marshall Neilan, arrived in San Francisco by boat last Monday. They shot some scenes on the United States Army Docks, using real soldiers, and also some thirty or forty local extra people in addition to the company. They returned to Los Angeles also by sea, working on the boat enroute both ways.

Robert Warwick, beloved of the patrons of the silversheet, but at present devoting his time to the spoken drama, has closed his Oakland season.

A dinner, perfect in every detail, and a private showing of "Brass," lately filmed by Warner Brothers, was given last Tuesday night by George A. Oppenheimer, Inc., Film Exchange to the "trade," and a few other guests. Some two hundred of the exhibitors of Northern California were present. At the honor table, besides the author, Charles G. Norris, and his wife, Kathleen Norris, were Irene Rich and Monte Blue, who play the leading roles in the picture, and H. M. Warner, senior member of Warner Brothers, and Harry Raph, actual producer of the picture. "Brass" is the attraction at the Granada Theatre this week, and is very interesting to local audiences, partly because it is a story of San Francisco itself.

N. Dragomanovich, head of the West Coast Films, returned to San Francisco last Saturday after a ten days' stay in Los Angeles on business for the organization.

Eric Von Stroheim last week shot the wedding sequence in the making of "Greed" from Frank Norris' great American classic, "McTeague." It was especially interesting as for the first time in the making of the picture practically all the principals, with the exception of Ceasare Gravini, were working at once. Taken all together they form the most remarkable assortment of types ever filmed in one picture, everything from the good-natured bulk of Gibson Gowland, as "McTeague" to Zasu Pitts' appealing charm, and from huge Hughie Mack to little Chester Conklin, who by the way, is giving one of the outstanding performances of the picture. Last Thursday had the highest record of results, up-to-date, with thirty script scenes, and a number of added ones shot between nine a. m. and two the next morning.

For the first time in the history of the New York stage, two companies playing the same attraction under the same management are being presented in this city. The production is "Blossom Time," and plays on the same street in theatres directly opposite each other, namely the Shubert and the Fourty-fourth Street theatres. One of the companies recently concluded a season of 29 weeks in Philadelphia, establishing a record for that city. One of these companies ran at the Century Theatre, New York, for five-hundred and thirty consecutive performances, establishing a record for operettas here.

Strongheart, the canine film star, is the proud father of four children.

We hear that Douglas Fairbanks has changed his mind about Douglas, Jr. entering the movies. Now Doug states he will help the kid along all that he possibly can. Doug made a wise decision, we think. The movies are not as bad as some other callings.

Chas. A. Bird, recently of the Fox West Coast studios, wishes it known that he is not going with Cosmopolitan or any other firm, as Dame Rumor insists. Mr. Bird has retired and will spend his summer days seeing California in his new Locomobile.

Hope Hampton is on her way to the coast to begin work on the screen version of David Belasco's great stage success "The Gold Diggers."

Al Lichman and J. G. Bachman have purchased from David Belasco the screen rights to "The Boomerang," a Winchel Smith and Victor Mapes stage success.

Flo Ziegfield and Mrs. Jack Pickford (Marilyn Miller) are now the best of pals, according to reports from Milwaukee, where "Sally" terminated its season last Saturday. The whole row was about Marilyn marrying Jack. It appears that Ziegfield's trip to Milwaukee was so timed, that Jack was nowhere in the vicinity, so now instead of Mrs. Pickford co-starring with her handsome husband, as per rumor, she is to sign another contract with "Ziggy" for a new fall production, in which she will be starred.

Daniel Frohman was re-elected president of the Actors' Fund of America at its 42nd annual meeting this week at the Hudson Theatre. The total receipts for the year just completed, from memberships, bequests and benefits were $157,803.50. The fund disbursed to charity was $103,769.26.

George Fitzmaurice sails today to discuss with Sir Hall Caine plans for the filming of "The Eternal City," the first production of the new Samuel Goldwyn Corporation, for distribution through First National. The director will proceed to Rome, where he will be joined by Lionel Barrymore, Barbara LaMarr, Richard Bennett, Bert Lytell and Montague Love. Mr. Goldwyn gave a farewell dinner to Mr. Fitzmaurice at the Ritz Carlton.

A body of New York actors has applied to the Pennyslvania Railroad for a lease on the roof of the big station on Seventh Avenue, considering it an ideal place on which to lay out a nine-hole golf course. The railroad will think it over.

Benjamin Knobel, owner of a motion picture theatre in Bronx, is having it out in the courts with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He thinks the motion picture "The Affairs of Anatol" a bad picture and not worth the.....$1,750 which he paid for it. The people of the Bronx were not interested in it and he lost considerable money playing it. Next Knobel told that he objected to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation sending "clockers" to his theatre to ascertain how many persons entered his theatre.

Western Movie Due to Stage Come-Back

"The western photodrama is being re-discovered.

"Discarded by motion picture producers as being too crude and inartistic to please the present-day public, the famous old wild west movie has fallen into disrepute."

This was the statement this week of Noah Beery, who has just signed a three-year contract to play in Paramount pictures, and who says that in his opinion the re-birth of these colorful dramas of the great outdoors is to become an epoch in the history of motion pictures.

"Modern camera technique and better screen stories and direction have brought the western picture on a par with the best made screen dramas of city life, as far as artistic and dramatic qualities are concerned," he added. "Modern producers are grasping this opportunity and are making western pictures so picturesque, quaint and human that they can no longer be compared with the old 'wild and wooly" cattle ranch movies."

Mr. Beery himself is an example of one of the factors in the making of this new type of screen story—actors of wide stage and and screen experience. After a successful career upon the stage, he has added to his experience ten years work in motion pictures. Mr. Beery has played character roles in many notable pictures and in bringing this type of actor into this new type of western pictures to replace the old time rowdy cowboy, western photodramas are being revived in an entirely new light.

Mr. Beery is a lover of the out-of-doors and is as good a horseman as a ranch bred cowpuncher. In the filming of the Paramount picture "To the Last Man," in which Mr. Beery is being featured, a cast of some of the best known players in Hollywood has been chosen and Victor Fleming, the director, is concentrating his effort on making this picture authentic and picturesque rather than a meaningless jumble of fast action. Besides Mr. Beery, Richard Dix, Lois Wilson, Robert Edeson and Frank Campeau are being featured. It is a Zane Grey production adapted from this noted author's original story of the Pleasant Valley War. The identical sites in the Tonto Basin, Arizona, where the battles of this frontiersmen's feud were fought, are being used as a background for the picture.

Mr. Beery took with him on location, his saddle horse "Bess" which won first prize at the recent horse show held in Los Angeles.

"When 'To the Last Man' is exhibited," said Mr. Beery, "I feel certain that it will establish a precedent in the production of motion pictures and will elevate the powerful stories of the cattle country to their legitimate place beside the screen's greatest achievements."

And Now That Bill Hart is Vindicated-----

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, this week added his voice to the chorus of congratulation which William S. Hart, famous film actor, has received all over the world upon the final clearing of his name from the absurd charges brought against him by Elizabeth MacCauley. hTe fact that Mr. Lasky has persistently refused to credit the statements against Mr. Hart lends force to his expression of satisfaction when the slanderous nature of the attacks was finally proved.

Mr. Lasky said, "Following Mr. Hart's retirement, which the whole photoplay loving world hoped was only temporary, we had arrived at a point where we expected to be able to announce his return to the screen. Then this trouble arose. I was firmly convinced of Mr. Hart's integrity and of the public's ability to reach just conclusions. Knowing him innocent, I repeatedly urged him to appear once more as a star in Paramount Pictures. Mr. Hart came to see me several times. I knew no one believed the charges against him and strove to convince him that this was so. But Mr. Hart, splendid man that he is and super-sensitive, refused to return to the screen until there remained no shadow of doubt as to his innocence in the mind of a single person in the whole world. He possessed strong convictions upon the necessity for keeping faith with the public. He resolutely refused to return to the screen unless he could share his old time sense of comradeship with those he worked to entertain.

"Mr. Hart said to me, 'I will never accept a dollar of the public's money until I have convinced them that I am worthy to receive it. I want to be able to look out from the screen and meet every man, woman and child eye to eye. Until then I will remain outside the profession I love and to which I might have returned if it had not been for this terrible accusation.'

"Mr. Hart faced me across his desk. He looked at me with the eyes which have carried conviction to hundreds of thousands who have returned their gaze from the

"—AND THE CAT CAME BACK!"

Members of the Ben Wilson company, now engaged in the final shooting of "Mine to Keep," smile as they pass Ashton Dearholt, production manager and casting director for the studio.

And Dearholt blushes as he returns the smile.

Last year the production manager used a beautiful pussy cat in one of Ben Wilson's pictures. The kitty scored personal honors for the manner in which she portrayed her role.

In the current Wilson picture, Dearholt was once more obliged to cast a feline "actress" for a part. None other than his friend of yore would do.

After a fruitless search for ten days, he was forced to accept the services of several other pussy cats. The subsitutes proved to be "boneheads."

Production was being held up. The cat episode could not, under any circumstances, be omitted. Dearholt—and other members, were frantic.

E. R. Hickson, art director, had repeatedly suggested to Dearholt that a possible "double" might be secured at the animal casting agency, but to no avail. Dearholt bent further efforts in disclosing the whereabouts of his "lost friend."

Yesterday Hickson called an agency—an actress kitty was rushed to the studio.

The "double" proved to be Dearholt's original!

COSMOSART CHANGES HANDS

According to well-founded reports, Charles Ray has purchased the Cosmosart Studios and will move his Mayflower "set" onto the lake as a permanent ornament.

Adding to Stellar Possessions, a Tendency of the Times

George Larkin in dancing regalia.

The tendency to expand is becoming really rampant in the motion picture producing field. Still another example of the forward movement is that furnished in the case of Charles R. Seeling, one of the independent producers who has been minding his own knitting so assiduously for the last two years that today he looms as a bright possibility to develop into a power to consider seriously from all angles. Now after making a success of two series of western feature productions starring "Big Boy" Williams, he is branching out with a second unit at the head of which will be none other than George Larkin, one of the brightest prospects on the film horizon at present.

The story selected for the initial Larkin starring vehicle is an original concerning the early Spanish days in Southern California, the working title of which is "The Gringo" and in which Mr. Larkin will be given ample opportunity to display his dramatic ability as well as his cleverness as a dancer. Actual filming on this feature will be started at the Horsley Studios next week and contracts have been signed for the release of this new series through the Aywon Film Corporation of New York.

Ollie Kirby, who shared in Mr. Larkin's triumphs on his recent tour of the Orpheum vaudeville circuit as his dancing partner, will appear in unusual dance scenes with him in this picture and will play an important part in the story.

Mr. Larkin is already well established as a screen star, he having recently completed a series of special productions among which were "Saved by Radio" and "The Lurking Peril," in which he starred to a distinct advantage.

Mr. Seeling has contracted to make six Larkin features and he will personally direct them all. Simultaneously he will pilot the "Big Boy" Williams series, starting another big western feature with this star within the next fortnight. This is the second annual series of Williams pictures Mr. Seeling has made and he has been unusually successful as one of the youngest producers in the independent field.

OPPORTUNITY
By Eric Mayne

Opportunity is an elusive and indefinable something inseparable from our lives.

That we never had an opportunity is a constant apology for our failures.

That we have had unique opportunities is the assertion of our friends in discouragement of our successes.

Some are born with opportunities—some make opportunities, and some have opportunities thrust upon them.

We seldom admit our failure to grasp an opportunity.

We must watch our opportunity as keenly as we watch our step, for the success of our step depends largely on the use we make of our opportunity .

We must seize opportunity by the forelock, because it is bald behind.

While we are regretting the opportunities

PARAMOUNT NEWS

A flurry of activity now exists in the cutting rooms of the Famous Players-Lasky West Coast studio. Three pictures are at the last stages of completion. The first named three are James Cruze's production of "Hollywood," Sam Wood's production of "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" with Gloria Swanson starring and Pola Negri's second starring vehicle in America, "The Cheat," a George Fitzmaurice production with Jack Holt and Charles deRoche. The three pictures nearing the finish mark are "Fair Week," Walter Hier's starring picture for Paramount; Charles Maigne's "The Silent Partner," which features Leatrice Joy and Owen Moore; and "Salomy Jane," the George Melford production featuring Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett and Maurice Flynn.

Monday, June 4th, has been set as the starting for Pola Negri's next starring vehicle for Paramount. It is to be "The Spanish Dancer," a Herbert Brenon production adapted by June Mathis and Beulah Marie Dix from the book "Don Caesar de Bazan."

Miss Negri will return this week from Del Monte, California, where she has been resting between pictures. She will be fitted for a number of wonderful gowns which she will wear in her coming vehicle. The cast is now being chosen and will be given out in the near future, according to an announcement from the Famous Players-Lasky studio. Ralph Block is to be production editor.

Tonto Basin, Arizona, is being treated to a real touch of modernism—the first in its lengthy and uninteresting history. That bleak spot, two hundred miles from civilization, is the scene of exciting sequences now being taken by Director Fleming for the Zane Grey production for Paramount, "To the Last Man," featuring Richard Dix, Lois

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1923

NO DANGER OF SLUMP, THEY AGREE

"There will be no let-up in motion picture production during the coming winter season."

This is the almost unanimous opinion of film chiefs in Hollywood, following persistent rumors that have been going the rounds to the effect that production activity at the different studios will be curtailed within the next few months.

If anything, production will increase at this season rather than decrease, they say. Thus little credence is given the report that the studios will again lay off their men and take on an appearance similar to a year ago when most members of the profession were finding it quite difficult to get employment owing to the production slump.

If there are any actors, actresses or other followers of the motion picture art now unemployed in Hollywood it is surely not the fault of the producers, for practically every studio in filmland is filled to capacity. Never since pre-war days has there been evidenced the great era of prosperity that now prevails throughout the motion picture colony.

Particularly is it noticeable how many new faces have been recruited to the ranks of photoplayers. Since the studios hung out the "we need help" sign, men and women from virtually all walks of life have cast their lot in motion pictures. And yet, with this influx of new talent there still remains ample opportunity for additional players.

VIDOR WILL DIRECT HERGESHEIMER NOVEL

The film version of Joseph Hergesheimer's popular novel, "Wild Oranges," will be directed by King Vidor, according to an announcement made this week at the Goldwyn studios.

Mr. Vidor has completed cutting and editing the final scenes of "Three Wise Fools," his first production to be made for the Goldwyn company. He will immediately start preparations on the film version of the Hergesheimer novel.

Several producers bid for the film rights to "Wild Oranges." D. W. Griffith at one time owned the rights to the novel, and planned to film it in the original locale. The action of the story transpires in the wild orange groves that border the Georgia coast.

HIS "FOG" MAKES HIM POPULAR IN STUDIOS

Arthur L. Todd, cinematographer of the Maurice Tourneur Productions, is receiving requests from all over the world for instruction in the methods he used in making the remarkable London fog pictures in "The Brass Bottle," the latest Tourneur picture.

To all he is making the same reply, "It's a trick. You can't take pictures in a fog."

Todd has been loaned to four other producers by Mr. Tourneur since making "The Brass Bottle," making fog pictures for them with the same trick he used in the Tourneur production.

MARSHALL GETS A BIG ROLE IN "PONJOLA"

Tully Marshall, whose remarkable character reading in recent big productions has won enviable praise among motion picture critics and patrons, has been engaged by Sam E. Rork to play an important role in the next James Young Production for First National, which is to be "Ponjola," a screen version of Cynthia Stockley's famous story of South African life.

Marshall is to portray a semi-humorous part of a broken down European count who finds himself among the flotsam and jetsam of the Rhodesian gold fields, the locale where this popular Stockley story is laid.

The part calls for an unusual type of acting but it is felt that with Marshall playing this role, First National have the one man in all filmdom best suited to the character.

Few screen character men are as well known to picture patrons as is Marshall, who has been acting for the films since 1916, when he transferred his talent from the stage to the screen.

His first entrance into the profession was back in 1883 when he played his first part in "Saratoga," at the Winter Garden Theatre in San Francisco. He continues in legitimate until 1916 supporting such stars as Modjeska, E. R. Sothern, Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett and other celebrated Thespians.

His most recent notable parts were in "The Covered Wagon," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "The Talisman," "The Beautiful and Damned," "A Temporary Marriage," and "The Law of the Lawless."

EASTERN FINANCIER IS INTERESTED IN JACK

Jack Parker, clever child actor, who in looks and actions resembles Jackie Coogan probably the closest of any screen juvenile artist, will soon be heading his own motion picture company if the plans of a well-known eastern capitalist materialize. Young Parker has had an extensive training before the camera, having appeared in support of many of the screen's foremost stars, and his performance has been of such a brilliant nature as to bring him many re-engagements at the studios.

SCHOOL PROPHECY "COMES TRUE" THIS TIME

Whether it was the prophesy of her graduation class of the Minneapolis High School last year, or whether it was her personality and ability to look pretty and display exceptional talent before the camera, or whether it was simply Prince good-luck, that landed a movie contract for her, beautiful June Marlowe, 17-year-old Minnesota girl, knows not.

The important problem that is now solved is the landed picture contract. June would like to think it due to reason number one because with that reason are fond memories of school days all too quickly vanished.

When June Marlowe graduated from high school, the class prophesy was to the effect she some day would become a movie actress. This prophesy was made stronger with the news that her father, a prominent banker of Minneapolis, had decided to make Los Angeles his home.

On the Marlowes' arrival in Hollywood, June set forth in search of a job in motion pictures. Her studio visits included the Principal Pictures Corporation where she met Sol Lesser, president of the company. A few camera "tests" were made of the Minnesota beauty with the result that a contract was drawn up between Principal Pictures Corporation and Miss Marlowe covering a three year period.

The beauty will begin work at once, enacting an important role in the forthcoming production of Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man." Others will follow and in the meantime the wires are humming between cinema land and Minneapolis, imparting the glad tidings to dozens of anxiously awaiting friends and class mates.

TURKISH NOTABLE GIVES TURKISH PARTY

Gerjes Bey, a recent arrival in Hollywood, entertained a select company of friends this week in true Turkish fashion. He received his guests wearing his fez and with shoes removed according to true Turkish etiquette. It was requested that the guests curl up on cushions scattered about the floor and smoke the narghile (the pipe of peace), after that the host held his listeners spell-bound by graphic descriptions of intimate Turkish life details of the harems and the intricacies of Turkish politics.

Gerjes Bey is a writer well-known in his own country, and recently a contributor to various American magazines, and one of the most widely traveled men of the Orient. His uncle was Asis Pasha, Minister of War under the Sultan Abdul Hamid, and Gerjes Bey was a frequent visitor at the Sultan's palaces.

Among the guests who enjoyed Bey's hospitality were; Wm. Jenner, West Coast representative of the American Releasing Corporation, Mrs. Jenner and her daughter, Miss Tisdale, J. Stewart Woodhouse, author, Charles Dale, Gene Metcalf, the impersonator, Dr. Metcalf, Fred Caldwell, of Caldwell Productions, and Diane Pascale.

Genuine Turkish coffee as thick as mud, Paklava and other Turkish delicacies in the way of refreshments were the final touches which were served to transport the happy guests into a world as charming as it was strange.

NOTES

Peggy Browne, erstwhile Ziegfeld Follies' dancer, who is now a prominent member of the Hollywood film colony, has been engaged by Warner Brothers to play the leading feminine role in its forthcoming production of "The Gold Diggers," which Harry Beaumont is to direct. Actual filming of the picture is scheduled to start on June 4th.

Kate Lester in Russian Play

Kate Lester, of the white hair and stately bearing, has been cast as Conrad Nagel's mother in Marshall Neilan's photoplay of Russia—"The Rendezvous." Mr. Neilan delayed casting the part until he could secure Miss Lester's services, because he desired just such striking resemblance between mother and son as Miss Lester and Mr. Nagel bear each other.

BLACKWELL WILL FILM VAGABOND IN LONDON

LONDON, May 15.—The countless thousands of readers of that unforgetable epic of vagabondia, written with such strange and appealing beauty by William J. Locke—"The Beloved Vagabond"—will be pleased to know that before long they will be able to see this moving story and its fascinating characters visualized on the screen.

Carlyle Blackwell, the American film star, has just completed arrangements with the distinguished English novelist for a film faithfully dramatizing the story that has endeared Mr. Locke to readers the world over. Elaborate preparations are being made for this super-production, in which the novelist is taking great interest. The first scenes will be made in about a fortnight.

An impressive screen dramatization of the story has been prepared, which Mr. Blackwell declares fully preserves the beauty and idyllic spirit of the novel, and provides abundant material for the high type of film which the public has a right to expect when so widely popular a story is screened.

Berzelius Nibbidard Paragot, wayward artist and philosopher, a creature of erratic moods and astonishing vagaries, delightful vagabond, disciple of the poets, apostle of beauty and seeker after human truth, is one of the outstanding characters created in modern literature. It is a part ideally suited to the talent and personality of Mr. Blackwell, one of the most effective interpreters of picturesque roles among the screen artists of today.

"It has been my ambition for years to play Paragot," said Mr. Blackwell, "and I have never read a novel that appealed to me more than 'The Beloved Vagabond.' My great hope is that I shall be able to present this exquisite story on the screen as its beauty, dramatic power and incisive character-drawing should be expressed in the finest terms of screen art. I have had a long experience—this will be my 371st film—but I have never before undertaken anything so ambitious as this personal production of a literary masterpiece, and nothing I have ever attempted has filled me with so much artistic enthusiasm."

Mr. Blackwell has for some time been making active preparations for this film. He has selected with great care scenes in England and in France to be utilized in the production. The headquarters of London's artistic vagabondia in Covent Garden described in the novel, will be faithfully produced, as will those of the carefree bohemians in the Quartier Latin of Paris. There will also be ample opportunity for showing the beauty of the countryside of England and France.

B. E. Doxat-Pratt, who has a number of successful British films to his credit, will be associated with Mr. Blackwell in this production. The camera work will be in the charge of Mr. Walter Blakely. The Alliance Studio at St. Margaret's will be used.

Mr. Blackwell has arranged with Astra National for the distribution of "The Beloved Vagabond" in the United Kingdom.

CREIGHTON HALE GETS ROLE WITH SEASTROM

Announcement this week from the Goldwyn studios of the signing of Creighton Hale for the important role of Alick Gell in Victor Seastrom's production of "The Master of Man" carries more interest than the usual news of an actor's engagement.

Mr. Hale, who is British by birth, met Sir Hall Caine, creator of the character of Alick Gell, just once, not in his proper role as an actor, but as newspaper reporter.

Between his early engagements on the London stage, Mr. Hale did newspaper dramatic assignments. It happened that while he was playing on the Isle of Man, Sir Hall Caine's opinion on a literary question was urgently desired. The London papers sent men out, except the Daily Express, Creighton's old paper, which simply wired him to represent them at the meeting. So, in the guise of a reporter, Mr. Hale appeared before the great novelist, who took quite a fancy to the youngster, and asked him to stay after the others had been dismissed.

The screen adaptation of "The Master of Man" has been completed by Paul Bern, and the cast, as so far announced, includes Mae Busch, Joseph Schildkraut, Winter Hall and DeWitt C. Jennings.

Pierre Collings, who is now photographing "Alimony," under the direction of Jas. W. Horne, has just received word from The Academy of Arts in Berlin, that he has won one of the most coveted prizes awarded by that Academy, with one of his original creations with the camera lens. Besides being a student of photography, Collings is also well-read on the occult sciences.

Mal St. Clair, director of H. C. Witwer's "Fighting Blood" series at Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre, was formerly an actor in the old Triangle days. He then began work on the directorial staff of Mack Sennett, and was later promoted by F. B. O. to direct Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven in two-reel domestic dramas. When production was announced on the Witwer series, St. Clair was given the helm.

UNIVERSAL ADDS MISS COFFEE TO ITS STAFF

Lenore J. Coffee, well-known scenario writer and author, has been engaged by Universal to do a series of adaptations of big special productions. Miss Coffee is rated one of the leading scenarists in the field today and has to her credit a list of originals and adaptations which includes such productions as "Daytime Wives," "Temptation," "The Meanest Man in the World," "Unchartered Seas," "The Light That Failed," "Sherlock Brown" and "The Face Between." Universal is at present filming an original photoplay by Miss Coffee entitled "Havoc" with a cast featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, Anna Q. Nilsson, Tom Santschi and Winifred Bryson.

The engagement of Miss Coffee by Universal to do a series of screen versions of noted books and plays is in line with the companies recently announced policy of expansion and of making fewer and bigger productions.

THREE INTERNATIONALLY FAMOUS ACTORS COMING

Three actors of international fame will arrive in the California cinema colony for their first visit in the next few weeks.

First to arrive will be Joseph Schildkraut, now starring in "Peer Gynt" for the Theatre Guild in New York City. The play will close this week, and Schildkraut will start at once for Culver City to play the principal male role in Victor Seastrom's first American motion picture, "The Master of Man" from Hall Caine's latest novel. Schildkraut is expected May 30 or 31.

Eosta Ekman and Edith Erastoff will leave Stockholm June 4, after the stage season closes there, on the first step of their trip to California. They are the leading man and woman of the Swedish Theatre. They will leave England June 9, and should reach Los Angeles about June 21. Ekman, stage idol of Scandinavia, is to play in one picture for Goldwyn this summer. While Edith Erastoff is one of the most popular actresses of the Swedish stage, it is improbable that she will take any professional part in motion picture activities here. She is the wife of Victor Seastrom, and is bringing their two daughters to make a home in the Southland.

Wesley "Freckles" Barry may be small when it comes to age and size, but he has a five-man job all rolled in one in his latest Warner Brothers picture, "The Printer's Devil." Freckles" is the chief engineer, janitor, reporter, assistant editor and printer's devil on the Briggsville Gazette—wherever that is!

MONTMARTE TO HONOR CELEBRITIES WITH PLATES

Stars of the screen are to have their own exclusive tables at the Montmartre Cafe in Hollywood, according to the latest announcement of A. E. (Eddie) Brandstatter. Gold and silver name plates bearing the initials of the stars, big directors and featured players will be attached to the tables dedicated to the cinema celebrities. The screen notables will have first call on their tables, but if they are not using them for that particular date, they will be available for other patrons. Among those to be honored are Charlie Chaplin, Pola Negri, Gloria Swanson, Dorothy Phillips, Al St. John, John Bowers, Marguerite de la Motte, James Woods Morrison, Irving Cummings, Eulalie Jensen, Elinor Fair, King Baggot, Oscar Apfel, Viola Dana, Shirley Mason and Bernard J. Durning.

COMPANY REPRESENTS ALL NATIONALITIES

A Spanish picture, directed by an Irishman, roles played by "all-Americans" and photographed by Europeans!

That's "In the Palace of the King," the period spectacle being produced at the Goldwyn studios.

The story is set in Spain in the sixteenth century.

Emmett Flynn, who, an Irishman than whom there is none whomer, is directing it as his first Goldwyn picture under a contract signed recently.

The "all-American" cast includes Blanche Sweet, born in Chicago, Hobart Bosworth, Marietta, Ohio, Pauline Starke, Joplin, Mo., William V. Mong, Chambersburg, Pa., and other representatives of the forty-eight states.

Lucien Andriot, as the name might imply, comes from sunny France, and Paul Ivano, second cameraman, hails from the Balkans.

Oh yes, Albert Lena, birthplace, Naples, Italy, is business manager.

Oliver Follansbee, well-known actor of the Chicago legitimate stage, has begun his career with Cecil B. De Mille. He will appear in "The Ten Commandments."

Muriel Frances Dana played her most difficult role in "Desire," Rowland V. Lee's latest Metro production. Her role is that of a Chinese child, and her portrayal is said to be remarkable.

Peggy O'Day, who recently finished work on the serial "The Fighting Spirit" in which she will be starred, has been engaged to play the leading role in "The Battling Buckaroo" a special western production being made by Rocky Mountain Productions, Inc.

DESERT IS LOCALE FOR WRIGHT PICTURE

A caravan of motion picture players, cameramen, electricians and assistants departed this week for the desert land of Arizona. Here the movie folk will pitch their tents and remain for six weeks while they film the exterior episodes of Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man."

This is the first of the series of Wright stories to be given everlasting life on the silver sheet by Principal Pictures Corporation. Edward F. Cline is to direct the series, and a notable cast of players has been assembled for "When a Man's a Man."

Prominent among the players in the forthcoming production are Marguerite De La Mott, John Bowers, Forrest Robinson, Robert W. Frazer, John Fox, Jr., George Hackathorne, Fred Stanton and Charles Maiies.

It is the intention of the officials of Principal Players Corporation to film the Wright series of stories on a pretentious scale. Harold Bell Wright himself will lend all possible aid in their production. Following the current story, "The Winning of Barbara Worth" will be made. Others in the Wright series include "That Printer of Udell's," "The Uncrowned King," "Their Yesterdays," "The Shepherd of the Hills," "The Calling of Dan Matthews," and several other novels that have millions of readers to their credit.

HEDDA HOPPER ARRIVES TO JOIN FILM COLONY

Known as the smartest-dressed woman on the New York stage, Hedda Hopper, distinguished star of "That Day" and other Broadway successes, has arrived in Los Angeles to join the Hollywood film colony as a featured player in Louis B. Mayer Productions.

Miss Hopper just recently returned from an extended pleasure trip abroad where she was lavishly feted by notables of the stage and leaders of society in Paris, London and the beautiful tourist resorts of Switzerland. Mr. Mayer was in New York at the time of her arrival from Europe, and he capitalized the opportunity to secure her name or a long-term contract. Just what picture will mark Miss Hopper's debut in California's studio realm has not yet been announced, but it is understood that she will soon be cast for an important role in one of the productions now being made by Mr. Mayer, whose directors include John M. Stahl, Fred Niblo, Reginald Barker and W. S. Van Dyke.

AND THE DAY OF ALL-STAR CASTS REMAINS

Filming of the Mission Film Corporation's "The Barefoot Boy," has been completed and the picture is now undergoing the process of cutting and titling, at the Fine Arts studios, preparatory to its national distribution. Meanwhile, arrangements are being made by Production Manager DeWitte Hagar and Norman Walker, business manager, for a preview of the picture, which will in all probability be held at one of the theatres in Hollywood.

Officials of the company are very well pleased with the outcome of the production, declaring that the story has been picturized even far more successfully than they had anticipated. No less than sixteen stars, each of whom is recognized as among the foremost artists of their type, appear in the picture and with this unusual array of talent the greatest brilliance is given to the production. This cast was not assembled promiscuously, however, and the company did not ignore the characters in the story merely for the purpose of gathering a number of players whose names were of great box-office value. Each of the artists, regardless of their popularity in the film firmanent, was engaged because he or she was most perfectly adapted to the character in the author's story.

Among those in the all-star cast are such noted artists as John Bowers, Marjorie Daw, Sylvia Breamer, Tully Marshal, George MacDaniel, Otis Harlan, George Periolat, Virginia True Boardman, Raymond Hatton, Harry Todd, little Frankie Lee, Brinsley Shaw and others.

"The Barefoot Boy" is a story from the pen of Wallace Clifton, well-known author of the screen stories, and the scenario was also prepared by him. It deals with life in a small town in which a young boy after brutal treatment at the hands of his parents and members of the village runs away from home, only to return in after years a man of wealth and position seeking to overpower those who seemingly without the least provocation had treated him so cruelly and inhumanly.

The story was directed by David Kirkland, who had as his assistant, Charles Hamm. David Abel was in charge of the photography.

EVEN THE P. A. CAN GET DOWN TO NAKED TRUTH

Here, dear reader, is a press agent story that does not follow the regular formula.

Of course the natural thing would be for us to tell you of Joe De Grasse's familiarity with everything Asiatic and Oriental considering that he is at present directing "Thundergate" a colorful motion picture with a Chinese setting.

To follow the regular beaten track we should write about his extensive travels into China where he became familiar with every detail of oriental life.

But we can't do that. This is a truthful story—a press agent story extraordinary.

Joe De Grasse admits that he has only come in contact with three sets of Chinese. These are laundrymen, restaurant waiters and Chinese extras.

But the fact that he has never been to China, however, does not mean that he is not qualified to direct a story with Chinese setings, such as "Thundergate," which is now being filmed at the United Studios for First National.

"Why should I have to go to China before I can qualify to direct a Chinese picture?" asks De Grasse.

"After all is said and done a director is supposed only to direct his actors in enacting the parts as laid out in the scenario. It is the dramatic quality of a picture which counts first. Atmosphere, locale and other features are of secondary consideration."

It must not be gathered from this that "Thundergate" is not going to be perfect as far as the portrayal of Chinese life and characteristics are concerned.

Considerable care has been taken and much research work was done by the members of the technical and art staffs of First National to obtain the proper information relative to the various phases of Chinese life before the production was started.

That the picture might be correct in every detail, and portray a true oriental atmosphere, First National engaged Thomas Gubbins, who is perhaps more familiar with Chinese life than any other one engaged in the picture industry, to assist in the making of this elaborate feature.

Grubbins supervised the building of the highly colorful Chinese settings and is now acting as interpreter for the three hundred or more Chinese and Japanese who are working in the picture.

Garmes Has Close Call

Lee Garmes narrowly escaped serious injury and his camera was completely wrecked when one of the horses in the jousting contest in "Fighting Blood," now at Grauman's Metropolitan, became peeved at the camera while the scene was being taken and charged directly at the camera. Garmes barely escaped the teeth and flying hoofs of the enraged animal, but the camera was demolished.

SCHENCK SELECTS NEW TITLE FOR NORMA'S FILM

"Purple Pride" will be the name of the big French historic romance in which Producer Joseph M. Schenck will present his star, Norma Talmadge. The picture has been in the making now for two months under the tentative title of "Ashes of Vengeance."

The change to "Purple Pride" from the name of the book from which this gripping 16th century drama was adapted was made yesterday. The new name is believed to be more in keeping with the dignity and magnificence of the new production, which is the most pretentious feature in which Norma Talmadge has yet been cast.

"Purple Pride" is being directed by Frank Lloyd. It will be in ten reels and presents Miss Talmadge surrounded by the costliest all-star cast ever assembled. There are twenty-two principals in the drama, including Conway Tearle, Wallace Beery, Courtney Foote, Josephine Crowell, Betty Francisco, Murdock McQuarrie, Jeanne Carpenter, Andre de Beranger, Howard Truesdell and Mary McAllister.

This super feature, which will cost practically a million dollars when complete, is scheduled to be ready for cutting by the middle of next month. It is the last picture which Frank Lloyd will direct for Norma Talmadge. It is scheduled for release next fall.

CAMERAMAN "FOILS" THE ENEMY ALIAS MR. STATIC

That good old standby about necessity being the mother of invention found practical demonstration recently when the Reginald Barker company packed a number of oil stoves into the snowy fastness of Jasper National Park, Alberta, Canada, to prevent static in the blizzard scenes being photographed for "The Master of Women," a Mayer-Metro special which Mr. Barker is making with an all-star cast.

Static is the curse of motion picture photography. What the boll-weevil is to the cotton industry, static is to the production of the film industry. Literally, it is frictional electricity generated in the camera box which results in tiny flashes of light on the film. To combat this effect, Percy Hilburn, chief cameraman for the Barker unit, kept an oil stove burning under the tripod of each camera, thus insuring enough warmth in the camera box to prevent the frictional electricity caused by the frigid zone in which they were working.

MATT MOORE IS ON MAT FOR MORE HUMOR

Matt Moore has upset the tranquility of his Irish family. He has become a humorist, and as Mrs. Moore often says to her boys, two humorists in one family is enough entirely. Tom and Owen have always been humorists, but Matt has ever swept the minor chords of emotion into the dirges of drama.

But life is a grand thing and Matt Moore is catching up with his humor. There was Tom, now, waving a red flag and drinking a small beer to make the world laugh at "Hold Your Horses."

There was Owen, again, swanking in London town for "Picadilly Jim" and adding remarkable realism to "The Poor Simp." Matt, in the meantime, put the mute of pathos on the singing Irish heart of him, and told of the majesty of Death in "Back Pay." Then came big dramatic roles in "The Storm," "White Tiger' and "Drifting." They were splendid characterizations under helmets and opera hats, but they showed only a part of Matt Moore.

Marshall Neilan, also Irish, wanted a great actor for a role that would be spoiled by acting. He called Matt Moore for "Minnie." It was the real beginning of Matt Moore himself on the screen.

Today, Matt Moore stands out ahead of the Moore family as the screen humorist of the whimsical clan and he is middle-distance with his greatest opportunity to lure the lugubrious world into the enchanting kinship of langhter. The story is Fred Niblo's production of "Captain Applejack" for Louis B. Mayer and Metro. Matt Moore has the title role and Niblo is letting him play it as he feels it. The result will, it is believed, be a characterization that will add to the success of the picture and enthrone Matt of the Moores as the most serious humorist of the screen.

Al Gives Cups Galore

Al St. John will soon replace Terpsichore as the patron deity of the dance if he continues to present silver trophy cups with the same reckless abandon he has evidenced recently. "Big Hearted" Al presented one trophy Tuesday evening at the Winter Garden, and will give another at the Ship Cafe on Wednesday evening, June 5. He also proclaimed himself a patron of citrus culture by hanging up a cup for the best fruit rack display at the Anaheim orange show, and at the Ambassador Dog Show he will give a trophy for Boston terriers. Al is at present working on "Clues," a detective comedy under his present Fox contract.

Miss Ferguson Entertains

Helen Ferguson, well-known and popular film star, was host to a large gathering of motion picture "celebs" this week at her home in North Bronson avenue, Hollywood. They participated in an exciting game of Mah Jong in the course of the evening's festivities. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Graves, William Russell, Mr. and Mrs. Huntley Gordon, Laura LaPlante, Vola Vale and Al Russell. Miss Ferguson is at present under contract with Carlos Productions, which company is producing "The Unknown Purple" at the Goldwyn studios.

T. ROY BARNES TO STAR IN SHORT COMEDIES

T. Roy Barnes, famous comedian and well-known character in motion pictures, has signed a 14-month contract with the Grace Page Productions, recently organized in Hollywood to produce two-reel domestic comedies.

Announcement of the signing of Mr. Barnes, who is to start work immediately upon finishing his present engagement with Cosmopolitan Productions, was made by Miss Page who is the author of the stories in which T. Roy Barnes will be featured. Bess Mahoney, formerly with Famous Players-Lasky Company, will write the continuities.

Mr. Barnes is considered one of the most popular types in pictures, having appeared in dozens of photoplays during the past few years under the banners of several different producing companies. While with Cosmopolitan, Mr. Barnes starred in the recently released feature production, "The Go-Getter," and co-starred with Marion Davies in "Adam and Eve." He will be directed by Al Davis, also well-known in the film world, who is now assisting Philip Rosen in the filming of "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln," being made by Rockett Productions.

Mrs. L. Elena Wilson has come to Hollywood to make her home and is visiting her cousin Wilson Bailey of 1726 Carver Court. Mrs. Wilson is the former wife of John Channing Wilson, the noted author who was burned to death in Venice a year ago.

Ralph Lewis had just started production on "Alimony," his latest feature production, when he was called to Chicago by the sudden illness of his father, Captain E. R. Lewis. The scenes in the picture in which the well-known actor does not appear will be filmed during his absence.

Clubs to Shine

Southern California's exclusive country clubs, tourist hotels and fine residences are to be well exploited by Director Oscar Apfel in Viola Dana's next starring vehicle for Metro. "To Whom It May Concern" is the working title of the Rita Weiman story from which Rex Taylor has written the scenario and it deals with the adventures of the Long Island smart set. Viola Dana will be seen as a harem scarem young flapper who finally shows she has the real goods in her when the crisis comes.

THIS MAY START A GIN RUSH NORTH

One of the stories brought back by Laurence Trimble, after four months in Canada with his wonder dog, "Strongheart," where they were working on exteriors for the great dog star's next release, "The Phantom Pack," may start a rush for Canada. Here it is.

"We were just leaving camp for location one morning," says Trimble, "when the leader of the dog team driven by Bill Sproat suddenly stopped dead in his track, piling up the entire team. Sproat started for his leader to have it out with him, but before he reached the dog it started to dig furiously and by the time the dog musher was at the animal's side it had unearthed a strange object. It was a square face bottle bearing (in an almost forgotten language) this label 'Gordon Gin.'

"Instead of clouting the faithful beast as he had intended Sproat fell on his knees and kissed him, hugging at the same time the precious bottle to his breast.

"The dog's name was immediately changed from Silver to Gin Hound and he was in great demand. Everyone almost in the company wanted to take Silver walking when he was not in the harness but it didn't do any good for Silver never repeated."

Thomas Seeks Story

Richard Thomas, the producer-director of "The Silent Accuser" and "Phantom Justice," is seeking a story for his third "special," which will go into production at the Hollywood Studios about July 1st. However, the leading feminine role must be suitable for Estelle Taylor, says Mr. Thomas. Miss Taylor, who is now with the "Ten Commandments" unit of Paramount on location above Santa Barbara, Cal., will upon the completion of her work in this picture, return to the Thomas' fold for the latter's next picture. So, authors attention.

BOOM IN BUILDING DEPRIVES STAR OF EXERCISE

Edward Gribbon, popular film actor and all-around athelete, who has been cast as one of the principal players in the new John M. Stahl productions of "The Wanters," has about decided that he either will have to take up his residence at the beach or give up the daily morning exercise which he has been in the habit of enjoying for the past few years.

What has caused the actor to take such a course is nothing more than the great building boom which has occured in Hollywood within recent years.

Up to a short time ago it was the habit of the actor to don his gym suit arising in the morning and go over to some vacant lot in the neighborhood to exercise his muscles by running and jumping. But now the last vacant lot has been utilized for building purposes and Gribbon has been forced to abandon his daily exercise for want of some open space.

Therefore, rather than discontinue this exercise, which has kept him in the best of physical shape, the actor is looking around for a house at the beach where he can get out on the sand whenever he pleases and exercise to his heart's content and furthermore, need not worry about some home builder coming along and depriving him of his "outdoor gymnasium."

VITAL PHOTOGRAPHIC DISCOVERY ANNOUNCED

Revolutionary discoveries at the Goldwyn studios have done away with the need of photographic dark rooms, and made it possible to develop film in brilliantly lighted laboratories without danger of "fogging" the emulsion.

Experimental "dark" rooms at the Goldwyn plant proved the merits of the discoveries, and now work has begun which will make visible all the steps in the development of the thousands of feet of film handled at the studio daily.

Up to the time of the new discoveries, photographers had to work in the faint light of low candle power ruby lamps, guessing as near as they could in the gloom at their results.

In the new dark rooms, there is not only greater speed in handling of the film, but, because of the visible process a clearer, brighter product than has been possible before.

Claire Windsor visited her first director on her recent trip to New York—Allan Dwan, who picked her from the ranks of the extra.

DAVID BELASCO IS DUE HERE NEXT WEEK

David Belasco leaves New York, June 4th, for Los Angeles, it was learned today in a wire received from the impresario's eastern offices. He will come direct to the Warner Brothers studios, where he will start the throttle for the production of the two Belasco-supervised motion picture productions, "The Tiger Rose" and "The Gold Diggers."

Mr. Belasco will be accompanied by Lenore Ulric, Broadway's most important star of today, who is to be the featured artist in "Tiger Rose," and his staff of advisors and assistants, all of whom will be located in the new Warner studios.

Elaborate plans are being formulated by the picture men of Los Angeles, headed by the Warner Brothers, for a reception to be given the "greatest of all showmen." Harry M. Warner, senior member of the production firm, who came to the Coast three weeks ago to plan the coming season's output, will remain here until Mr. Belasco has become familiar with the studio situation.

It is understood that on his departure from New York, Mr. Belasco is to be tendered a most unusual "send-off" as exhibitors, producers, playwrights and artists have joined together to bid him "bon-voyage."

A committee of prominent Californians, including leading Los Angeles business men, will greet the beloved playwright-producer on his arrival here.

Murphy Finishes Another

Joe Murphy has finished his engagement with the James A. Bowen Productions Company for whom he acted as assistant director to Harry Revier in the making of "The Supreme Test." Joe is now considering two offers of other producers. Mr. Murphy was for years assistant to Allen Curtis, who made the famous Gale Henry-Milburn Moranti comedies.

Lederer Returns

Otto Lederer, who has been touring the state of California making personal appearances with the film "Forget-Me-Not," has returned to Hollywood and will resume film activities here. Mr. Lederer will be best remembered for his excellent performance as Solomon Levy in the original production of "Abie's Irish Rose."

Dorothy Seay, child actress, is working at the United Studios under the direction of Frank Lloyd in "Ashes of Vengeance" starring Norma Talmadge.

NO WONDER BRUCE RESENTS ABUSE

"I guess I'll be 'bandoned again?" Bruce Guerin inquired of Director Frank Borzage, to whom he has been loaned by Warner Brothers for the Arthur Jacobs-First National production "Dust in the Doorway."

And sure enough the part is that of a youngster whose thoughtless mother neglects him for foolish gaieties. In every one of the seven pictures in which he has played featured roles in his year and a half of screen work, little Bruce has portrayed a kiddie at whom life has failed to smile. It all began with "The Bachelor Daddy," which won him nation-wide notice and in which he played the youngest of the five orphans.

In "Love in the Dark," he was a youngster whose mother was killed and whose father went away to reform or something; adopted by Viola Dana, he romped through the film apparently not feeling the lack of parents at all. "Drifting," in which he supports Priscilla Dean, will show him as an American waif in the wilds of China. "Brass," which features him with a cast of notables and which won him his Warner contract, pictures him in a similar role of abandonment.

His genuinely gifted portrayals of a woeful little orphan have won him the title, bestowed by critics all over the country, of "the Baby David Warfield of the screen." But Bruce, who is half-past three and has a mind of his own, says he does wish they'd let him belong to somebody once in a while, so he could dress up in his nice white sailor-suit!

NOW SAY SOMETHING ABOUT PANIC

A program of production for the coming season unprecedented in the history of the motion picture industry, has been laid out and is now well under way at the several studios where First National pictures are made on the West Coast and in the East.

At the United Studios, Hollywood, where a bulk of the Western production is centered, there are most unusual scenes of activities.

At this studio is First National's own producing unit, which is now engaged in making "The Huntress," a romantic comedy drama of the out-doors, starring Colleen Moore. Before "The Huntress," is completed, the same unit will begin "Thundergate," a thrilling, dramatic story of Chinese and American life, the cast of which will include such film favorites as Owen Moore Sylvia Breamer, Virginia Brown Faire and Robert McKim.

Then while this elaborate feature is still in making, the unit will begin production on a farce comedy, "Her Temporary Husband," and then comes "Flaming Youth," Warner Fabian's famous sensational story of flapper love.

The extensive First National program also calls for the early filming of Gertrude Atherton's widely-discussed novel of rejuvenation, "Black Oxen," and a number of other picturizations of famous book and stage successes.

Norma Talmadge's "Purple Pride," which is being produced by Joseph M. Schenck for First National, is expected to be completed within the next three weeks. Miss Talmadge's comedy is also nearing completion at the United Studios. This will be followed by "A Dangerousr Maid," featuring the same star.

Within two weeks Producer Sam E. Rork will begin his next James Young production for First National, "Ponjola," in which Anna Q. Nilsson and James Kirkwood have prominent roles. About the same time Edwin Carewe will begin "The Bad Man," with Holbrook Blinn in the title role.

At the same studio Arthur H. Jacobs has begun production on his next Frank Borzage-First National picture, the temporary title of which is "Dust in the Doorway." Preparation is also being made by Producer Maurice Levee for Maurice Tourneur's next First National production.

At the Louis B. Mayer Studio production is well under way on John M. Stahl's "The Wanters," a brilliant comedy of New York City life, while at the Thomas H. Ince studio the First National program calls for the early production of "Anna Christie," Eugene O'Neil's prize play of 1922, the screen rights for which cost the top notch price of $100,000.

SCENARIO EDITOR RESIGNS FOR STAGE WORK

That he may devote his entire time to his new stage stories, Frank Dazey, scenario editor at Warner Bros. studios has been granted a leave of absence to take effect at once, although his contract with the Warners does not expire for six weeks.

Dazey is the author of "Peter Weston," the dramatic thunderbolt in which Frank Keenan has been meeting with overwhelming success. The play originally showed here in Los Angeles, and after a successful run in various Tom Wilkes theatres, was ordered east under the management of Sam H. Harris, New York impressario, and Wilkes' partner in the new productions. It was originally booked to open the Sam Harris theatre in New York, October 1, but has been showed ahead and will have its premiere there September 1.

"The Untame," a new story by Dazey was purchased by Wilkes last week and is expected to have its world premiere at the Alcazar theatre in San Francisco within the coming month. It is because of this play, that Dazey found it impossible to devote his attention to the picture scenarios. Frank Keenan is coming to the coast next week to go into further details with Dazey about "Peter Weston" prior to its New York showing.

With Dazey's departure from Warner Bros. the big work there will probably fall on the shoulders of Grant Carpenter and Julien Josephson, both of whom are now busily engaged on new scripts. Dazey is the husband of Agnes Christine Johnson, famous authoress.

GRECIAN STAR AND HIS WIFE RETURN TO MOVIES

After five years touring in vaudeville all over the European countries and America, George D. Colovos and his wife, Madame Septimus Valistoke Colovos, arrived in Los Angeles a short time ago to make their home in Hollywood.

Mr. Colovos is a native of Greece. He came to America in 1905 and received his education in St. Louis. His wife, Madame Septimus Valistoke Colovos, is the daughter of one of the finest families of the South and is a true Southern type. Mr. Colovos himself, wrote a scenario, one of the most thrilling comedy dramas, adapting his story from true life and it is to be produced for a motion picture of 7,000 feet.

"Spec" Walter O'Donnell, a new film prodigy discovered on the Pacific coast, plays his first reel part in the Warner Brothers picturization of Sinclair Lewis' "Main Street."

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Eulalie Jensen Denial

Eulalie Jensen, who is playing one of the leading roles in George D. Baker's "The Magic Skin" has had her press department issue a bulletin correcting the belief that "The Magic Skin" is a propaganda picture demonstrating the merits of a well-known facial soap.

Jimmy Is Lucky

Any time "Jimmie" Morrison, popular leading man of the pictures is downtown late and does not care to drive out to his Hollywood apartments, he will have a royal welcome at the new Biltmore Hotel after it is opened next October. "Jimmie's" full name is James Woods Morrison, and he is a namesake of James Woods, who has come here to be general manager of the new hostelry.

Comes Another Satire

"Mother's Jag-on" is the title of an animal travesty on "The Covered Wagon" which Reed Hustis has submitted to Col. W. N. Selig as a comedy starring vehicle for "Mary" the educated chimp of the Selig Zoo four-footed stock company. It is said to be a clever satire of the James Cruze picture of days of '49 now running at Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre.

La Plante Joins Thomas

William La Plante, prominent Los Angeles attorney and motion picture producer, has been appointed personal representative for Richard Thomas, the young producer-director. Mr. La Plante and Mr. Thomas will arrive in New York about the middle of June to perfect arrangements for the distribution of the two Thomas' pictures recently produced. The titles of these productions are "The Silent Accuser" and "Phantom Justice." The latter picture was temporarily known as "Other Men's Money." Both will be shown as six-part features.

Coy With Miss Valli

Coy Watson, Jr., is the latest addition to be made to the all-star cast supporting Virginia Valli in her latest Universal picture, "The Lady of Quality," a story adapted to the screen by Marion Fairfax, and being directed by Hobart Henley. Young Watson, who is ten years old and having been working in pictures ever since he was nine months old, has an opportunity in this picture to further demonstrate his versatility and ability to enact strong emotional roles and it is the belief of those with whom he is working that his performance in the picture will be one of the outstanding features of the production.

Dumbness of a Damsel

Elinor Fair's press agent informs us that she had a letter from a girl who was so dumb that she thought "Fair and Warmer," now playing at the Morosco, was the name of a vaudeville team and that Elinor Fair was the Fair of the team. Elinor is now playing opposite James Kirkwood in the all-star production of "Eagle's Feather," which Edward Sloman is making for Metro.

Baggot Rejects Offers

King Baggot, once the screen world's most popular matinee idol, is sticking closely to his directorial knitting at present. This week he turned down two opportunities to make personal appearances at $500 each, because he is busy making an all-star Jewel production built around Baby Peggy. The California Valencia Orange Show at Anaheim wanted King to appear as King Valencia with Maryon Aye as queen.

Patron Liked "Heroin"

Some enthusiastic theatre patron wrote to Lee Parvin, manager of the Egan Theatre, telling how much he liked the work of Grace Carlyle, the heroin (correct spelling) in "Morphine," Oscar Apfel's drama of the drug habit as applied to social circles. Lee replied he has never heard of "heroin" being in "morphine," and Oscar Apfel got all "hopped" up about it. Lee expects to see "Morphine" un till the "snow" starts to fall, and Californians have lay in their winter supplyof coal and "coke."

This Film Is Promising

The first of a series of feature pictures to be produced by Victor Fisher Productions has been completed and, according to those in direct touch with the trend of film production at the various studios in Hollywood, it bids fair to challenge in quality some of the pictures produced by the older established companies. The picture has been titled "Youth Triumphant," and prominent among the principal players in the cast is Lucy Beaumont, whose performance is said to be one of the high lights of the whole production. Before entering motion pictures Miss Beaumont was a beloved figure on the legitimate stage, appearing in such well-known plays as "Milady's Dress," "The Little Lady in Blue," "Chu Chin Chow," "John Ferguson' and many others. She perhaps scored her greatest success as Mrs. Wiggs in "Mrs. Wigs of the Cabbage Patch."

Miss Daw Engaged

Marjorie Daw, screen favorite, who was recently married to Eddie Sutherland, assistant director to Charles Chaplin, has been engaged by the Mission Film Company to play one of the principal roles in its latest drama of rural life, "The Barefoot Boy," which is being directed by David Kirkland.

Goldwyn Engages Ballet Master

Carlos Sebastian, ballet master and dancing instructor has arrived in Los Angeles to create the ballet episodes for "In the Palace of the King," which Emmett Flynn is directing at the Goldwyn Studios.

Sebastian has appeared with such eminent dancers as Gaby Deslys, the Dolly Sisters, Mlle. Mistinguette and Polaire. He conducts the Sebastian School of Dancing in New York City.

Babe Artists Star

Baby Muriel MacCormac, Coy Watson, Jr., Jack Parker and little Philippe deLacy, all popular members of the screen juvenile brigade, were guests at the South Lankershim Orchards, a new sub-division, near Universal City, last Sunday. The youngsters proved very popular with the large crowd that visited the tract, giving songs, recitations and dance numbers to the enjoyment of all present.

Walker Winning Praise

Joseph B. Walker, well-known cinematographer, who has just finished photographing "Richard the Lionhearted" for Associated Authors, has left for Laguna Beach, where all the big storm scenes for Associated Authors second production, "Harbor Bay," will be made. Walker is using some very interesting and novel camera effects of his own invention, and the photography in both productions is said to be unusually beautiful throughout. The production is being directed by W. S. Van Dyke, and is under the supervision of Thompson Buchanan.

Geldert With DeMille

Much of the glamour and romance of the ancient Bible times will be represented in Cecil De Mille's forthcoming picture, "The Ten Commandments." The plans at present call for a double cast, one part of which will interpret the Biblical version and the other cast will present the Decalogue in its relations to modern twentieth century life. For the heavy role the High Priest of Egypt in the Mosiac time, De Mille has selected Clarence H. Goldert, a well-known character actor, who has carried character roles in nearly all of De Mille's big productions.

Read This and Marvel

A little over three years ago, Barbara La Marr played her first film "bit" at the Louis B. Mayer Studio, getting $10 a day. She recently returned to the Mayer lot as one of the stars in Reginald Barker's next Metro special, "The Master of Woman" at a salary that is authentically quoted at close to $2,000 per week. The wages of sin may be death, but the art of being a screen vamp apparently has a wage scale all its own.

Alan Keeps Moving

One of the busiest actors in the Hollywood film colony is Alan Hale, who is just at present working in three pictures at the same time. This popular artist who scored so heavily with his performance in "Robin Hood," "The Covered Wagon" and other successes, is sharing his services with Jack Gilbert in "Cameo Kirby" at the William Fox studios, with Jackie Coogan in "Long Live the King," in which he is playing the part of the king, and in a picture being produced at the Metro studios with an all-star cast. "Outside of that my time is my own," says Hale.

Jockey Club Popular

The motion picture colony is evidencing great interest in the launching of the Southern California Jockey Club, which will revive horse racing at Culver City. Scores of well-known stars and directors have purchased stock certificates and memberships, others are starting to organize polo teams to play in the central enclosures, and still others are planning eastern trips to pick up strings of ponies for their own racing stables.

Mary is Finishing

Favorable progress is reported being made in the finishing of Mary Pickford's latest picture, "The Street Singer." Among the artists appearing in support of the star is little Philippe deLacy, five-year-old actor, and adopted French war orphan, who has been in such notable pictures as "The Dangerous Age," "Rich Men's Wives," "Omar the Tentmaker," and many others. Little Philippe is considered one of the most beautiful children in pictures and has one of the most perfect photographic faces that the screen has ever recorded. He was rescued from certain death at Verdun during the World War by a Red Cross nurse who adopted him and later brought him to America. She has been responsible for the success he has attained in motion pictures.

VAN HORN EXPANDS HIS COSTUME ACTIVITY

A costume establishment with a capital of $500,000 carrying in addition to the costumes everything necessary for dressing motion picture artists and settings, from rubber heels to chain armor, will be opened at 6050 Sunset Boulevard June 15. The Horsley studios have been leased for a period of years and alterations are now being made. The cost of remodeling the building and installing mechanical equipment will total more than $65,000. Rollin W. Horn, for twenty years manager of Van Horn and Son of New York and Philadelphia, the oldest and largest firm of theatrical costumers in America, is president of the new Los Angeles organization of Van Horn, Inc.

Associated with the new firm will be a department carrying a complete line of jewelry, antiques, furniture and interior decorations. Another department will be a leather and harness factory while still another will have a stock of more than $25,- worth of wigs.

Mr. Van Horn came to Los Angeles with more than 50 costume workers to fulfill a contract for the manufacturing of 2500 costumes for "Scaramouche," now being filmed at the Metro studio under the direction of Rex Ingram. He saw an excellent field for an establishment here and immediately made plans for Van Horn, Inc.

Recent production costumed by Mr. Van Horn are Scaramouche," "The Green Goddess," "Thais," "The Scarecrow," "Broadway Broke," "Backbone," "Little Old New York" and "When Knighthood Was In Flower."

RIENE PROVES SUCCESS AS AN IRATE WIFE

Riene Raleigh has just finished a very interesting and unusual role with Mary Pickford in "The Street Singer," which is being filmed under the direction of Ernst Lubitsch. In this picture Miss Raleigh plays the part of an irate wife, who discovers her husband making ardent love to another woman. The love-making couple are seated upon a wall overlooking a castle moat, and the first thing the justly indignant wife does is to cast her spouse into the water below. After a short, but terrific battle the other woman soon follows. This production is of Spanish setting and Mr. Lubitsch selected Miss Raleigh as a perfect Spanish type and one whose ability to handle wayward husbands was unquestioned. He has declared himself greatly pleased with her work.

CAREW FINDS HELPING OTHERS IS EXPENSIVE

In addition to his achievements before the camera, Arthur Edmund .Carew, noted actor, who has just completed his interpretation of Svengali in the Richard Walton Tully production of "Trilby," is a mechanic of no little ability. Whenever his automobile is out of order he is able to cheat the garage man out of a job by making the repairs himself. He has found, however, that his knowledge of mechanics has not saved him one penny. Instead it has cost him considerable money.

Many times when the actor has been out on a pleasure trip he has met a friend on the road whose car was "stuck." Unable to locate a repairman in the neighborhood the friend in each case has asked Carew to fix the car, knowing that he thoroughly understood the mechanism of an automobile. The actor invariably made the repair and the friend preceded on his way.

That was fine. He enjoyed being accommodating and he enjoyed helping to fix other people's cars. But it seems that every time he has helped a friend on the road he has ruined a good suit of clothes and that is why his knowledge of mechanics has cost him more money than he has saved by being his own repairman.

GRECIAN STAR TO STAGE HIS OWN PLAY HERE

George Rigas, well-known actor of stage and screen, who has played the principal role in practically every prominent Grecian play presented before the footlights and camera, has recently prepared a play entitled, "The Son of a Shadow," and the large number of persons to whom the actor has submitted the story declare it carries a tremendous appeal and is surely worthy of presentation before the footlights. Mr. Rigas is now making arrangements to present the play at a Los Angeles theatre and in all probability it will be given a showing early in the coming fall.

Should the play meet with success at its premiere in this city, Mr. Rigas declares he will later take it to New York for presentation. Before his entrance into motion pictures, Mr. Rigas was a popular figure on the stage in New York, perhaps scoring his greatest success in "Romeo and Juliet," which was presented at the Madison Square theatre and in which he played the role of Romeo. On the screen Mr. Rigas has appeared in such notable productions as "Omar the Tentmaker," "The Rip Tide" and many others. A prize of $1000 is to be offered by Mr. Rigas to any one who can guess correctly how any one could be "the son of a shadow."

WHEREIN A BABY SAVES A SHOW AFTER ACCIDENT

"On with the dance! Proceed with the show!"

This was the shout of the audience which attended a benefit entertainment in Hollywood a few nights ago. Several acts had been presented when down went the curtain and no announcement made as to what the next number would be. After five minutes the audience became impatient, wondering what was holding up the show. In back of the curtain an accident had occurred, which threatened to force the dismissal of the audience before the final act was given. A little child, who was the last to appear on the programme, had fallen down the stairs in back of the stage and was so seriously injured as to require the attention of all hands behind the curtain. But the audience didn't know what had happened for no one connected with the entertainment had an opportunity to make an explanation.

Realizing the situation, Baby Muriel MacCormac, four-year-old film starlet, who was attending the show with her mother, left the audiences and went behind the stage. As soon as they had found out what had happened Mrs. MacCormac raised the curtain herself and little Muriel stepped out on the stage as the last act on the program. The child, who is an accomplished classical dancer, delivered a terpsichorean number that brought the greatest applause from the audience and sent them away feeling that the entertainment had been a success, despite the delay between acts. No one in the audience knew that Baby Muriel had not been assigned a part on the program, and they little realized that it was she who "saved the show."

PRINCIPAL WILL SPEND MILLIONS OF PRINCIPLE

The production cost of Principal Pictures Corporation's forthcoming releases reads like the assets of a bank. This corportation plans to expend three million dollars on feature photoplays during the coming season. Twelve productions are listed for filming. These include several Harold Bell Wright novels, two stage plays, and a series of feature comedies starring Harry Langdon of footlight fame.

Principal Pictures Corporation's studios are in Hollywood gracing a twenty acre plot of land adjoining the studios of Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford. Their production schedule is listed as one of the biggest in filmdom for the 1923 year.

Eleanor Boardman was an interior decorator in New York about the same time Rodolph Valentino was trying his wings as a landscape gardener in the same city.

FINE ARTS ADDS TO THE HUM OF INDUSTRY

Several feature stories are in the course of preparation at the Fine Arts Studios and from every indication this plant will be humming with production activity within the next two weeks. Finis Fox, having recently returned to Los Angeles with a contract for a series of feature pictures for release through Associated Exhibitors, is getting ready to start the filming of "Bag and Baggage," a comedy drama written by himself and adapted to the screen by Lois Zellner. He will produce the picture with an all-star cast and a number of the screen's best known artists are now being engaged.

Charles Mack, who has recently completed the formation of the Charles Mack Productions, returned to the Fine Arts studios this week from a trip to northern California with his director, Henry McCarthy, where exterior locations were selected for his first independent feature, "Beyond the Horizon." Actual filming of this story is scheduled to commence within the next few days.

Jess Robbins, who is producing a series of comedy dramas for Vitagraph release, is getting things in readiness for the filming of a new story, the title and details of which he has not yet divulged. Edward Everett Horton, who has been starred by Robbins in such successful stories as "A Front Page Story," "The Ladder Jinx" and others, will be starred in the new production.

Fred Caldwell, whose picture, "Night Life in Hollywood," has scored a decided hit with exhibitors and the picture public throughout the country, is now getting ready to start the filming of another Hollywood story, which bears the title, "Hogan for Hollywood."

Several other stories are now in preparation for early filming at the Fine Arts Studios, which plant has recently undergone extensive improvements to the tune of $250,000.

Guy Bates Post to Tour

Guy Bates Post will shortly return to the footlights. This time, however, his stage appearance will be in the leading motion picture theatres where he will present a little sketch in conjunction with the showing of his latest feature photoplay, "The Man From Ten Strike," just completed by Principal Pictures Corporation in Los Angeles.

This will be the star's first stage appearance in two years, his picture work having occupied the major part of his time during that period.

FEWER AND BIGGER FILMS, SAYS LEVEE

M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios and producer of Maurice Tourneur's First National pictures, declared this week, following conferences with a number of big Eastern film men, that the coming year will see the production of fewer pictures.

"The slogan is for quality pictures, not quantity," said Mr. Levee. "I expect to see just as much production activity the coming year as in the past, probably more, for the type of pictures will be bigger—much bigger.

"Throughout the country it is now seen that a week's run in the large theatres is not long enough to give to the showing of the big productions.

"Instead of one week showings motion picture theatres in the larger cities are to extend the runs of worth while films, over a period of three or four weeks. In view of this situation every distributing-producing organization in New York is planning to cut down the number of its pictures for next year and will strive to make the type of pictures that will meet the requirements of exhibitors."

WALLY, WALLY WILST THOU NEVER REFORM?

Wally Beery's running true to form. He even turns a few new wrinkles in villainy in "Purple Pride," Norma Talmadge's 16th century French romance which Frank Lloyd is directing.

Beery has been an ugly half-breed in Northwest Mounted Police pictures, a heartless fiend in Russian ones, and in fact has made film fans flesh creep in almost every kind of screen play. In "Purple Pride" he adds to his laurels. Among his savage pastimes as the Duc de Tours in the Norma Talmadge film is that of running his sword through a soldier whose sweetheart he has insulted, setting a huge dog to attack a small boy, beating up the brother of the soldier he has killed and rounding up his enemies in a tower and hiring a notorious torturer to abuse them.

In the cast of "Purple Pride," which Joseph M. Schenck productions will release through Associated First National, are Conway Tearle, Courtney Foote, Josephine Crowell, Betty Francisco, Hector Sarno and little Jeanne Carpenter.

The addition of George Webb, Mervyn LeRoy and Brownie, referred to as the wonder dog, completes the cast in support of Johnny Hines in "Little Johnny Jones," the George M. Cohan stage play being filmed by the Warner Brothers.

LLOYD DISCOVERS HE IS A COOK FOR SURE

When Lloyd Hughes was cast for the part of a camp cook in his latest picture "The Huntress," he did not realize that before he finished the picture he would find himself doing honest-to-goodness cooking.

But that is exactly what he was called upon to do a few days ago, up in the Mammoth Lake District of California where the exterior scenes of the First National picture are being taken.

Lloyd, it may be stated, is a real cook as well as a reel cook and he admits that he enjoys his own cooking—especially if the piece de resistance comprises that most delectable of all fresh water fish—trout.

Between camera shots he and Walter Long, who plays a "heavy" role in "The Huntress," found time to land quite a few of the finny tribe from the mountain streams which at this time of the year are fairly alive with the succulent fish.

Arriving back at the camp headquarters of the film company, Lloyd proudly displayed the trout that he and Long had caught. He then took them over to the camp cook and informed the knight of the pots and pans that he would be ready to make his supper of the fish within an hour.

But he failed to figure on the obstinance of camp cooks in general and this cook in particular, who informed Hughes that he had been engaged to cook only three meals a day, and that is all he would cook—three and no more.

But the famous juvenile player had set his mind on trout. He had the trout in his bag and he was going to have them for supper! So there was nothing for him to do but to put on an apron, clean the fish and cook them—and last, but not least—eat them.

Martindel at Goldwyn

Headquarters of Edward Martindel are now at the Goldwyn studio, where he is engaged in the leading character role of "The Day of Faith," which Tod Browning is directing He declares that Goldwyn, despite the fact that it is fully three-quarters of an hour ride from Hollywood, is a grand old studio.

Radio gets them all! Ben Hewlett is completing his fourth week as the "heavy" in "Lights Out," Robertson-Cole's current production, but finds plenty of time to putter around with air currents and the like. "Great results," says Benny. We don't know whether he means hobby or vocation—maybe both!

Wilson, Noah Beery, Robert Edeson and Frank Campeau. The invasion of the motion picture camera into the Basin, where the automobile, the telephone and other modern conveniences are still unknown, serves to prove to a finality that nothing escapes the cameras eye. Production Editor Lucian Hubbard announces that the company will return shortly to the studio.

Production starts June 11th on James Cruze's next Paramount picture, "Ruggles of Red Gap," now being adapted by Thomas Geraghty from the book by Harry Leon Wilson. This is a wonderful story. Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, states that it will be given a great cast for its screen interpretation. With the man who produced "The Covered Wagon" as director, this should develop into one of the season's most unusual photoplays. Ernest Torrence, who has gone to New York especially to see "The Mountebank," the stage success from W. J. Locke's novel which is to be adapted to the screen with Torrence in the featured role, will return to Hollywood in time to start work in "Ruggles of Red Gap." Walter Woods will act in the capactiy of production editor for this picture.

Paramount stars who a few months ago hastened Eastward to take part in pictures being produced at the Famous Players-Lasky Lonk Island studio are now returning to Hollywood one by one. Last week Antonio Moreno drifted back to the West Coast plant. Just prior to his arrival, Mary Astor made her first appearance on the Pacific Coast. In the very near future, it is announced, Bebe Daniels and Agnes Ayres will also return, both having been in New York for more than a month. With the return of these popular favorites and the signing of new faces by Jesse L. Lasky, activities at the West Coast Paramount studio are shortly to be in full swing again.

George Fawcett goes to New York this week to play a featured role in the forthcoming Sam Wood production, "His Children's Children," for Paramount. Simultaneously with his arrival in the East, announcement of a strong cast for this picture is to be made. Fawcett's last photoplay in Hollywood was "Salomy Jane," in which he enacted a featured role.

The Paramount West Coast studio has moved to Guadelupe, California!

Two hundred miles north of Los Angeles, Camp Cecil B. DeMille spreads over a sandy stretch along the shores of the Pacific Ocean. The famous producer has taken more than twenty five hundred players, nearly twice that number of domestic and wild animals, and an unbelievable amount of chariots, costumes, makeup and properties, to Guadelupe, where he is now engaged in making startling scenes for the Biblical prologue of his current Paramount production, "The Ten Commandments," from the story by Jeannie Mcpherson.

Camp DeMille is a hive of industry. A continual line of trucks passes between the tented city and a nearby town, bringing in food supplies and life necessities and taking out thousands of feet of exposed negative that will later be developed and cut into proper sequences for what is firmly believed will be the greatest motion picture ever made.

To care for emergencies, Mr. DeMille is running the camp on the order of an incor porated city. He is the Mayor, and in his as sistants he has a Chief of Police, a chief o the Fire Department and other officials com mon to metropolitan life. A system of cau ing for the garbage, a hospital, restaurant and stores are other features of this surpris ing camp. In one thing alone is it lackin the city standards—there are no telephones A bugler calls people to work and dismisse them in the evening. Otherwise, one migh move bed and baggage to Camp Cecil De Mille, California, and spend his days in com fort, while amusing himself by watching th gigantic progress of "The Ten Command ments."

The cast for Mr. DeMille's production in cludes Theodore Roberts, Leatrice Joy, Rich ard Dix, Nita Naldi, Charles deRoche, Estell Taylor, Rod La Rocque, Julia Faye, James Neill, Edythe Chapman, Geno Corroda, Clar ence Burton, George Field, John Randolph and Noble Johnson.

"Children of Jazz" will be finished thi week. This special Paramount production boasts an unusual cast in Theodore Kosloff Ricardo Cortez, Eileen Percy and Robert Cain, featured players; and Irene Dalton Alec. B. Francis, Frank Currier, Snitz Ed wards and Lillian Drew. Jerome Storm i directing the picture with Ralph Block a production editor. Adapted by Beulah Mari Dix from the play by Harold Brighouse, i has as its central theme the clash of the mod ern children of jazz with a colony of islan people who still live and act the age of 1850 It is a novel story and is being given superb treatment at the West Coast Para mount studio.

Nearing completion at the Famou Players-Lasky studio in Hollywood is Jack Holt's current starring vehicle, "A Gentle man of Leisure," adapted by Anthony W Coldeway from the play by Stapleton and Wodehouse. Under the direction of Joseph Henaberry, the final scenes will be shot thi week in the exact replica of the famous old Waterloo Station, the terminal of the Great South-Western Railway in London, England Reproduced right down to the signs on the walls and a pane of glass broken from a win dow, this set is a curiosity-arousing feature that speaks well for the technical art of the silent drama. When the final scenes are completed, production editor Walter Woods will put the picture into final shape for re lease.

we have missed, we may be missing others that are crowding upon us.

We think we are the victims of blind chance, but often it is we who are blind, not chance.

The difference between the successful man and the failure, is that one saw his chance and took it.

The one time the Kaiser had the opportunity to use his power for the world's benefit, he used it to establish himself as the world's Dictator, and all he gained was seclusion in Amarongen.

The victorious Allies had the opportunity to reconstruct the government of an exhausted and devasted Europe, instead of which they constructed The Treaty of Versailles.

One afternoon a man on the race track was regretting that he had just missed backing a winner. A sententious race-goer remarked, "There are five more races, and there's a winner in every race."

It is well to know when to grasp the opportunity to speak; sometimes it is better to be silent.

We are told that "opportunity knocks once at every man's door," the fact is, it is always knocking but we are too pre-occupied to hear it.

We need wisdom to recognize our opportunity—and decision to grasp it.

screen. Never in all Mr. Hart's career did his eyes carry a more overwhelming conviction of honesty than when he looked into mine and declared himself innocent. It came upon me then what a great tragedy it was that he should suffer the penalties of guilt when I knew him to be innocent.

"Those who know him well have always believed him guiltless of the charges against him. My personal happiness that they have been proved groundless will be shared by hundreds of thousands. I am waiting the moment, which I hope will be within the next few days, when William S. Hart, one of America's greatest and most popular film stars, will come to me in my office and say, 'Mr. Lasky, I am ready to go to work.'"

A TECHNICAL MODEL

Did you ever count the number of "subtitles" in a feature motion picture production? The average picture of lively action, well made, well edited and well titled, contains about two hundred and fifty. Pictures of a more subtle trend than action dramas often require many more. However, the rule is to use as few as possible, yet to make the story clear that there will be no interest-break caused by "thinking back" to get the meaning of scenes and situations.

"Judgement of the Storm," the first production made by the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, an organization of story experts, lives up to the reputation of its producers by being a model of technical perfection. Only one hundred and eighty subtitles are used! And while the action element in the picture is strong there is a great deal more of subtle emotional drama which, without such skillful handling, would have required many subtitles.

"In this day of prosperity a man ought to be able to make enough money in six hours to last his a week."—Henry Ford, in newspaper article.

To this Eddie Gribbon, the well-known character artist, who is being seriously discussed for the title role in "Ben Hur," says: "Sure, but everyone can't own a garage!"

"The reason so many of us never recognize opportunity," says Martha Mattox, one of the screen's foremost delineators of character roles, "is because it usually goes around disguised as hard work."

In England it has now reached a point where the vast majority of well-dressed men wear nothing but silk hats in the evening. This is the report printed in a London newspaper. "Why do they bother to wear a hat?" inquires Lewis Sargent, the popular film star.

Two reel western picture units are working at Universal City on condensed tales of the old West.

Francis Grandon is directing Jay Morley and Jay Marchant is directing Pete Morrison in such productions. Margaret Morris and Elinor Field are the leading women of the units.

Elinor Field, heroine of Reginald Denny's starring successes, The Leather Pushers," is riding through the wild and wooly west for a few days between productions of the H. C. Witwer prize fight classics.

In a western picture he directed by Jay Marchant and starring Pete Morrison, entitled "Rarin' to Go," she plays the feminine leading role. Other players are Jay Morley and Bud Osborne.

Herbert Rawlinson has again been cast in the role of an Englishman for his latest vehicle, "The Victor," which is now being filmed at Universal City.

Edward Laemmle, whose direction of historical chapter plays won him considerable distinction and a new contract to direct feature plays for the Universal company, is guiding the making of the play.

Rawlinson recently finished work in "Railroaded," a screen adaptation of the English crook drama, "Richard," by Margaret Bryant. Edmund Mortimer directed it.

"The Victor" was adapted from "Two Bells for Pegasus," by Gerald Beaumont.

Excellent progress is being made on the Universal Jewel all star special, "Havoc," in which Anna Q. Nilsson and J. Warren Kerrigan have the leading roles under the direction of Harry Garson. The picture is being made in the Garson studio in Edendale instead of Universal City.

The story by John Blackwood, prepared for the screen by three of the best known writers of the industry, Raymond L. Schrock, Lenore Coffey and John Goodrich, is laid chiefly in islands of the South Seas.

Although a special production of the highest calibre, "Havoc," will be made in reasonable production time, due to an efficient organization gathered together for this one unit. Edgar Stein is the business manager.

Less than a month to go— —

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the elaborate million dollar film spectacle based on Victor Hugo's story, which has been in production at Universal City for seven months, is nearing the final sequences of dramatic action.

The star, Lon Chaney, has but a few scenes to play now, but a few more hours of torture in the most intricate makup ever devised by an actor. He plays Quasimodo, the hunchback.

Patsy Ruth Miller, Norman Kerry, Winifred Bryson, Eulalie Jensen, Gladys Brockwell, Nigel de Brulier, Brandon Hurst, Raymond Hatton, Cesare Gravina, Ernest Torrence, Nickolai de Ruiz, Eva Gordon, Kate Lester, Sidney Bracy, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Bhogwas Singh, Tully Marshall, Harry Van Meter, Edwin Wallack, Roy Laidlow, William Parke, W. Ray Meyers, John Cossar and fifty other players of professional note support Chaney.

Perley Poore Sheehan adapted the story to the screen and Edward T. Lowe prepared the continuity. Sheehan has been supervising production with Wallace Worsley as the director.

An attractive matching of personalities is to be seen on the sets at Universal City where Gladys Walton is working on her newest starring vehicle, "The Untamable."

Opposite her is Malcolm McGregor, one of the screen's most promising younger leading men, and in support are John Sainpolis and Etta Lee. There are only four characters in the story, which is full of concentrated drama depicting the inner struggles of a "two-souled" woman.

The other players in the picture and the director, Herbert Blache, have expressed the opinion that in this story the matching of these two is particularly fortunate.

Baby Peggy has changed her nationality.

The screen's youngest star has become an Italian immigrant baby for her latest starring vehicle, "Wanted, A Home," which is now being filmed at Universal City under the direction of King Baggot.

It was written by King Baggot and Raymond L. Schrock, head of the Universal City scenario department.

Others in the Baby Peggy cast are Gladys Brockwell, Sheldon Lewis, Betty Francisco and William H. Turner.

"The Love Brand," is the title of the new Stuart Paton picture, work on which has commenced at Universal City. Roy Stewart is to be featured, and a large cast will be used.

San Juan Capistrano, home of the quaint old mission of that name, is to be the setting for one of the H. C. Witwer "Leather Pushers" stories being filmed at Universal City. Reginald Denny and his company, with Harry Pollard, director, have returned from a week on location there, filming the action, outside of the prize fight, of an interesting episode.

Neely Edwards avers that there is more than one way of being a dashing member of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

He says that it can be made a funny as well as a serious pastime and is proving it in his latest comedy at Universal City. He knows that it is funny, for he heard a property man laugh during the filming of the first scenes.

The Universal laugh maker is working under the direction of William Watson. The story is a one-reel travesty on the Northwest Mounted Police with the working title, "Red Riding Good."

The comedy was written by Tommy Grey, head of the Universal comedy department.

Vol. VI. SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1923 No. 8

Through The Editor's Megaphone

One thing is certain, there never will be any acute shortage of motion pictures so long as Hollywood may last!

And, remember ye also, he, the party, who "parties" to excess can depend on becoming an excess certain to be dispensed with eventually.

We all have our faults, of course, which ,also of course, makes it seem the very essence of prudence to confine one's fault-finding to one's self.

This is the golden age for the small independent in the picture-producing field. The film industry is due to be ruled by new kings and these new kings will hail from the ranks of the present-day smaller independents. Natural political evolution insures some such a transition as this since all things having to do with progress—temporary triumphs and failures—are extremely transitory.

It is being once more demonstrated that it is a common tendency among picture producers to emulate. Simultaneous with Mrs. Wallace Reid's announcement of her plan to produce an anti-narcotic photoplay, dozens of others started filming such pictures and now as a consequence even before her feature is ready for release there are at least a half dozen such films on the market and being exhibited throughout the country. And, so long as a producer is an imitator, he's a mighty poor excuse of a producer!

Incidentally, it might be added, after the kings have had their flings on the screen, the plebeians shall once more be given opportunity to monopolize the attention just as they do in real life and especially in European countries nowadays. Down deep in their hearts the majority of photoplay fans are far more interested in the romantic story of plain Bill Smith than they are in the intrigues of royalty. Bill Smith's the fellow they want to see every day while most of them would not go across the street to see and be snubbed by a kink.

One of most important items of news thus far this film-eventful year is the announcement of the expenditure of fully three million dollars on the deal whereby Charles Ray will take possession of the Cosmosart Studios. Charlie's ambition is to convert this studio into the most beautiful one in the world and by taking full advantage of the unusually striking "lay o' the land," he expects to work scenic wonders such as will make his new picture home a show-place worthy of world-wide fame. Verily, the more of this sort of enterprise in Filmland the better and Mr. Ray deserves unstinted congratulations.

The success of "The Covered Wagon" has had a tendency to give fresh impetus to a "back-to-oldtime-melodrama" movement and it is unmistakably obvious that a very large public will welcome relief from boresome society pictures of which there has been a surfeit during the last few months. Melodrama as we know it in these ultra-modern times is simply red-blooded drama with, perhaps, a little abnormal exaggeration, oftentimes improbable, but such form of literature has the power for causing human nerves to tingle and—who knows?—it may be that Prohibition has something to do with the apparent demand for such stimulant! At any rate, melodrama already is back into its own and its return is in no way unwelcome.

There is quite a controversy on—a friendly one—as to the justice of killing the two-reel comedy. Undoubtedly there are powerful forces at work to end the heyday of the short comedy subject in favor of the full-length feature mirth-provoker and many of the leading stars already have abandoned the old field for the new. However, we'll wager a cookie full o' raisins 'n nuts that there will never be a time when the market door can be closed on two-reelers which possess qualities conducive to hearty laughter. But, there IS the point—there must be something to amuse highly or else the comedy of any length shall cease!

Charlie Chaplin is about to complete his big feature, "Public Opinion," in which he will introduce Edna Purviance as a star. No one outside of his studio has seen any part of this film yet and no one knows how wonderful it might be as a cinema classic, but just the same, it's a foregone conclusion that a very vast majority of all the inhabitants of all fandom are wishing with all their might that Charlie will not permit whatever directorial genius he may possess to interfere with his genius for spreading joy as a comedy star. The loss of Chaplin's picturesque pictorial personality from the screen would be one of the most regrettable losses imaginable right now.

Weather conditions and money conditions are both favorable to a maximum production of motion pictures in Southern California just now. Everybody seems convinced the present wave of prosperity is sure to remain with us for at least two years. A vast majority of the people in the field are working and the liquidation of old debts is going on as it never did before. Most everybody (excepting occasional editors) can boast good clothes and good bank accounts. The spirit of distressful Panic is certainly broken. Few untoward contingencies could arise in this era to disconcert one. All in all, everything is lovely and the geeses hang high. Therefore, again, all in all, why should there be any expressions of pessimism in any quarter? Why not forget all woes past or present, real or imaginary, and buckle right down to the game of solving the problem with earnest effort?

A Studio Building Climax is Capped

Now comes a climax in the unprecedented tivities in the field of studio expansion d development within this busy capital of mland. For several weeks the newspapers ve been filled with announcements of ns to enlarge various picture-making nts and to build new ones, and a majority the announcements have proven official, cause the actual proposed work has been complished or is in the course of being complished. Explicitly, Los Angeles' dio-building boom has been real—amazgly so—and when all this renewed zeal s spent itself, it is a foregone conclusion available equipment for the making of tion pictures in this community is going be something to marvel over.

Approximately three million dollars are volved in the latest development to be oposed—that of the Cosmosart studio operty recently purchased by Charles Ray d Albert A. Kidder, Jr., his legal adviser d general manager. The development and eration will be handled by a new corporan now being organized by Mr. Ray and his sociates to be known as the Charles Ray nterprises Corporation.

This sum, which is to be underwritten by e of the large bonding houses of the city, ll completely transform this twenty-acre operty in the heart of the north Wilshire strict skirted by Beverly Boulevard for lf a mile and by First Street, Virgil Ave- e and Juanita Avenue.

From this area covering a space of more than two city blocks, it is promised, will evolve the most beautiful motion picture studio property in the country and an exclusive new shopping center. The developments look forward to the upbuilding of a commercial picture plant with a capacity of about a dozen independent producing units, besides affording greatly increased facilities for the two super-productions which Mr. Ray will make yearly.

The new Charles Ray Enterprises Corporation will concern itself with very extensive real estate development as well as working out the picturesque and ornate studio enterprise.

Among the buildings included in the plans are apartment houses and many business structures. Some of these will relate directly to the film industry, as they are expected to house subsidiary lines of trade which have grown up in Southern California in connection with motion pictures.

The line of the new Beverly Boulevard, which is to be a 100-foot driveway to the ocean, bisects a large triangular piece on the corner of the property. On this piece is to be erected a tall Class A business structure to be occupied almost entirely by one of the large costume companies and a studio furnishing company now negotiating for tenancy.

On the other corners of the tract spacious and ornate exclusive apartment houses will be built. One of these possibly will take on the dignity of a first-class tourist hotel.

The First Street frontage of the studio grounds, which is now being paved, will be devoted to a building to house a branch of one of the leading Los Angeles banks, and there will be numerous adjacent structures for stores. There is room in the spacious tract for a considerable number of dwellings which are a part of the general plan. These are to be erected by the corporation with a view to variety and beauty such as will give practical scenic scope to the studio's facilities for outdoor picture shots.

The development of the studio proper will be on a very extensive scale. The most important of the structures will be a new administration building designed to exceed in size and beauty anything of the kind in Southern California.

It is on the landscaping side that changes will be made most pleasing to the eye. The conformation of the twenty acres is such as to lend itself to elaboration of great beauty. They are to be made into what may be called a spacious sunken garden, with its natural lake skirted by paved drives and walks, spanned by bridges and dotted by green parkways.

On the bosom of the lake is to rest the Mayflower, most unique of scenic sets yet built, which cost $60,000 and is now at the present Charles Ray studio on Fleming Street, where it was used for scenes in the star's forthcoming production, "The Courtship of Myles Standish."

A Bird's Eye View of Charles Ray's Proposed New Studios

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

San Francisco, Cal., June 4.—Louis Graf, President of the Graf Productions, and J. Hesser Walraven, publicity man of the organization, went to Los Angeles on Monday, and will be there a week on business connected with important developments for the company. While there they are making their headquarters at the Hollywood Hotel.

Charles Eyton, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Studios, came to San Francisco last week to welcome his wife, Kathlyn Williams, on her return from a tour of the Orient.

Al Wilkie, publicity man for Goldwyn, and at present attached to the company making "Greed" here, spent a few days last week in the South on business.

The picture-making expedition being sent around the world by the Intrepid Company of this city on a yacht has postponed their date of sailing until September first. Their complement of members is almost full, but a little more time is necessary for the installing of all the equipment on the boat, and completing all the many details of the arrangement for so long a voyage.

Ray Moore, head location man, and business manager for Goldwyn, spent several days in this neighborhood the first of last week, and went North on other business for the organization.

Tyrone Powers, accompanied by his wife, arrived in San Francisco last Friday, and after a few hours here went on to Los Angeles, where he will lead in a picture to be made by Goldwyn, called "The Day of Faith."

A picture-making outfit, headed by Emory Johnson, arrived in San Francisco last Friday with the battleships of the Pacific Fleet, having taken pictures of the trip up the coast, and their arrival here. As the cameramen had the co-operation of all the naval officers, and the use of the searchlights of the battleships, they obtained some of the most remarkable pictures, both by day and night, ever taken of a naval fleet in motion. The picture-making party consisted of Emory Johnson, B. F. Miller, Richard Morris, and Ross Fisher. They left on Saturday evening for the South.

Last Saturday night before several thousand people, who overflowed the Greek Theatre at Berkeley, Margaret Anglin gave her long promised performance of Hippolytus. It was produced with great grandeur and with as near an approach as possible in modern times to the original Greek interpretation of the masterpiece. Boyd Irwin, an Australian actor, well known to the films, played Hippolytus.

Abraham Lehr, Vice-President of the Goldwyn Corporation, on his recent visit here talked over with Eric Von Stroheim the progress of "Greed," expressed himself as much delighted with what he has seen of the film at the studio, also with the gracious, and helpful assistance that the city officials, civic organizations, and the people generally have given in San Francisco toward the making of the picture. The company worked all last week at the little house in Oakland, and are now completing the trans-bay sequence. After its completion the work of about half the cast will be finished, and they will be released.

Louis R. Lurie, San Francisco capitalist, whose operations in theatrical properties have extended over a number of years, will, on June 30th, assume control of the Century Theatre, and at once remodel it into one of the leading picture houses of the country. The theatre will be re-opened as a picture house under Lurie's personal direction.

Mrs. Wallace Reid, known to the screen as Dorothy Davenport, will come to San Francisco this week to appear in person at the world's premiere at the Century Theatre on June 9th, of the big dope film, "Human Wreckage," of which she is the centre figure.

Jean Hersholt, of the "Greed" cast, was the guest of honor at a recent dinner by the Norden Society of this city. Hersholt is a native of Denmark, and first came to this country as a member of the Danish Commission to the San Francisco expedition in 1915. As his coming to play in this picture is his first visit here since the close of the expedition, he has been warmly welcomed by large numbers of his countrymen who are residents, and many of them old friends.

Charles Ruggles, who has recently completed a picture with Agnes Ayres for the Famous Players-Lasky company, has come to town as a visiting star at the Alcazar Theatre, where he was once a well liked member of the stock company. He will be here eight weeks, with a new play each week, several of them to be tried out as to their possibility for Broadway next season. Last week they played "Oh, Boy," an old favorite, but this week will see a new comedy of pills and prescriptions called "The Nervous Wreck."

Victor Seastrom and the company filming "Masters of Men" for Goldwyn, are due in San Francisco about June 9th. While here they will shoot some English country scenes in the lanes on the beautiful estates of Burlingame and San Mateo.

Along New York's Rialto

By RAYMOND McKEE

E. K. Lincoln has returned from California with a print of his latest picture, "The Right of the Strongest."

Mae Murray is closing her New York apartment preparatory to her leaving for Hollywood, where she will start work at once on, "Conquest," and "Mlle. Midnight."

Jesse Hampton is taking a vacation in New York.

The Assistant Directors Association of New York have moved their headquarters to the M. P. D. A., 234 West 55th Street, where all future meetings will be held.

Jawn Friend McKee, Raymond McKee's brindle bulldog, who is appearing before the camera in New York, paid "Laddie Boy," the first dog of the land, a visit at the White House last week. "Jawn Friend," and Ray were in Washington on location.

After an election unmarked by politics, Hal Crane was this week elected to the office of promoter, or the president of the Green Room Club. Fred Burt was elected vice-president; George L. Sargent, Copyist; J. Frank Stephens was elected angel. The new officers have taken their positions.

"Victims," a propaganda play on "dope" peddling, has been put into rehearsal for immediate production. C. W. DeRose wrote it.

The new Griffith film, "The White Rose," opened a four-week engagement this week at the Lyric Theatre and marked the return to the screen of Mae Marsh, after a long absence. The acting of Miss Marsh invests this film with a charm that causes it to be a delight. Her portrayal is easily the feature of the film and firmly establishes her as one of the foremost emotional actresses of today. Ivor Novello, the imported Italo-English screen Apollo, plays the boy. He is handsome to a fault and lacks the "pep" and fire of Bert Lytell or Richard Dix, who played similar roles in "The Christian." "The White Rose" is a melodrama. The plot moves slowly and carefully, being relieved now and then by bits of humor. The first-nighters liked it.

Gloria Swanson and George Fitzmaurice attended the Sixty Club Dance last week at the Ritz. Mae Murray and her husband, with his new mustache, were also on "deck."

If members of the Producing Managers' Association, curtail production, as Arthur Hopkins and Arch Selwyn have publicly threatened, in event of an actors' strike next year, the Equity members themselves will organize dramatic companies and give their own shows. At least that is the substance of the statement given out to Broadway. The plan is to raise large tents on vacant grounds and present the plays under canvass in case the actors have difficulty in obtaining theatres.

Ann Luther has been cast for a role in "The Governor's Lady," which William Fox is making from the famous Belasco play.

The Cunarder, "Acquitania," took away several well-known people in the theatrical world when she sailed Tuesday for Cherboug and South Hampton. Dorothy Dalton, the Paramount picture star, was snapped by the photographers before the ship left. George Fitzmaurice and his wife, Ouida Bergere, left for Rome, where he will start direct Sir Hall Caine's "Eternal City." Wallace Eddinger, who has just completed a tour of the country in "Captain Applejack," and Mary Nash, also sailed.

Frank Keenan, who closed in Chicago his season of twelve weeks in "Peter Weston,"

Photography Progress----Did It or Didn't It?

By RAY H. LEEK

Is the art or motion photography progressing? The answer should be forthcoming on with the refilming by Preferred Pictures of that gripping romance of literature, stage and screen "The Virginian," for early release. Approximately half a million dollars has been appropriated by the B. P. Schulberg organization to produce from the famous Owen Wister story, an epochal picture that will serve to prove the actual forward strides of the screen art during the eight years that have elapsed since it first was portrayed before the camera.

But, contrary to general belief, it is not expected to show that the improvement has had to do chiefly with photography, lighting and the other purely mechanical departments of photoplay making. Direction, acting and the human element entering into screen productions have profited most from the experience of years, if the theory of the producers of the newest "Virginian" is correct.

The first surprise probably will be found in the fidelity with which the views of the author have been carried to the screen. William S. Hart attained his greatest stage success as the Virginian at an age slightly under forty-five. Dustin Farnum, the Virginian of the Paramount screen production undertook the part at about the same age. But Wister spoke of his hero's age as ranging between twenty-four and twenty-eight during the period pictured in the story. A thorough canvass of the acting material on the West Coast and the East has resulted in the selection of Kenneth Harlan, at the age of twenty-eight to play the role in the new production.

Harlan, tall, athletic and strikingly American in appearance looks enough like the author's conception of the Virginian to have posed for the pen portrait. That he has played the part in four stock companies during his youthful stage career is an added coincidence rather than a reason for his selection for the part.

Tom Forman, who is to direct the picture, is combing the screen colony here for players to make up a cast in keeping with his project, while an entire staff of art directors are preparing the architectural and natural settings before which the story will be enacted.

David Belasco's Los Angeles stay promises to be an eventful one. In addition to "The Gold Diggers," in which he will have a supervisory interest, he will be given an opportunity to give the Belasco touch to one of his greatest productions, "The Boomerang," which Victor Schertzinger will film as soon as he completes direction of Jackie Coogan's latest picture.

Eve Unsell, who will work with the director,composer as scenarist throughout his latest series of productions, is preparing the screen version of the play, which is from the pen of those gifted literary partners, Winchel Smith and Victor Mapes.

The versatile Schertzinger, meanwhile, has added another duty to his many daily activities—that of supervising the erection of settings now being erected at the Schulberg studios for the production.

Advocates of motion picture-text books for the schools may find material for thought in the life story of Abraham Lincoln, now being filmed by the Rockett-Lincoln Film Company. If one is to accept the word of Cy Snyder, official purveyor of facts concerning the big production every scene is being shot in accordance with historical data in the hands of Director Phil Rosen and his staff of research workers. The story takes up the life of the Great Emancipator as a boy and carries it through to his assassination, said to be the longest role ever enacted for the screen.

"When a Man's a Man," a Harold Bell Wright story which is about to be filmed by Principal Pictures, has been prepared for the screen by Agnes Leahy who has added one more accomplishment to her already long list of picture qualifications by so doing. Having served as a cutter, assistant director and research worker, Miss Leahy was acting

Essaying the Visualization of the Musical Classic

Charles Wakefield Cadman, eminent American opera and song composer, is composing a musical script for Goethe's "Faust" (not Gounod's opera story), simultaneously with the construction of the film script by Ferdinand Earle, the artist-director who will produce it.

Earle thus rests faith in American talent for the difficult task of resurrecting the ancient Gregorian Chant music, which he considers the fitting atmospheric vehicle to accompany his screen version of the medieval philosophical drama.

"Cadman's numbers are being written into the script, and the film will be directed with the structural requirements of the music in view," declares Earle.

"However, a distinctive experiment is to be tried whereby the tyranny of the 8 and 16 rythmic measure will be more or less avoided. A new type of musical composition more closely fitted to the requirements of the varying tempo of screen drama will be created."

"Prose music" is Ferdinand Earle's name for the new type of composition. He explains:

"This new music will have the relation of prose to metrical, rhymed poetry. That is a wider freedom and tonal plasticity and a more poignant response to sudden emotional visissitudes and modulations."

To prove this contention that the screen is to be the greatest medium of artistic and dramatic expression, Ferdinand Earle is constructing his entire script according to the laws of a sonata or symphony, thereby obtaining undreamed of unity.

In order that the musical score for Goethe's complete "Faust" will be as novel an radical as the rest of the production, th Earle studios in Hollywood are working o a new orchestra instrument. This instr ment is expected completely to dominat an entire episode of the picture, and, it i hoped, rise above the combined brass i struments of the orchestra.

"Motion pictures bring together all th arts," affirms this movie director wh studied under Whistler and Bouguereau "They may necessitate other new musica instruments to attain the supreme height of dramatic eloquence!"

One novelty on which the composer Cad man and the artist Earle are working is a orchestral background for an entire episod devoid of any hint of melody or figuration– "a complex minor chord sustained until th dramatic action calls for a modulation (fo instance into the major key), thereby creat ing a profound subconscious effect."

Another feature will be choral work t accompany certain scenes, in conjunctio with the orchestra.

Cadman's "Oriental Rhapsody" and othe orchestral pieces written for Ferdinan Earle's "The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyan," have been played by many American sym phony orchestras—though the picture ha not yet been publicly shown.

Cadman often rendered his Rubaiyat com positions on the piano during his recent tou of the United States. They have also been published for the pianoforte by a Boston music publisher.

Like the Rubaiyat music, the score fo Earle's screen version of Goethe's complete "Faust" will constitute intregal concert numbers, and will be published as well fo th e piano.

WEDS MUSIC TO MOTION PICTURE

Ferdinand Earle, American painter and poet who has begun studying motion pictures for eight years, believes music can be an integral part with the pictorial art of the screen

Earle produced a film edition of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, a motion poem produced as a motion painting, which will soon be released.

His second cinema opus, to which he has now devoted 18 months of research and preparation, will be the "Faust" of Goethe, with its wealth of human interest, its immortal love drama, and its medieval philosophy.

Here are the ways in which Ferdinand Earle is weaving music into his motion tapestry of drama and art:

1. Old Gregorian Chant revived by Charles Wakefield Cadman.
2. Musical score written into Earle's film script.
3. Motion picture ..scenario constructed on plan of symphony.
4. A prose music, discarding conventional measures, for instant response to emotional changes on the screen
5. Subsconcious emotional reactions obtained by orchestral background minus melody.
6. Choral work in conjunction with orchestra.
7. New orchestra instrument invent to obtain musical effects hitherto impossible.

COURAGE!

By Eric Mayne

There was a man—in the olden times, who—
"Slew a lion,
In a pit,
On a snowy day."

* * *

A great instance of the Courage that conquers.

* * *

A great inspiration for us today.

* * *

Courage does not falter at the fierceness of the opposition.

* * *

Courage is not deterred by the disadvantage of the battle-ground.

In the calendar of Courage there is no "weather permitting."

Courage is our greatest asset,—if we lose that we are in danger of losing everything.

* * *

Of all weaknesses the most dangerous is fear.

* * *

We need Courage to overcome the conviction that we are a failure.

* * *

Without Courage our success may be the first step to failure.

* * *

It requires Courage to face the charge of being a "piker" when we are only trying to live within our income.

* * *

The more we know of life the greater our need of Courage in facing its problems.

* * *

It requires Courage to marry, often greater Courage to remain single.

* * *

There are times when we must have Courage to walk alone, but, let us be sure we are in good company.

* * *

We cannot have too much Courage, if we know how to use it wisely.

* * *

There are times when we can help our fellow-men more with Courage than with sympathy.

* * *

Courage to do right will save us from fear of the conscience that makes cowards.

AN INTENDED MISTAKE

An amusing incident is related about the time when Garry Odell, well-known comedian and character artist, left the vaudeville stage and set out to launch himself actively in moving pictures. Finding it rather difficult to get an interview with different producers, Odell finally struck upon a novel idea. In his pocket he had the card of a popular film star. As he entered one of the studios in Hollywood he handed the card to the man at the door, asking for an interview with the producer. The card was taken to the film chief and immediately Odell was allowed to enter his private office. As the producer recognized him as not being the man whose name was on the card he said:

"Are you Mr. So and So?"

"Why no," replied the actor. "My name is Odell."

The card was shown to the actor who explained that he had sent the card in by mistake. However, he got his interview and, better than that, a good part in the producer's picture.

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1923

DIRECTOR WILL RUN SCHOOL OF ACTING

Hollywood is to have a school f motion picture acting con-cted by a director now pro-cing special photoplays for e of the largest companies in e industry.

This director is Rowland V. e, whose latest film is Booth rkington's Pulitzer Prize vel, "Alice Adams," and who ce has signed with Fox for e making of a series of ecials. The first of these is to a photoplay of Gouverneur rris's short story, "You Can't t Away With It."

Mr. Lee announced his project the Fox studios this week. st briefly, its idea is the find-g of actors and actresses of ility from the ranks of play-s who, through circumstances, ve not had the opportunity of owing such abilities as they y have; and the development these abilities through actual rk before the camera. In the urse of this training under the rector, the actors will receive e salaries the importance of eir parts carries.

It has long been Mr. Lee's ntention that such dearth of tion picture talent as exists due more to inertia on the rt of the makers of pictures ther than to actual lack of ility among those aspiring to t.

"Nothing is more natural than e human inclination to depend on the tried-and-true," said r. Lee. "But it is obvious, as ayers mount upward toward ardom, other players must me in to fill the gap.

"In and about the studios of ollywood I believe there are rmous resources of motion cture talent, undeveloped—ayers who can be made com-tent with a careful course in e fundamentals of acting. hey are victims of the ques-on 'What have you done?' and e necessary reply 'I haven't d much experience.' A record achievement is demanded and portunity for gaining it de-ed.

"Under such conditions, the lution is a deliberate making opportunity for the unknown d promising player. The hool I have in mind is an in-rmal arrangement by which I n discover new personalities d guide them to proficiency y personal instruction, experi-nce in playing under my direc-on, and counsel upon the indi-idual's efforts to better him-lf in his career."

POPULAR ACTORS JOIN IN BIG REALTY DEAL

Courtenay Foote and Conway Tearle are the latest screen celebrities to realize the possibilities of Los Angeles real estate, and, after careful consideration, they have decided on Ventura Boulevard as having the greatest possibilities of all. This promises to be the principal boulevard north inasmuch as the City Planning Commission has decided to widen it to one hundred feet, the Pacific Electric having secured a franchise to operate street cars on it.

Messrs. Foote and Tearle have selected thirty-two acres just west of Sherman Way, part of it being an apricot orchard, which is now being subdivided into large residence and business footage.

PRE-WAR BASIS OF PROSPERITY IS BACK

William De Mille returned this week from New York City, where he has been engaged for the past six weeks in the cutting and editing of his last production for Paramount, "Only Thirty Eight," and co-operating with his scenarist, Clara Beranger, in the preparation of the script for his next picture, "Spring Magic," adapted from Edward Knoblock's stage success, "The Faun."

Of unusual interest to the film industry is the business report that was brought back by Mr. De Mille. In a statement issued from the Famous Players-Lasky studio, he said:

"The motion picture theatre reflects largely the conditions of the other businesses and industries of the United States. With photoplay houses everywhere reporting a return to pre-war basis, signs of a good year to come are unmistakable."

Due to the enthusiastic reception of "Grumpy" and "Only Thirty-eight" on the part of critics and audiences everywhere, Mr. De Mille is at present the cynosure of attention from directors and producers. He is distinctly the creator of the photoplay with the deft touch of reality and human feeling. In "Spring Magic" he departs even further from the beaten path of photoplay production. An unusually strong cast will take part in the picture. The starting date has been set for June 20.

Truman Van Dyke has been engaged for the role of Leandre in Rex Ingram's Metro picturization of "Scaramouche."

AUTHOR VIES WITH FILM STARS IN BUYING REALTY

Actors, actresses and other members of the motion picture profession who have been causing no little amount of notice within recent months in Hollywood because their large real estate investments are not going to have anything on Fred Kennedy Myton, the famous author of screen stories, who has just added to his string of real estate purchases with a beautiful bungalow of French architecture in West Hollywood. After his day's work at the United Studios, where he is preparing the continuity for Maurice Tourneur's forthcoming picture, Myton can be found puttering around the yard of his new home, adding numerous shrubs, fruit trees and otherwise beautifying the place.

MRS. REID STARTS DOPE WAR IN FRISCO

At the urgent request of the San Francisco Center Club, an organization of 2400 professional and club women, Mrs. Wallace Reid left here Thursday night for San Francisco to launch her national crusade against "dope" in the Bay City.

A number of Los Angeles dramatic critics and others prominent in the industry went with her to attend the world premiere of "Human Wreckage," Mrs. Reid's anti-narcotic film which will play an engagement at the Century Theatre in San Francisco.

A committee of club women and Acting Mayor Ralph McLaren met Mrs. Reid at the train on Friday morning. They escorted her to the city hall where a conference was held in regard to the local campaign to be launched.

The opening gun in the crusade was fired Friday afternoon when the Center Club gave a big tea in Mrs. Reid's honor at which she spoke. City and government officials and men and women prominent in the affairs of the city were present to meet the guest of honor.

Mrs. Reid will make a brief talk at the Century Theatre, and on Tuesday she will speak again before the Business and Professional Women's Club which has arranged a special luncheon in her honor.

The attendance of local dramatic critics at the premiere of "Human Wreckage" has been arranged in view of the interest both locally and nationally in this unusual film. The picture is booked to be shown in Los Angeles in three weeks.

NEW FILM CONCERN GETS UNIVERSAL WELCOME

Within a very few hours after the first announcement of the organization of the Delbert E. Davenport Productions was published last week, the members of this new firm were given cause for renewed confidence in their venture as a result of not only the numerous congratulations received from well-wishers among friends, but from releasing companies and state's rights buyers with offers of handling whatever output was planned. It does not often occur that the release people seek the untried products advertised in advance as innovations; on the contrary, the rule is that the producer is compelled to seek the release.

Perhaps the most interest has been aroused over the promise of a revolutionary change in screen technique in the forthcoming photoplay features to be made by the Davenport company and it seems those who have sought additional information relative to this phase of the venture were impressed so favorably that they have started widespread comment on it.

There is no doubt the proposed attempts to prove that an improved technique is possible will be watched with the keenest interest since the matter of making the cinema an art capable of standing on its own legs, so to speak, has been a subject for much serious discussion for the last several years.

It is understood that one of the foremost directors in the business at present, recently predicted that this new technique would come from some one not now prominent in the motion picture industry as a producer and W. E. Burnham, general manager of the Delbert E. Davenport Productions, is most optimistic in his claims that Mr. Davenport's scheme in this regard will accomplish all most any one could expect in the way of perfecting the manner of presentation of literature as a comprehensible and memorable visualization.

It is the plan of the Davenport company to start actual production on the first of a series of six feature pictures within two or three weeks and an all-star cast will be selected for each story.

Winifred Dunn, Metro's 24-year-old scenario editor, has completed the screen adaptation of "Held to Answer," by Peter Clark McFarlane. It will serve as the second of Metro's new series of all-star specials.

KIRKWOOD IS HURT IN RIDE ON A TRICK NAG

James Kirkwood has enjoyed a lengthy period of success on both the stage and the screen, but he came near to putting an end to his career recently when he gave his horse the wrong cue during the filming of "The Eagle's Feather," Metro's new all-star special.

It happened on location, 350 miles from the studio, where Edward Sloman was directing a big cattle stampede for this unusual story of the West. Although 4000 steers appear in this stampede, luckily for Kirkwood, the accident occurred when only a couple of hundred of the cattle were being used for some close-up scenes.

The actor was on horseback, quietly standing guard over the herd, according to the action. The cattle had milled around until they were largely out of range of the camera, and at Sloman's command, the cowboys began herding them back in focus. The shouts of the men and the unusualness of the proceedings excited the animals. When the leader broke into a run they all followed suit, charging down on Kirkwood, who was directly in their path.

Kirkwood, being an expert horseman, slapped his mount with the reins to get out of their way, not knowing that the animal had been trained to fall and pretend to be dead when so struck.

True to its training, the horse did a leaping fall.

Kirkwood did a flying broad jump over the animal's head, spraining his ankle and skinning his knees and shoulders as a result. A shout of terror arose from the director, but fortunately, the cattle divided and left a little dusty lane for the man and horse as they swept by!

VIOLA AND SISTER TO CO-PLAY AFTER DECADE

Viola Dana and Edna Flugrath, film stars who are sisters in real life, will be sisters on the screen when they start work at the Metro studio in Miss Dana's newest starring picture, "To Whom It May Concern," a mystery story by Rita Weiman, which Oscar Apfel will direct.

This picture will mark Miss Flugrath's return to the American screen after an absence of ten years, during which she has been featured in productions directed by her husband, Harold Shaw, in England and other European countries. It is also the first time in the same period of years that she has appeared in a picture with Miss Dana, the last time being when they were child actresses at the Edison studio in New York.

MAURICE MURPHY WINS JUDGE'S HIGH PRAISE

Maurice Murphy, eight-year old film starlet, who has just completed an important child part in "The Self-Made Wife," in which he plays the part of Tim, Jr., sharing stellar honors with Ethel Grey Terry, was declared by Judge Ben Lindsay, of the juvenile court, Denver, Colo., at a recent banquet given in his honor in Los Angeles, an ideal type of American boyhood, a distinction which Master Murphy may well be proud of. The youngster has played important parts in numerous screen successes and in addition to his achievements in this direction he is a proficient pianist, being able to play Chopin and Mendelssohn with the same ease that he does simpler American selection.

STORY IS PROTECTED BY UNWRITTEN LAW

An interesting angle of the unwritten law of one of filmland's big producers concerning the disclosing of inside information on a new picture, was uncovered when an attempt was made to find out the story and the details of Cecil De Mille's production, "The Ten Commandments."

Clarence H. Geldert, a veteran character actor who has had a part in nearly all of De Mille's big productions, and who has been cast in the role of the High Priest of Egypt in the forthcoming "The Ten Commandments," was asked what the story of the Decalogue was like. He only smiled and said, "When Mr. De Mille has a big production he gathers his principals around him in his study, closes the doors, and reads the story. What is said behind those doors is a closed book to the outside world. There is an unwritten law that whatever is said at the reading of the play is under no circumstances to be repeated, and I do not know an instance when that confidence has been betrayed. But I can tell you this, that I have never heard a more intensely gripping story, nor one conceived on a more gigantic scale . I think it will be one of the most magnificent yet attempted."

Walker Starts "The Worm"

Johnnie Walker has begun work on "The Worm," under the direction of William Worthington. Mr. Walker purchased the screen rights to "The Worm" from Charles Ray. The story is by Frederick Stowers, and deals with the romance and adventure of a young man who is in the employ of the owner of an antique shop where antiques are manufactured while you wait. Mr. Walker believes that in "The Worm" he has one of the finest possibilities of the year. Mildred June is playing the leading feminine role opposite Walker with an all-star cast in support.

LLOYD IS KNOCKED OUT FOR THE COUNT OF 335

The life of an actor is not all beer and skittles.

Lloyd Hughes, among others, will vouch for that.

In a little encounter with Walter Long in "The Huntress," which is being produced for First National in the California High Sierras, Hughes failed to see any beer or skittles in being thrown out of a cabin door, especially when the scenario calls for a collision with a rock.

Long, who plays the deep-dyed villain in this First National picture, followed the scenario to the letter. He picked up Hughes, and with all his might, flung the popular juvenile through the door.

Now, it is not the intention of scenario writers, or directors, to have their players injured in the rough and tumble mix-ups such as the one in which Long and Hughes take part but, nevertheless, "accidents will happen even in the best regulated motion picture families."

And an accident happened this time to Hughes. He came through the cabin door with a force just a little too realistic for comfort. He struck his head on the rock, as scheduled, and he took the count—not the count of ten, for any first-grade schoolboy could have counted up to 335 before Lloyd returned to consciousness.

CARMEL MYERS TO BE "VAMP" IN "PONJOLA"

Carmel Myers, noted screen "vamp," has been engaged by Sam E. Rork to play an important role in "Ponjola,' a James Young Production for First National, filming of which is expected to begin this week.

In "Ponjola," which is a picturization of Synthia Stockley's famous story of South African life, Miss Myers will appear again in a vampish part—that of "Loochia," the attractive, alluring and seductive wife of a hardened gold miner.

The talented Carmel was chosen for this particular part because of her most excellent work in similar roles in recent big productions, among which were "The Famous Mrs. Fair," in which she enacted the role of "Angie Brice," in "My Unmarried Wife," and in "A Society Sensation," and a score of others.

Now Play Fits Hair

Douglas Fairbanks, it seems, possesses a luxuriant growth of hair these days. In fact, there are those who say that Doug possesses tresses, but be that as it may. At any rate, when the matter was called to his attention, Doug offered the following explanation: "You see, I grew my hair to fit the pirate picture, then I didn't like the idea of the pirate picture, so I had to find a picture to fit my hair, which is why I'm doing 'The Thief of Bagdad."

JIMMY AUBREY IS BOSS UNDER NEW CONTRACT

ENJOYABLE AFFAIR IS STAGED BY RELIABLE

One of the most enjoyable meetings that has been held by the Reliable Photoplayers Association since its inception nearly two years ago, took place last Tuesday evening in the club rooms of the Assistant Directors' Association at 5540 Hollywood Boulevard. After important business matters had been transacted by the organization, several members entertaining with songs, dances and recitations. Miss Betty Jean, manager of the association, received considerable applause for a vocal selection. An Irish jig was given by the Lowe twins and their parents entertained with an original gypsy dance numbers. Several duets were given by Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Court and the last number on the program was a recitation, "Why They Named Him McGinnis," which was given by Arthur Stuart and proved very enjoyable.

Hines Is Injured

Johnny Hines, who is being starred by the Warner Brothers in the screen version of George M. Cohan's stage play, "Little Johnny Jones," is taking a forced rest as the result of an injury he sustained during the filming of the picture. He received a deep cut about the hand when some thick glass overhead worked loose of its frame and fell.

Movie aspirants, attention! ou who may have a bright idea or a scenario. Jot it down on aper and send it to Charles R. eeling, film producer, in Hollywood. Mr. Seeling made a startling announcement this week when he stated that he would ay $1,000 for the best idea for motion picture that is submitted to him during the next hirty days. He explains he loesn't want full-length scenrios, but simply good ideas for tories which can be successfully developed by his scenario staff into screen material.

He says the ideas submitted should be expressed in not more han two or three hundred words n explanation. Mr. Seeling's ddress is 6040 Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, and his star is "Big Boy" Williams, who will appear in the picture from which the best idea submitted to him is developed.

The contest will close July 15, so you who would care to enter and reap the neat little sum offered the winner, get busy and send in your ideas.

YOUNG PHOTOGRAPHER IS WINNING RECOGNITION

J. Anthony Bruno, young and popular photographer of Hollywood, is celebrating the first anniversary of his present business this week.

Mr. Bruno came here from Boston three years ago to enter the motion picture business, which ambition he still cherishes. For two years he worked in various studios as cameraman and still photographer, also putting on the grease paint on many occasions when work in his regular line could not be secured. However, he grew tired of the uncertainties of getting steady employment with others and went into business for himself.

He was practically without funds when he opened his studio at 6412 Hollywood Boulevard, where he is still located and today he enjoys a big prosperous business from both the public and the motion picture profession, but he has succeeded in winning this recognition only after a hard struggle in which he had many obstacles to surmount.

Mr. Bruno makes a specialty of making photographs of photoplayers for use in the offices of casting directors, he having made an exhaustive study of the requirements of those who select players from judging their photographs.

MISSION WILL START SECOND PICTURE SOON

Announcement was given this week by Norman Walker, business manager for the Mission Film Corporation, which company has just completed the filming of the first of its series of six special feature pictures, "The Barefoot Boy," that filming of the second picture will commence within the next two weeks, or as soon as their initial subject is shipped to New York for release.

Each of the company's pictures, it is said, is to be produced with an all-star cast, including many of the screen's foremost artists. In "The Barefoot Boy" the company is presenting sixteen artists of recognized prominence and those who have had a chance to view the film declare it promises to be one of the company's greatest cinematic achievements since joining the production field a short two years ago. Among those who appear in the picture are John Bowers, Marjorie Daw, Sylvia Breamer, Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton, George MacDaniel, Otis Harlan, Virginia True Boardman, little Frankie Lee, Harry Todd and others.

The direction of the picture is credited to David Kirkland, who has made many successful stories for the screen, and David Abel was in charge of the photography.

The title and details of the company's second production are expected to be announced shortly.

Days of Finishing

Constance Talmadge has finished work in "Dulcy," her latest comedy. Norma Talmadge will have completed "Purple Pride" (formerly known as "Ashes of Vengeance") by June 15. And Buster Keaton has completed the editing of "Three Ages," his latest comedy which will soon be released.

Henry is Progressing

John Henry, son of a well-known Boston family and heir to his father's millions, who recently came to Hollywood to make a name for himself in motion pictures, has finished his work in the current Lasky production, "A Gentleman of Leisure," starring Jack Holt, which Joseph Henaberry is directing, and he is now being seriously considered for work in other forthcoming Lasky pictures.

POLA STARTS HER 3rd FILM FOR PARAMOUNT

Production started this week at the Paramount West Coast Studio on Pola Negri's starring vehicle, "The Spanish Dancer," a Herbert Brenon production which was adapted by June Mathis and Beulah Marie Dix from the book, "Don Caesar de Bazan." One of the strongest feature casts ever assembled will essay the principal roles in the picture, with Antonio Moreno featured and the supporting cast headed by Wallace Beery, Kathlyn Williams, Gareth Hughes and Adolphe Menjou. Others in the cast are Edward Kipling, Dawn O'Day, Robert Brower and Charles A. Stevenson.

Despite the fact that this is to be a most colorful picture, with a marvelous assortment of clothes for Miss Negri and unusual costumes for the supporting players, the opening scenes took place in a prison dungeon. Producer Brenon arranged a startling lighting scheme, with shadow effects that are said to be an innovation on the screen.

Commenting on the picture, Mr. Brenon said: "'The Spanish Dancer' should afford Miss Negri the greatest opportunity of her career. The selection of this story is the result of an exhaustive search for a vehicle befitting the genius of Paramount's great emotional actress. In my opinion, it is the kind of picture the American people will love—a high type of romantic drama. It will be a lavish spectacle of beauty and grace serving as a background for an inspiring theme."

EULALIE ENTERTAINS CAST AT NOVEL LUNCH

, Eulalie Jensen, now enacting a featured part in George D. Baker's "The Magic Skin," recently entertained Director Wallace Worsley, Ernest Torrence and others of her associates in the production of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," in which screen classic she recently essayed an important role, with a gypsy luncheon.

The affair was held at the Universal ranch and Miss Jensen wore the costume of a gypsy street dancer such as she appears in in the big "U" special. The luncheon was served in the open from a company "chuck" wagon, but the food was especially prepared by a well-known firm of caterers.

Following the completion of her work in "The Magic Skin," Miss Jensen will rest a few days at Big Bear before resuming her activities at the studios.

STUDIOS COMPETE WITH SCHOOLS, SAYS MARY

Motion picture studios in and around Los Angeles have, within the last few years, taken on the dignity of institutions of learning, competing, you might say, with leading colleges and schools of the country, according to Mary Pickford.

"Scarcely a week passes," she says, "but what students from some well-established university or other seat of knowledge apply for admission to some one of the studios for the purpose of studying styles of architecture or modes of life and customs of some foreign country which is being conspicuously featured in a photoplay."

A group of students from the Architectural Department of the University of Southern California spent a whole afternoon this week making sketches of Mary's sets for "The Street Singer" at the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios, and also preparing renderings of the Robin Hood sets, as well as those now being constructed for Doug's new picture, "The Thief of Bagdad."

The Architectural Club of Los Angeles, two hundred and fifty strong, descended upon the studio the day after the university students had made their visit, and much valuable information was gathered, according to a letter of thanks from Lloyd Rally, secretary of the club.

The largest party to be accorded admission included more than two hundred "honor pupils" from the Pasadena high school.

In addition to this, requests have been made for permission to photograph the sets with stereoscopic cameras in order that the pictures obtained may be included in the historical instruction courses of the grade and high schools of Los Angeles. All of which would seem to add a new dignity and a hitherto unexploited value to motion pictures.

Ince Applies Early

Thomas H. Ince has made application for membership number one in the Southern California Jockey Club, according to Dick Ferris, equestrian impresario de luxe, who is the major domo of the syndicate of local financiers who are launching the new horse racing track at Culver City. Actual construction work is to commence at an early date, and many of the cinema celebrities are becoming stockholders in the enterprise.

Albert James, who has been business manager for the Jacques Tyrol Productions, Inc., for some time, has resigned his position.

RUPERT HUGHES RETURNS TO START NEW FILM

Rupert Hughes, author, composer and cinema director returned Saturday from a prolonged Eastern trip. He came home via San Francisco, where Mrs. Hughes met him and they motored down the coast.

The author, whose ideas are always vivid and frequently so radical as to be subject to argument, has aroused a storm of controversy on this trip. His comments about marriage, men and women, and also about "Souls for Sale," his latest motion picture, have created more than a little flurry among critics and the press.

It is announced out at Goldwyn's that he will begin preparations for his next picture immediately, although the picture itself is not as yet officially announced. Rumor has it that he will do a film called "Law Against Law," which is a study of divorce, and should prove of exceptional interest under the Hughes handling.

MORANTI COMPANY GETS REST DURING EDITING

The Milburn Moranti All-Star Comedy Company who are making a series of eighteen two-reel situation comedies for the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., are taking a two weeks vacation while the first three comedies are being cut and titled.

Eddie Barry, one of the stars of the Moranti Company, is taking a two weeks trip to Yellowstone Park.

Milburn Moranti is visiting San Francisco, his old home, which he hasn't seen since the fire there.

Helen Kesler, the leading lady of the Milburn Moranti Comedy Company, is taking a couple of weeks recreation with her folks.

Joe Hane is not dead, he is only buried in film. Joe is spending his vacation in the cutting room, cutting the first three of the Moranti Comedies.

Carew's Future Assured

Having completed his work as Svengali in the Richard Walton Tully production of "Trilby," Arthur Edmund Carew is now negotiating with two different producers for leading character roles in forthcoming productions. It is interesting to note that before being cast for the role of Svengali, Carew concentrated his histrionic efforts almost entirely on straight roles, gaining but very little recognition as a character artist. He has always been, however, an earnest student of make-up and when he was offered the strong emotional characterization in "Trilby," he accepted without hesitancy. His work in the picture has been of such high quality as to bring him the personal praise of both Mr. Tully and James Young, who is director of the picture. Svengali is conceded to be without question the greatest work of Carew's screen career.

BACK FROM VAUDEVILLE FOR NEW FILM CONQUEST

Bert Howard, who has just finished his second consecutive season with the Orpheum Circuit, has decided to remain in Hollywood permanently and re-enter film work. He has had considerable experience in motion pictures, playing important roles in a number of screen classics of yesteryear, and in addition has written several successful photoplays which were produced by some of the first picture companies. He will again start a double bombardment of the studios, as an actor and as a scenarist. As a vaudeville entertainer Howard was a distinct success and enjoyed wide-spread popularity. He played big-time only, with Orpheum, Keith and other national circuits. It is his desire to duplicate this success in films, and toward this end he is working "fast and furious," stepping out after all of our renowned knights of the casting departments.

ALL-STAR CAST TO BE CHOSEN FOR YANK CLASSIC

With Bernard McConville's screen version of "Cape Cod Folks" now completed and ready for filming, preparations are being gotten under way by Irving G. Thalberg for the making of this old New England classic as one of the biggest sea spectacles ever attempted in motion pictures. It will be a Louis B. Mayer special and will have a carefully selected cast of real all-star calibre.

While no definite announcement has been made on the subject as yet, it is understood that the title "Cape Cod Folks" is to be discarded in favor of "Women Who Wait" as the name of the picture. Interested in seeing the New England coast presented before the world in its full courageous activity, the Master Mariners of Gloucester have volunteered to supervise the technical end of the sea episodes to insure the correctness of every detail. The Bureau of Fisheries in Washington also has offered full co-operation in the making of the scenes.

Philippe to Aid Charity

Little Philippe deLacy, who was rescued by a Red Cross nurse at Verdun during the World War and later adopted by her and brought to America, is to act as one of the train-bearers at the mock wedding, which is to be staged at the Ambassador hotel as part of the entertainment programme being given by society matrons of Los Angeles for the benefit of the "war chest" of the Disabled Veterans of the World War. For the past year or so little Philippe has been appearing in motion pictures and he has just finished the part of Mary Pickford's youngest brother in her current picture, "The Street Singer."

WORKING GIRL IS WINNER OF BIG STAR ROLE

In accordance with a plan expressed a long time ago when "Only a Shopgirl" was in the making, the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation this week selected a Chicago working girl, and will send her to California to appear in motion pictures. The girl's name is Betty Arnold, and she was selected as the prettiest and best film type in the entire city and its outlying districts from among thousands of girls who were considered for the opportunity.

When "Only a Shopgirl" was being made, C. B. C. officials were so interested in the fact that a shopgirl had been considered by Charles Blaney sufficiently interesting to be made the heroine of a play—a play which had been popular for a quarter of a century—that they sent broadcast a notice to exchanges and exhibitors handling the picture that if they would co-operate in selecting a girl, preferably a shopgirl, but positively a working girl, that girl would be given an opportunity for a screen career.

The request also had a two-fold idea behind it—the first to satisfy a longing for better things in some girl who had been cast in life to work in a shop, as was the case with Mame Mulvey in "Only a Shopgirl;" the second an expression of an idea that has long been held by Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn of C. B. C.—the idea that one panacea for the ever-increasing salaries of present day stars is to create more and more stars to compete with them. There has been much controversy of late regarding remedies for the high salaries of stars and production in general, and it is the opinion of many men in the industry that if they can prove they do not need the present big stars, but can create in the public affection a place for new stars, or for the generally all-around well-balanced casts, several of those now on the top rings will look around and realize they must meet certain demands, with the result that salaries will become more normal all around.

"Spring Magic" Soon

Wednesday, June 20, has been set as the starting date for William deMille's next production for Paramount, "Spring Magic." The screen play was adapted by Clara Beranger from Edward Knoblock's famous stage success, "The Faun." Perhaps the strongest cast ever assembled for a William deMille picture will take the leading roles in this production. The complete list will be ready for announcement next week.

MARY COMPLETES FILM AND GOES ON VACATION

Mary Pickford's new costume production which has been made under the direction of Ernst Lubitsch, is completed. At least, the final shots have been made and the star may now rest from acting, although she will continue to supervise the cutting and editing.

To celebrate the event Doug and Mary yesterday set forth on a four-day vacation, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Casce of New York, Maurice Cleary, Sally James Farnham, famed sculptress, Edward Knoblock and other close friends. They will camp on the beach somewhere between Los Angeles and San Diego, keeping the exact location a secret, to avoid the eye of curious star-gazers.

Mary and Doug have been entertaining professional and other celebrities all week long at their studio. Among those who have visited the stars have been Joseph Schildkraut, the star of "Lillom" on the stage, who also played the male lead in Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm"; Theda Bara, and the Princess Borghese, who, with Charles Chaplin as escort, visited the studio early in the week.

A delegation of Chinese diplomats and statesmen was also entertained by Doug and Mary last Friday.

BORZAGE SELECTS TRIO TO PLAY ONE BIG ROLE

Director Frank Borzage, starting his new picture for Arthur H. Jacobs, has achieved something unusual by engaging three persons to play the same character at widely different ages, but with something which stamps them as the same identical person of the play.

"Usually such a trio of players are matched by camera craft, make-up and so forth,' says Borzage, "but in this case we have found three distinct individuals to match, in fact, it is with startling realism that we see them playing the same person on the screen."

He goes on to say: "We had a difficult time to find the players, having cast Wm. Collier, Jr., for the grown lover, a principal part. Then we worked down, selecting Frankie Lee as the boy, and finally hitting upon little Bruce Guerin to do the baby boy role, mainly because of his broad adaptability of character.

The rest of the all-star cast includes Myrtle Stedman, Mary Philbin, Josef Swickard, Frederick Truesdell, Aggie Herring, J. Farrell MacDonald and others.

ROOSEVELT OF JAPAN DISCUSSES AMERICAN FILMS

Tatasaburo Yamamoto, wealthy Japanese coal importer and politician, who is known among Americans in the far East as "The Roosevelt of Japan," recently visited Los Angeles, and saw the taking of a motion picture for the first time in his life.

Like the letter-carrier who spent his vacation by taking a walking tour, Mr. Yamamoto was eager to see the filming of but one picture—a feature that showed life in the Orient. This was "Thundergate," a picture with a Chinese setting, which is being made at the United Studios by First National.

"I chose to see 'Thundergate,'" the Roosevelt of Japan said, "because I was curious to see how near an American company could come to correctly portraying Oriental life and characteristics.

"I was amazed at the magnificence of the 'Thundergate' settings and the care that must have been taken to include details that one would expect to be overlooked."

Mr. Yamamoto arrived at the studio during the taking of scenes in a Chinese Inn. The setting was designed after a famous—or infamous—resort in Canton which is known to travellers in the Orient as one of the most disreputable hang-outs in Asia for the riff raff from all corners of the globe.

As soon as the Japanese visitor arrived on the stage where the picture is being taken, he immediately recognized the setting. "I have been in that Inn," he exclaimed. It was then explained to him that the setting was designed under the supervision of Thomas Gubbins, who had spent many years of his life in China, and who designed the inn from his recollections of the famous Canton dive.

Mr. Yamamoto was accompanied by his wife. They are visiting the United States on a semi-business and pleasure trip. Mr. Yamamoto who is one of the most influential business men of the Nipponese Kingdom has spent considerable time in China and is familiar with every aspect of life in that country.

"Such a picture as 'Thundergate,'" the Japanese declared, "will have a wonderful reception wherever it is shown in the Orient. Both in China and Japan the majority of pictures shown are films made in America. We naturally like to see pictures laid in our own country and a feature such as this one, will do much to further popularize American pictures in my country.

"The Japanese are especially critical in regard to pictures showing Oriental life. The average American producer does not seem to get the proper Oriental atmosphere into his pictures. He presents his ideas of what he thinks the Orient should be, not as it really is. From what I can see of 'Thundergate' and the fact that your technical advisors are all men who are familiar with that part of the world, I can see that you are going to make a picture that will ring true in every detail."

"Thundergate" is being filmed by First National on a most elaborate scale. Nothing is being overlooked to make it the finest picture depicting Oriental life that was ever made. Joseph De Grasse is directing it. Among the film celebrities in the cast are Owen Moore, Sylvia Breamer, Tully Marshall, Virginia Brown Faire and Robert McKim.

SCHENCK ENGAGES FOUR NEW MEGAPHONE MASTERS

Four new directors have been engaged by Joseph M. Schenck for his three stars—Norma and Constance Talmadge and Buster Keaton.

Frances Marion and Chester Franklin will direct Norma in her next picture, which will be "Dust of Desire," an African story from the novel by Margaret Peterson.

Victor Heerman has been engaged to direct Constance Talmadge in "The Dangerous Maid," a seventeenth century comedy-romance.

Jack Blystone will direct Buster's next comedy.

Miss Marion and Chester Franklin will succeed Frank Lloyd, who will head his own production force releasing his photoplays through Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Sidney Franklin will make his own pictures at the Warner Brothers studio, which his brother, Chester, is leaving in order to co-direct with Frances Marion.

FAVORITE OF YORE IS BACK IN FILM ONCE MORE

Mary Ruby, the former favorite leading lady and ingenue who, when stardom was within her grasp some five years ago, deserted the screen for a venture in matrimony, has returned to the silversheet. She has been engaged by Oscar Apfel, director of Metro, for a part in Viola Dana's new picture, "The Girl Who Dared," now in production. Mr. Apfel has formerly directed Miss Ruby.

In expressing his pleasure at having the opportunity of aiding Miss Ruby in re-establishing herself in pictures, Mr. Apfel said, "I am pleased to see Mary Ruby come back to the silent drama and know that it will be but a matter of months before she will again be recognized."

Charles G. Norris, the author of "Brass," recently viewed the film version of his brain child at a private presentation at the St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco.

BLANCHARD SELLS PART OF VAST HOLDINGS

After a long period of consideration, Fred W. "Daddy" Blanchard, friend of local artists and art student, has sold fifty acres of his vast estate on Cahuenga Avenue at Pass Avenue—also known as Dark Canyon—for subdivision purposes. The property is one of the best known parcels of land adjacent to Hollywood, as the two mansions owned by "Daddy" Blanchard and facing Cahuenga Avenue have been show-places along the highway into San Fernando valley for many years. Mr. Blanchard acquired this property many years ago. It is situated a thousand yards from the historical spot where General Pio Pico surrendered to General Fremont.

The Bedford Realty Company is the subdivider.

The plot will be known as Hollywood Manor.

Located two miles from the corner of Hollywood Boulevard and Cahuenga Avenue, Hollywood Manor is served with excellent trolley transportation.

According to Dudley Blanchard, who represents his father in the transaction, Riverside Drive, now under construction, will pass just north of the property, while the Weid canyon lake will be located one-half mile east.

Modified restrictions will be in force. A planning commission of three will pass on all structures.

The elder Blanchard has been planting thousands of trees along the property facing Cahuenga Avenue. This will be used as a recreation park for the new subdivision He will retain land immediately surrounding the houses he built.

FILM PAIR ANNOUNCE WEDDING AT A PARTY

Miss Frances Primm, a charter member of the Reliable Photoplayers' Association, was hostess to a large number of members of the association a few nights ago at her home in Hollywood, the occasion being in honor of Voyle Hazen, well known film artist, who is leaving for Chicago shortly to launch his own producing company. The surprise of the evening came in the announcement by Mr. Hazen and Miss Lucille Simpson that they have been married since May 31, none of the guests having previously heard of the wedding ceremony. Among these present were Sari Martin, Martha Lohman, Betty Jean, Frances Lupieu, Myrtle Stoetzel, Virginia McCandless, William Hartigan, Leon Gill, Lyle Hull, Harry Lewis, Ted Beeberg, Jack Norbeck, Robert Manning, George Lupieu and others.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Griffin Joins Warners

Shirley and Bernie to N. Y.

Shirley Mason is recovering rapidly from her recent major operation at the Good Samaritan Hospital. As soon as she is well enough, the clever little star and her talented director husband, B. J. Durning, will hop the rattler for New York, where William Fox is entrusting Durning with a big all-star special in recognition of his good work in the filming of Lincoln J. Carter's "The Eleventh Hour."

Valli Film Completed

Virginia Valli's latest starring vehicle for Universal, "The Lady of Quality," is nearing completion under the direction of Hobart Henley and gives promise of being one of the most important pictures in which she has appeared since achieving stardom. Prominent among those supporting her in this picture is Coy Watson, Jr., ten-year-old film starlet, whose clever work before the camera is winning him fame.

Blue in "Harbor Bar"

Monte Blue has been cast by Associated Authors for the leading male role in Thompson Buchanan's screen adaptation of "The Harbor Bar," Peter B. Kyne's sea story which will follow "Richard the Lion Hearted" on the Authors production schedule. Blue, who will play the role of a sea captain in the new production, recently has appeared in "Main Street," in Broadway Rose," with Mae Murray, and with the two Gish sisters in "The Two Orphans of the Storm."

Joins Magazine Staff

E. Fred Franklin, formerly advertising manager of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, has packed his brief case and departed from Palmer headquarters in Hollywood to take the position of advertising director and business manager of The Story World, Hollywood's national magazine for writers. Before joining the Palmer Corporation Mr. Franklin spent four years in the nationoal advertising agency field in Chicago. Mr. Franklin's place with the Palmer Corporation will be filled by Carrol B. Dotson, who was formerly Palmer representative in New York, before which he was with the Barton, Durstine and Osborne advertising agency.

Jane Starts Another

Jane Novak has begun work on her latest Chester Bennett Production, "The Lullaby," from the story by Lillian Ducey. Chester Bennett is directing the production personally, and is assisted by Douglas Dawson. William Garwood is production manager, and Jack MacKenzie is at the camera.

"Brass Bottle" in July

Maurice Tourneur's "The Brass Bottle," produced by M. C. Levee, will make its public appearance throughout the country starting July 15th. The fantastic comedy will have its world's premiere at the Balaban & Katz Theatre in Chicago, and plans are being made for an excursion of the entire cast of the picture to that city to attend the opening performance which will be made an auspicious occasion.

Another Starring Cast

One of the strongest casts that has ever been assembled for a motion picture has been announced by the Mission Film Corporation, which organization has started filming a feature drama entitled, "The Barefoot Boy." This is to serve as the first of a series of six special productions to be made by Mission during the year. The cast engaged for the picture includes such well-known screen celebrities as John Bowers, Marjorie Daw, Sylvia Breamer, Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton, Otis Harlan and others.

Muriel With Comedian

Baby Muriel MacCormac, four-year-old film starlet, has been engaged by Clyde Cook, William Fox comedian, to play an important part in his latest fun film yet untitled. This part was assigned to Baby Muriel after two other screen juveniles had failed to successfully execute the role. One of the recent screen successes in which Baby Muriel has won a great amount of praise for her histrionic talents and clever mannerisms is "Poor Men's Wives," in which she was seen as one of the "heavenly twins."

Torrence Forges Ahead

David Torrence is running his famous brother, Ernest, a close race for stellar honors in the photoplay world. Within recent weeks David has been playing some of the most important roles of his career, which gives every promise of bringing his name to the forefront soon. Of course, Ernest is by no means losing any of his popularity, his work in many notable film plays, including "The Covered Wagon," establishing him in the hearts of the picture public as one of the screen's greatest character artists.

New Series Started

"So This Is Hollywood!" the first of H. C. Witwer's second series of "Fighting Blood" stories has just been completed at the F. B. O. studios under the direction of Mal St. Clair. George O'Hara and Mary Beth Milford head the all-star cast which includes Louise Lorraine, Albert Cook and Kit Guard.

Mack Writes For Cook

Willard Mack, actor and author of "Kick In," "Tiger Rose" and 28 other famous Broadway successes, has just completed a two-reel comedy in which Clyde Cook, famous Australian comedian, will be featured by Producer Joseph M. Schenck. Clyde Cook is making his comedy at the Buster Keaton studio.

Langdon Ready For Camera

Harry Langdon, one of the most popular vaudeville headliners of the times, has closed his footlight career and has just arrived in Los Angeles where he will make his home and enter the field of silent comedy. During a recent vaudeville engagement in Los Angeles, Langdon signed a contract with Sol Lesser of Principal Pictures Corporation, covering a period of years, and calling for the making of six feature comedies each year.

Old Trails Cross

Adam Hull Shirk, recently engaged as Scenario Editor and Publicity Director for the Grand Studio enterprises, including at present comedies by Monty Banks, Sid Smith and Joe Rock, and later to be augmented by feature productions in both dramatic and comedy fields, was surprised to run across two actors who had years ago played in musical comedies for which he wrote the librettos and lyrics and which Ferris Hartman produced at Idora Park, Oakland, Calif. These gentlemen were Larry Bowes and Jack Henderson. Shirk had a pleasant time recalling the experiences of those days. Both Bowes and Henderson are talented comedians. One appears with Joe Rock, the other with Sid Smith productions. Snub Pollard, with Hal Roach, was another who appeared in Shirk's plays for which Edward Gage wrote the music.

Preparing for "Ruggles"

Preparations for the start of James Cruze's next Paramount production, "Ruggles of Red Gap," adapted by Thomas Geraghty from the book by Harry Leon Wilson, are going forward rapidly in New York, will return the first of next week to play a featured role.

Cannon With Warner

Raymond Cannon, who has just completed a role in "Mary of the Movies," a Wilnat production of life in Hollywood, has signed a contract with Warner Brothers by the terms of which he will undertake another of his enjoyable comedy characterizations in "The Printer's Devil." This Julian Josephson photoplay will be directed by William Beaudine and feature Wesley Barry.

Comes Another Star

"Doc" Soloman, all-round man has many reasons for walking on air these days. "Doc" recently became the proud father of a future star, Pauline Francis, so the Warners have elevated him to the management of the transportation department, in addition to his duties as property department superintendent. "Doc" derives his nickname from the fact that prior to the present prominence of the automobile, he was a veterinary surgeon.

Doty Scenarioizies "Gigi"

Douglas Z. Doty, Editor-in-Chief of the Advisory Bureau of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, has added another screen story to his list of continuity versions and adaptations. Mr. Doty's latest is the continuity and adaptation of "Gigi," which stars little Dinky Dean. Dinky, like Jackie Coogan, won his chance to star by playing with Charles Chaplin. He took an important supporting role in "The Pilgrim." Mr. Doty's screen writing career has been principally with Famous-Players Lasky.

Hiers is Homesick

Walter Hiers soon will return to Hollywood and the Lasky Studio. In a letter received this week from the comedy-star, he admitted a severe attack of "homesickness." Hiers left Los Angeles shortly after the completion of "Fair Week," in which he starred under the direction of Rob Wagner for Paramount, to make personal appearances in the East and Middle West. This week he has been seen in Toronto, Canada, and Minneapolis, Minn., where he is making appearances in connection with the showing of another of his starring pictures for Paramount, "Sixty Cents an Hour."

1,500 "EGYPTIANS" DELAY NOTED BISHOP

Bishop John J. Cantwell of the Catholic Diocese of Los Angeles and Monterey, returning from ministering the rite of Confirmation at Santa Maria, Calif., had the unique experience of being delayed on his return trip by 1500 Egyptians and Children of Israel.

Two special trans arriving at Guadalupe, Calif., with players for Cecil B. De Mille's forthcoming film version of "The Ten Commandments," checked for a few minutes the arrival of the regular passenger train to Los Angeles.

Learning of the purpose of the huge crowd Bishop Cantwell decided to take a later train and drove four miles westward to where Cecil De Mille had built a huge camp as a base for the taking of exterior scenes before a reproduction of the ancient city which Rameses II forced the Children of Israel to build. This forms a portion of the Biblical prologue which will relate practically the whole Book of Exodus, to the modern story evolved by Jeanie Macpherson.

"Mr. De Mille has a chance to make a great living, vital thing out of his Biblical prologue," said Bishop Cantwell. "We have had Biblical films before, but unfortunately they have been largely of a tableaux nature with but little real humanity. Mr. De Mille has recognized that the dramatic and human story of the Bible, the world's greatest Book, marches hand in hand with its religious significance. This interpretation of the Book of Exodus, contrasted with a modern tale of the operation of 'The Ten Commandments' today, has a chance to be perhaps the greatest piece of literature ever placed on the screen."

HELENE ANXIOUS TO GET BACK TO FILM WORK

Helene Chadwick wants to change an old axiom.

Remember that one about "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy?" Well, the fair Helene suggests this:

"All play and no work dulls the edge of pleasure."

Appearing recently for the first time in many months on the Goldwyn lot, she made straightway for the casting office and demanded work, following the decision in her suit against the picture company. According to Miss Chadwick:

"Playing and resting is all very well for a short time, but after a while everything seems the same. I just can't begin work soon enough. It's the contrast between play and work that brings real enjoyment."

SHORTER AND DIFFERENT PICTURES MORE NECESSARY THAN BIGGER AND BETTER ONES

Supplanting the time-worn phrase of "bigger and better pictures" comes Maurice Tourneur with the urge for shorter and different pictures.

That the industry needs pictures of not more than six reels in length and that these pictures should offer different plot construction and handling of situations, is the contention of Mr. Tourneur, who, in association with M. C. Levee, has adopted a producing policy along these lines for their First National productions.

"We have heard much of the cry for 'bigger and better pictures' during the past few years but what the industry needs today more than anything else are shorter and different pictures," said Mr. Tourneur.

"Many in the producing world have placed a wrong interpretation upon the word 'bigger.' They have indeed made bigger pictures—in size of sets, in footage and in production costs. In short, they have applied the word in a sense of physical size. It requires more than bigness to make for success in pictures. This rush for physically big films has made many forget the all-important items of story values, of logical plot construction and of the general fundamentals which go to make successful screen entertainment.

"This trend of big productions has also brought about a sameness of screen entertainment that must be overcome. What we need are those stories which may be indeed considered 'different'; novel treatment of such stories and productions not more than six reels in length.

" 'The Brass Bottle' I consider a different type of story yet it ran eight reels. It will be six reels before I release it and this will be possible without losing any punch in the story. Although a perfect picture in eight reels I realize the importance of the demand of theatre owners to keep feature productions within the six-reel length.

"No producer can ignore this demand. Theatre owners want shorter feature productions so that they may give their patrons the type of program most popular with the public. With the longer feature production the theatre manager must sacrifice other features of entertainment on his program in order to turn out the number of shows every day that enable him to show a profit. This absence of other features causes dissatisfaction among patrons.

"With ever-growing demand of the exhibitor reaching a point where producers must soon acquiesce, the appearance on the screens of theatres throughout the country, of shorter feature productions will soon be evident to the public.

"The realization of fewer pictures is now apparent. Every producer for the coming year has cut down the number of pictures he will release as compared to his output of the past year. This should force longer runs in the theatres of worthwhile attractions. I believe during the coming year, the leading theatres everywhere will go in for longer runs. The run of two and three weeks of a picture at a theatre will in time become the rule rather than the exception and greater strides in this connection will be made the coming year than ever before."

"UND VE HAF HERE VON LITTLE LOF SCENE"

Ernst Lubitsch, who is directing Mary Pickford in "The Street Singer," seems to delight in love scenes. While placing people for a scene he will invariably ask, "Ve haf here a little lof scene, yes?" In one such scene in this production, however, the lovers come to grief when Riene Raleigh, playing the part of the wife, finds her husband in the arms of another woman and immediately casts the lovers into the castle moat. Her revenge is slightly impaired nevertheless, for the two emerge from the water and proceed with their demonstrations of affection well out of the reach of the indignant wife, who looks on in unspeakable fury.

Before coming to Hollywood and pictures Miss Raleigh was prominent in Chicago dramatic circles, playing leading roles in productions given for the benefit of disabled ex-service men. She was also with the old Essanay Film Company in the Windy City, but just for a short time. What success she has enjoyed she credited to Bertha L. Isles, well known theatrical producer of Chicago, from whom she received her early training in stage work. Miss Raleigh is conceeded to be one of the foremost of the younger character actresses in Hollywood and is exceedingly versatile. Her best work has been done as an exponent of Spanish and Latin characters, similar to her role in the Pickford film.

ENID BENNETT TO PLAY LEAD IN "BAD MAN"

Enid Bennett is to play the leading feminine part in "The Bad Man," which is to be produced and directed by Edwin Carewe for First National, with Holbrook Blinn in the featured role.

Miss Bennett was engaged to play the part after a most exhaustive search through filmdom for the actress best fitted, in appearance and experience, to enact the role of Mrs. Morgan Pell, who forms the apex of a peculiar marital triangle which is straightened out by "The Bad Man" in most approved fashion.

Although "The Bad Man" is essentially a comedy, it nevertheless rises at times to great dramatic heights and much of the acting of this type—the interpretation of intense drama and emotion—will fall on Miss Bennett's shoulders.

Few actresses now playing for the screen are as popular with motion picture patrons as Enid Bennett who has won favor in her portrayal of a variety of types in some of the screen's biggest productions.

She had an enviable stage career before deserting the legitimate for the silver sheet. On the stage she appeared both in America and abroad in support of Otis Skinner and later in support of Fred Niblo.

Miss Bennett has just completed playing the leading feminine role in "Captain Applejack," a Fred Niblo production and a comedy-drama which promises to be one of the best novelty pictures of the year.

One of her most recent successes was her portrayal of the part of "Maid Marion" in "Robin Hood,' Douglas Fairbanks' famous masterpiece.

With the choice of a leading lady for "The Bad Man," Producer-Director Carewe will now turn his attention to the assembling of the remainder of the all-star cast to interpret this highly entertaining stage success.

Production will begin about June 15.

Miss Leighton With Neilan

Lillian Leighton, well known character actress whose finely drawn interpretations had won her a place of distinction as far back as the "old Selig days," returns to the screen after a several months' illness in Marshall Neilan's latest production, "The Eternal Three." Miss Leighton, who affords the comedy relief in this picture, is particularly remembered for her widely varied list of Lasky characterizations. This includes the menacing, Boer widow in "Under the Lash" and a featured comedy role in "Is Matrimony a Failure?"

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Making pictures on location has its advantages, as members of the Metro company now working at Bishop on "The Eagle's Feather" are quite willing to testify. During the two weeks of their stay in the mountains they had freshly caught trout every morning for breakfast, James Kirkwood and Lester Cuneo having waged a contest as to who was the best angler.

Viola Dana has been shopping for a whole week in preparation of her role in "To Whom It May Concern," the second Metro production of her new series. In this picturization of Rita Weiman's story, Miss Dana wears more gowns than in any picture of her career.

George Siegmann, one of the best hated villains of the screen, who is appearing in the all-star cast of "The Eagle's Feather," a Metro special, was starred in "Half A Chance," the first three-reel picture ever produced.

Rex Ingram, who is now directing a magnificent picturization of "Scaramouche" for Metro, is learning the art of fancy diving from Malcolm McGregor, Metro featured player. Mr. McGregor was at one time the holder of the Metropolitan championship for lowboard fancy diving.

Now that spring has caused "Bull" Montana to temporarily discard his amazing collection of overcoats and brown derbies he is gathering together one of the most extraordinary collections of neckties in captivity. Each day the cave-man comedian breezes into the Metro studio wearing a different futuristic interpretation of some designer's neckwear.

Because certain scenes of "The Eagle's Feather," showing the more important cowpunchers on horseback, were filmed in the vicinity of the Metro studio at the beginning of production work, it was necessary to send 22 horses, in addition to the company of 30 players, to Bishop, California, where the important cattle stampede is being filmed.

Lester Cuneo, who is one of the duo of deep dyed villain in Metro's all-star visualization of "The Eagle's Feather," is married to Francelia Billington, a popular screen actress of a few years ago.

Marie Astaire has completed her role in "Lights Out."

Jimmy Clemons, famous eccentric dancer, has been engaged for a leading comedy role in support of "Bull" Montana in the current Metro comedy he is making under the personal direction of Hunt Stromberg.

In building the elaborate reproduction of the Theatre Feydou in Paris for Rex Ingram's Metro production of "Scaramouche," research established the fact that the cheapest seats were on the lower floor, while the members of nobility sat in the two balconies—rather a reversal of modern theatre custom.

Michael Dark has been engaged by the Warner Brothers to take part in "The Gold Diggers" one of this season's "Classics of the screen" which went into production at the new studios this week.

Arias from "Pagliacci," played off-scene by the studio orchestra, provide fitting musical inspiration for the tragic scenes of the strolling players in Rex Ingram's Metro production of "Scaramouche."

Having completed his production of "Trilby," Richard Walton Tully left this week for the Sierras, near Bishop, where a First National unit is on location, taking exteriors for "The Huntress." This unit is one of those working under Tully's supervision. He expects to be gone a week or ten days.

Fourteen-year-old Vance Fawcett has just finished a "Mama's Boy" part with James Flood at the Fox studio and has been signed by the Century Company to play an "Eat 'em alive" villain with the Buddy Messinger Company.

Joseph Schildkraut, having finished his season as star of the New York Theatre Guild's production of "Peer Gynt," has arrived in Los Angeles to play the leading male role in Victor Seastrom's production of "The Master of Man."

Ena Gregory has been engaged to play the Queen of Spain in Emmett Flynn's Goldwyn spectacle, "In the Palace of the King." She will appear in the film as the wife of Sam de Grasse, who plays the role of King Philip II, tyrannical monarch of Spain in the sixteenth century.

Katherine McGuire, one of the winners of a beauty contest conducted by a national magazine, plays the leading feminine role in the Wesley Barry picture, "The Printer's Devil," being produced at Warner Brothers studios in Los Angeles. Harry Myers, contrary to report, will be seen opposite Miss McGuire.

James Woods Morrison has been named for the leading juvenile role in "The Unknown Purple," now being produced under the direction of Roland West for fall release. Morrison has been featured in many important parts during the past few years but he has never before had the opportunity to display his histrionic versatality that he will enjoy in the forthcoming special.

Alan Hale, well-known and popular actor, who scored a decided hit with his performance in "Main Street," "Robin Hood," "The Covered Wagon" and other screen successes, is finishing his work in Jack Gilberts latest starring vehicle, "Cameo Kirby," and will shortly resume his interpretation of the king in Jackie Coogan's current picture, "Long Live the King."

Vera Steadman, Jimmie Clemons, Florence Gilbert and Laura La Varnie are supporting "Bull" Montana in "One Wild Day," his current Hunt Stromberg-Metro comedy.

E. M. McDermott, who recently finished cutting Booth Tarkington's popular story, "Penrod and Sam," is now working on "The Printer's Devil," starring Wesley Barry.

Frank Strayer, has been appointed assistant director to Harry Beaumont, who is directing the production of "The Gold Diggers," in which Hope Hampton, Windham Standing, and Louise Fazenda head an elaborate cast.

Bob McKenzie just finished a comedy with Neely Edwards under the direction of Bill Watson. Mr. McKenzie is the father of the famous McKenzie children.

Elizabeth Rhoades has been placed under contract by Sol Lesser productions, with which company she is now on location at Prescott, Arizona. She is playing the part of the mother in "A Man's Man."

Voyle H. Hazen, who for the past several weeks has been serving as one of the assistants in the production of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," is preparing to leave for Chicago, where it is reported he is to direct and produce feature photoplay.

Mahlon Hamilton is nearing the completion of his role opposite Agnes Ayres in the Eastern studios of Famous Players-Lasky.

Wyndham Standing has been signed by Warner Brothers to play the leading male role in "The Gold Diggers," Avery Hopwood's famous stage play, which is now being produced under the direction of Harry Beaumont. Hope Hampton appears in the leading feminine role in the production.

Kenneth Gibson is nearing the completion of his role with Norma Talmadge in "Purple Pride," produced under the direction of Frank Lloyd.

Clyde Fillmore is now playing one of the leading roles in "Alimony," a Robertson-Cole all-star production being filmed under the able guidance of James Horne

Muriel Frances Dana, the child star, is one of the few children in the pictures who plays a piano. Baby Muriel has been a student of music for the long period of three months. She is now four and one-half years of age.

Louise Lorraine, former member of Universal, has signed with Robertson-Cole to appear in H. C. Witwer's "Fighting Blood" series.

Mary Jane Sanderson has returned from a three week's trip to Catalina, where she spent her vacation with her monther and a half-dozen books.

Harry S. Northrup left for San Francisco Wednesday to attend the premiere of Thos. H. Luce's anti-narcotic picture, "Human Wreckage," starring Mrs. Wallace Reid.

In "Human Wreckage," Mr. Northrup plays "Steve Stone," the king of the dope ring, one of the strongest roles of all the 372 he has given to the screen.

Pierre Collings, who is now photographing "Alimony," seems to fall into good luck. He formerly "shot" "Daytime Wives" under the direction of Emile Chautard, and on his return home last night found that his cleaner, who had called for one suit the week before, had left two suits at the house, when making delivery. Collins called the cleaner and made the case clear. Collings now has only one clean suit.

The cowboys who appear in Metro's all-star production of "The Eagle's Feather" are uniting in an effort to teach the historic "The Cowboy's Lament" to Mary Alden, the featured player.

Arthur Rankin, who appeared in the "heavy" role in "Fighting Blood," is now vacationing at his home in Laurel Canyon.

Director Bob Horner is happy—he's just made another find and this time it's none other than petite Martha May Voss. Martha hails from Hunting, West Va., and is some dancer. Recently she was engaged by Horner for a small part in his latest production, "The Virginian Outcast," featuring Marjorie Daw and Jack Perrin. So impressed was Horner with her splendid work that he immediately engaged her to do the ingenue in his production "Midnight Limited," which is under way.

It was during the filming of Sherwood MacDonald's circus picture, an old lady was tearfully telling the police, how she had been robbed of her purse when Crash! and all eyes turned. It was only Tiny Sandford, who had attempted to sit in a studio chair, but the chair refused to stand for him.

Tiny, who is doing the heavy, only weighs 300. "Not fat, just large," exclaimed Eddie Saunders, the assistant director, as proceeded to bawl Tiny out for breaking up the props.

FINDING "BEN HUR"

By Donald H. Clarke

During the past year many guesses have been made as to who will be the players in the picturization of General Lew Wallace's "Ben Hur." Few—if any—actors and actresses of note on stage or screen haven't been mentioned for one role or another. Writers on motion picture subjects everywhere have picked their favorites; thousands of letters received by Robert B. McIntyre, casting director for Goldwyn, are sufficient proof of the great public interest.

This pastime of home casting in the case of "Ben Hur," brings up an interesting point, and one, apparently, that amateur casting directors seldom consider. It is this. Until the actor for the title role is finally selected, and the latest official word is that he hasn't been, it is utterly impossible to pick any other players.

A moment's thought is sufficient to show why this is so. The members of "Ben Hur's" family must look something like him at least. If he is a strapping, dark complexioned chap, Tirzah his sister, cannot very well be a tiny blonde and his direct opposite. On the other hand, Messala, the villain of the historic story, must be a contrast to "Ben Hur," just as Iras, the "vampire" must be a foil for Esther, the gentle heroine.

Just as "Ben Hur" must have a personality that is at the same time romantic and noble, and a figure that denotes strength, so must Messala have an equipment of qualities that are the opposite, except in the matter of physique. There he must be able to contend with the hero. It would be just as ridiculous to pick an actor for Messala that clearly was overshadowed in physical prowess by "Ben Hur," as it would be to select a "Ben Hur" that appeared delicate beside his foe.

Merely a suggestion of the problems that face the Goldwyn organization in the actual casting of this long anticipated photodrama has been given here. Work has been going forward for months in the preparation for final choice of the players, just as it has been on the continuity, the sets, and the plans for locale.

Many tests of leading—and available—players in the costume of the title role have been taken both at the Culver City studio and the New York offices. When decision is finally made, the rest of the task of casting will not be so difficult, as each candidate for the part suggests immediately to the trained eyes of the executives the particular group, or the particular type, of players with which he should be surrounded.

arrived in New York Wednesday. Mr. Keenan refused all moving picture offers for the summer and will spend that term at his place at "Martha's Vineyard," Massachusetts.

Carlyle Blackwell will produce W. J. Locke's popular story, "Beloved Vagabond," in England. Arrangements are completed and production will start within a fortnight.

A New York paper, "The New York Review," prints the following, in head lines; "Husband of Former Movie Star Held for Murder." The "husband" in the case is R. G. Bennett, Jr. The Mrs. Bennett was Evelyn Farris, the supposed-to-be movie star. Did you ever hear of her? We never did.

PHOTOPLAY PROGRESS

as head of the Schulberg reading department when Sol Lesser, head of the Principal Pictures organization, urged that she be loaned to him to prepare this script.

The motion picture camera continues to open up new possibilities to members of every walk of life. John Currie, former slave, has become a screen player at the age of 104 years. Tod Browning has signed the aged negro to play the part of a slave in his Goldwyn production of "The Day of Faith." When Currie learned how much he would be paid for the part he fairly gasped:

"An' I used to be proud of makin' my two dollars a week after the war was over and I got paid real money for my work," said he.

The design for the general studio enterprise was prepared by Harold Cross, architect of numerous hotels, apartments and business buildings in New York, Chicago, and Los Angeles. The deal which will bring about this epochal change in the motion picture field and the realty development of one of the most valuable tracts in the entire city was brought about by W. H. Grant of the Grant & Campbell Co., after more than a year of labor with the complex factors involved.

J. E. Bowen, president of Cosmosart and an expert engineer, to whose foresight in 1919 was due the selection of this fine site, with its natural scenic advantages for picture-making, will probably be associated with the new Charles Ray Enterprises Corporation.

Charles W. Flack, a prominent attorney and former mayor of Macomb, Ill., will probably be interested in the new company.

PASTOR IN ADDRESS HITS AT MODERN CONCEPTION OF MARRIAGE

That the lack of a proper sense of moral obligation between the contracting parties is the cause of the failure of many modern marriages is the opinion of Dr. Henry Neumann, Brooklyn, N. Y., pastor who is considered an authority on domestic questions throughout the states of the east.

Following a showing this week of the motion picture production "Brass" before an audience of clergymen and jurists, Dr. Neumann, who is head of the Brooklyn Ethical Society, discussed the novel, from which the picture is taken.

"Brass" presents in a striking way the reasons for the failure of so many marriages of today, Dr. Neumann declared.

"Most of the characters show their inability to understand the fact of obligation in married life," he continued. "They are easy going and self-gratifying. Marriages are wrecked because persons entering that state try to cut off moral obligations to their partner. The book is called "Brass," because one of the characters said her wedding ring was not gold at all, but only brass, cheap and tawdry.

"How many marriages today are simply that! The moral responsibility and ethical obligation which are essential are lackings."

Instead of so much propaganda for birth control and more adequate divorce laws, Dr. Neumann said, "it would be more to the point if propagandists put their energies to instilling higher ideals of responsibility for the husband and wife, both before and after marriage."

Dr. Neumann said the present generation of young people is "trained as a race of sentimental emotionalists, for which marriage is certain to bring disillusionment.

"Man is not yet civilized," he continued. "There is degeneration as well as progress. A single generation of capricious, undisciplined freedom may be sufficient to wipe out the spiritual gains of the centuries.

"It is quite right for a husband and wife to be scrupulous of their manners and appearance before marriage, but it is just as essential afterward. The author of "Brass" makes a point that infidenity is not as bad in marriage as unkindness. The Chinese have a proverb that man more often stumbles over molehills than over mountains.

The Editor Advances Some Opinions

Foreign competition in the raw film line is becoming quite pronounced. There is a veritable flood of a German product in the country at present and although many cameramen do not like the composition of this stock so well, it is perfectly apparent that there is a very active market for it. The best evidence of it is, American companies are showing more solicitude in the matter of "getting the business." Meanwhile, competition, so long as it is fair, is never a bad thing.

There is a reassuring movement of centralizing picture-making on the Pacific Coast. Many of our "steady home talent" who have been working back east for some time are returning to resume studio endeavors here. Simultaneously an almost unprecedented number of stage artists of note are joining our colony to both work in pictures and to enjoy vacations. It is more than ever a certainty that Los Angeles is destined to become as much of a mecca for members of the acting profession as li'l ol' Noo Yawk. Nor will any set do more to make life lively in li'l young L. A.

Now that we have had our era of historical and costume photoplays, to what class shall the next era belong? Some say melodramas of the old-time sort with up-to-the-minute settings. Others say comedy dramas in which there is incentive for tears and mirth in equal quantities. Still others hold that baffling mystery is due to hold the screen for a while. However, let them all be right in their predictions just so long as one fact remains conceded—the story must be human and of general interest. Whoever can write stories which ring true from the human angle need not worry about trying to write masterpieces.

During the last fortnight there has been just the slightest lull in production activities due principally to a quite general finishing up of big productions at various studios, but it is already patent this little lull is to be followed by even augmented activities. Some of the biggest pictures of all times have just been started or are about to be, including Cecil B. DeMille's "The Ten Commandments" and Douglas Fairbanks' "The Thief of Bagdad." These two productions alone will give more people employment for a longer period than an average dozen films and there is certainly no occasion for any panicky feeling in any quarter.

Whatever may happen to the program picture, it is just as well. The public has reached that stage of natural fastidiousness where seeing the same old thing in the same old way has ceased to be bearable and therefore it is necessary to develop the bigger and better pictures. But, as some of the more conservative producers are pointing out, "bigger and better" is not a term synonymous to "costlier." It has been proven many times that it takes more than money to make a good photoplay. Now, above all times, is the time for genius to assert itself and to make its influence felt irrespective of the personal financial status. Verily, it is a healthy condition the elimination of the machine-made program picture brings about and one from which much good in behalf of the cinema art is sure to be derived.

It is said that eastern and mid-western picture theatres are doing a better business right now at the outset of the warm season than they did last winter at the height of the season. It is noticeable that as the army of unemployed dwindles, the attendance at all classes of theatres increases and in these times of "the heyday of the movies," the cinema emporiums are getting the bulk of the increase. It is all very important since business conditions seem certain to justify the mid-summer release of many pictures which ordinarily would be held for fall showings. The importance of this is, there will have to be more photoplays made to fill the gap next fall and the more photoplays they make the more prosperous everybody in filmland will be. So let the merry tendency go on merrily.

Some of the big producers are once more discussing the feasibility of having stories written especially for the screen. It would seem that the "re-hashing" of old published material and of unsuccessful stage plays cannot continue indefinitely. Therefore, it would undoubtedly be a fine thing to make immediate preparations for supplying the inevitable dearth by listening to the reasoning of advocates of the original story. It is to be sincerely hoped that some one big producer will take the initiative in starting the ball to rolling in the right direction by abandoning all other stories excepting original screen ones just as so many of them abandoned the latter class some time ago. There can be no questioning the fact that there will never be a distinct screen literature unless it is especially written as such and with the idea of it living. So here's repetition of an oft-expressed hope—may the original come into its own after all!

The fad and fashion for chasing the false gods of alleged exploitation as a means for "putting across" inferior pictures cannot be eliminated by a mere ignoring or a nonchalant assuming that no harm is done thereby. As a matter of fact, exploitation in some cases is the most dangerous enemy the motion picture industry as a whole has and it is high time that the common habit of employing the whole category of superlatives should be stopped. The "greatest" picture of all history has been made so many times that it has long since become most monotonous. The "greatest" cast has been assembled so many times that it has ceased to be the least bit alluring. The "greatest" book ever written has been picturized so many times that there are hundreds of them. Need there be more said in opposition to the modern manner of exploiting motion pictures? Why not, instead, a simple, straightforward presentation of the facts concerning each production? Would it help Wrigley one iota to call his chewing gum the greatest confection ever made since the creation of the world?

Dramatic and Emotional Parts
Nine Years on Legitimate Stage

Vermont 5780

The Artistic Counterpart of Bonaparte

It is more than passing strange and indeed unusually interesting how a certain line of parts will pursue an artist. The case of William Humphrey, now portraying the role of Chevalier de Chabbrillane in Rex Ingram's production of "Scaramouche" at the Metro Studios, is extraordinary inasmuch as he has played one single character in no less than a score of different stage plays and photoplays during his brilliant histrionic career. And, that character is none other than Napoleon. In fact, he has characterized this famous personage more times in more productions than any other living actor and he has not finished with him yet, for he is now writing a Napoleonic photo-drama in which he will play the stellar role when it is produced by one of several film concerns at present negotiating for it.

During the last fifteen years every time anbody presented a play in which Napoleon was an important character, William Humphrey has always been selected to play it. Perhaps his most noteworthy appearance in this part was in the stage oñering of "More Than Queen," in which he supported both Julia Arthur and Blanche Walsh, but due to his remarkable performance was later starred in the piece. Almost equally as notable was his Napoleonic interpretation in "Mme. Sans Gene," in which he so distinguished himself as to be hailed by critics as "the very reincarnation of Napoleon himself seemingly."

Other high-lights in Mr. Humphrey's artistic revival of interest in the Little Corporal were in "Mlle. Mars," in which he created the role in Mrs. Langtry's American presentation after Lewis Waller had originated it in the London engagement, and with Mary Mannering in "Glorious Betsy." Still another one of his stage appearances as this same great military genius was in "Imperial Divorce."

Little less active has Mr. Humphrey been as this same Napoleon on the motion picture screen. He has "Napoleonized" for the entertainment of movie fans in fully a dozen different photoplays and whenever there is a picture in which this historical celebrity figure it seems producers never conside anybody else but William Humphrey. Many think his best performance on the screen was in this role in the very first three-reel picture ever made by Vitagraph quite a few years ago.

According to all the available paintings of Napoleon, Mr. Humphrey is, physically, almost his exact counterpart. He looks at least enough like him to be a brother and for many years he has studied every book on the man and every pictorial illustration of him until he has acquired as a matter of second-nature all of his known mannerisms even to his way of standing or sitting.

"Years ago when it became apparent to me that I was destined to essay characterizing the great Napoleon indefinitely, I began a most assiduous study of the man," Mr. Humphrey says. "And, I've been at it ever since until I have gotten so filled up with information regarding him and ideas I have formed from that information that I simply had to write as an outlet for the vast store, which explains why I am devoting all of my spare time to writing a Napoleonic story for picturization."

Although Mr. Humphrey is best known on the West Coast as an actor, he is also a director of very wide experience, having been behind the megaphone in the making of several important picture features.

There Are Directors--And Directors

For whom does the motion picture director really work?

Directors of films have been classified as "commercial" or as "artistic."

So familiar has the public become with the pictures of today that thousands of picture-goers can look at a film and immediately tell you who directed it.

One man is noted for his human treatment, one for pathos, others for comedy, a few for spectacular scenes, two or three for the masterly handling of children, one or two for daring treatment bordering on, if not quite, risque, some for individual and original touches, some for rapidity of action or smoothness of sequences. Some are noted for gorgeous settings, jazz sequences, mob scenes and a very few for appealing simplicity.

Yet all of these shades of directing can be turned into two separate and distinct classes —"commercial," or "artistic."

Box office history tells us that commercial pictures are the financial successes and that simplicity is the best quantity that can be injected into a film. The pictures which have really become the mile-stones of picture progress are the stories of human emotions, told simply and in a human manner. The great "artistic" pictures have not been financial successes from the reason that all else has been relegated to the back ground in an effort to create "art."

Few picture-makers understand that art is not merely artistic effects; art is just as real in homely background as in the grandeur of the most splendid scenes. Art must be in acting as well as in pictorial effects. Americans, on the general average, are not strong for things overly artistic, they want to be entertained.

But if you can entertain them in an artistic manner without detracting from the strength of the story they will appreciate it to the extent that they will help to make box office history by their attendance of picture shows.

By this simple reasoning it must be deducted that directors are working for the general picture-going public rather than for producers, releasing organizations or for any certain class.

With this idea in mind First National's own producing unit has purchased a limited number of the very best stories of the year. Stories which can be transcribed to the screen in a beautiful manner yet retaining all the dramatic strength of the original vehicle.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

San Francisco, Cal., May 11—Victor Seastrom, the great Swedish director now making his first picture for Goldwyn, "Masters of Men," and some twenty-five members of his cast and staff, arrived in San Francisco on Monday. They will work for a week or ten days at Half Moon Bay, and on location near Burlingame, and San Mateo. The cast includes Joseph Schildkraut, Creighton Hale, De Witt C. Jennings, and Patsy Ruth Miller. James Hogan is production manager, and came to town several days ahead of the company.

H. A Snow, who made the now famous "Hunting Big Game in Africa" picture, will leave in the very near future for a return trip to Africa. They will on this expedition go farther into the interior, and expect to make even bigger and better animal pictures, also to bring back to this country a whole ship load of live animals, for zoos, and public exhibition purposes. His son, Sidney Smith, will be cameraman with the party.

Albert Wilkie, who has been doing the publicity for Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed," has resigned his position with Goldwyn, and left San Francisco on Sunday for the South, to accept a very flattering offer from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Fitz Tidden, of this city, will take his place with the "Greed" company.

Jack Holt spent most of last week in San Francisco, and returned to the South on Sunday.

Chester Conklin, Mother Ashton, little Austin Jewell, and the twins have all finished their parts in the production of "Greed," and have left for their homes in the South within the last few days. The big picnic sequence is being shot this week, and on its completion one or two other members of the cast will be released. Mrs. Jean Hersholt, and little son Allen, have arrived to be with Jean during the balance of his stay here.

Something really new in the way of moving pictures had its world's Premiere at the Civic Auditorium on June 15th. It was "Frate Sole," the first moving picture opera that America has ever seen; a picture with an opera score played and sung while the action takes place on the screen. The picture is built on the life of Saint Francis of Assissi, and the story is from the pen of Marie Corsi, well known screen dramatist of Rome. It was produced under the direction of Ugo Falena, in Rome and in the actual scenes where At. Francis lived and moved. The musical score was written by Luigi Mancilelli and was rendered by an orchestra of eighty musicians, with twenty-four soloists, and fifty voices in the chorus, directed by Alexander Saslavsky. The whole production will be given on the very highest scale of artistic performance, and is being presented by the John Promberger Production. After the run of the picture here it will go to the Auditorium at Los Angeles.

Oakland is to have a very grand fete and pageant the latter part of this month, and the first of July, on the lake at Lake Merritt. Harry Sheehan, long and well known to the picture world, is the director, and among other things a moving picture will be made in connection with the pageant. The shores of Lake Merritt will be transformed into the "Island of Oz," and our old friends the scarecrow, the tin woods-man and all their companions will be there assisted by a company of some five hundred people. Richard Melvick, well known to the silver-sheet as a daring wild west and trick rider, and his three wonderfully trained horses will be part of the show, and altogether it promises to be quite some party.

"The pair of Hellions," first picture made by the Steroscopic Productions, was previewed at the Franklin Theatre in Oakland last week to an audience that seemed to enjoy it very much. The next picture of the company will be started at the Pacific Studios next week.

The world's premiere of Mrs. Wallace Reid's picture "Human Wreckage" took place at the Century Theatre here last Saturday night. The picture is not only a wonderful lesson, but a well played, and really interesting picture. Mrs. Reid came to San Francisco for the opening and made a personal appearance, and a very dignified and appealing little speach.

Thomas Ince and his wife were in town over the week-end to be present at the first public showing performance of "Human Wreckage."

Edward Jobson of the film world of Hollywood is in San Francisco just for a little holiday, and change of air.

Fritzi Ridgeway is the headliner at the Orpheum this week in a novelty, called "A Wife's Honor." It is played in three speeds, and given an effect of a picture with everything on the stage in black and white, and shutter lighting.

Sophie Tucker has purchased a home in Los Angeles.

"Human Wreckage," the anti-narcotic photo-drama, with Mrs. Wallace Reid, distributed by the Film Booking Offices, opens in New York at the Lyric Theatre following the run of Griffith's "White Rose" in that theatre. The premiere will happen July first.

Mimi Palmer, a new star, will make her appearance this week at the Capitol Theatre. "The Ragged Edge" is the second Distinctive Production to be released through Goldwyn The role of the young hero is played by Alfred Hunt.

Police Commissioner of New York City, Richard E. Enright, has written a scenario, and tells his fellow "Friars" that a certain producer has made arrangements with his wife to film it.

D. W. Griffith is casting his next picture. It will star Al Jolson, who will play two parts, that of a brown skin lover and also a straight white man.

"The Meanest Man in the World," produced by Principal Pictures Corporation, in Los Angeles, will have its world premiere on Broadway with the George M. Cohan Theatre as its home.

Juanita Hansen, who was cured of the drug habit, will have Mrs. Fiske's role in "The Dice of the Gods," when the piece is put on tour.

William LeBarron, production manager, Joseph Urban, designer, and Luther Reed, scenario writer, of the Cosmopolitan, left for California this week to attend to the preliminaries for the filming on the coast of Marion Davies' next picture, "Yolande." Miss Davis is now on her way to Europe to attend the world premiere of her "Little Old New York," which opens in London.

Ann Forrest is being sued for $20,000. It happened this way: about a year ago Ann was stopping at the Hotel Netherland. She came home one evening to find her jewels conspicuous by their absence. Ann phoned the police who later recovered the jewels from a woman employee of the hotel. So happy was Miss Ann that she decided not to press the charge against the poor unfortunate. So she dismissed the maid and the affair from her mind and sailed for Europe. Now this poor unfortunate, who took the gems, up and sues Miss Forrest for $20.000 for being maliciously arrested. If she wasn't why didn't Miss Forrest press the charge, she maintains.

Jacques Tryol, president of the producing corporation which bears his name, this week announced that Henry James, former business manager of this concern, has resigned and that he is no longer affiliated with that concern.

Bernie Durning is in New York making ready to do a special picture for William Fox, with an all-star cast. Shirley will join him later.

Christie Cabanne is doing one of his own brain children at the Metro studio with an all-star cast.

The Shuberts have leased the Central Theatre to William Fox from September 1st to February 1st. Fox will use the house for his special film showings, opening with "When Winter Comes."

"Enemies of Women," with Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens, moves to the Cameo next Sunday from its eighth week on Broadway, pumping from house to house It will run indefinitely. Alan Crosland directed this in Mont Carlo.

Minta Durfee, Roscoe's wife, will open in a vaudeville act in New York real soon. She had a wire from Fatty yesterday in Chicago at the Marigold Gardens saying that he was accepted by the exclusive crowd and was playing to capacity. Arbuckle is leading the number and doing a couple of comedy falls

Pictures, Paintings and Advice

By RAY H. LEEK

"No motion picture can compare with a great painting as a work of art," recently wrote a New York reviewer. The reason is that the film is the work of an organization of specialtists, whereas the painting represents the personality of one individual."

The reviewer doubtless will be interested to learn, however, that he soon will be given an opportunity to view an exception to that rule. For the Tom Forman production of "The Broken Wing," which just has had its first studio preview here, may safely be said to represent the personality of the director alone.

The youthful director, formerly a featured player in Paramount pictures, a scenarist, soldier, and Texan who knew every foot of the cow country in which he spent his youth, has made use of first hand information in the production story which, as written by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard, had so successful a run on the New York stage.

When the play first was acquired, to be filmed as a B. P. Schulberg production, Forman was named as director because of the opportunity for aeroplane thrillers, military maneuvers and big treatment of the sort that has contributed to his fame as a supervisor.

But Forman contributed an additional detail to the work by announcing that he would himself write the screen version of the play. On its completion he visited Northern Mexico, New Mexico and the various "locations" in which the most spectacular phases of the picture have been filmed. He organized the two Mexican armies and led them into the comic encounters that form one feature of the story. While he worked with mechanical experts in the planning of what is declared to be one of the most impressive aeroplane feats ever accomplished before the camera.

Also, the director can claim such credit for the selection of the cast which, headed by Kenneth Harlan and Miriam Cooper, includes such favorites as Richard Tucker, Walter Long, Miss Dupont, Evelyn Selbie, Ferdinand Munier and Edwin J. Bradly.

When it is considered that the director also cut and edited the production, it may safely be said to come as nearly representing the personality of one individual as so complicated a thing as a film production may do.

It looks as if the picture fan who yearns to see his or her favorite in person would have a real opportunity to satisfy a life long craving this summer. The motion picture exposition, to be staged here from July 2 to August 5 promises to offer a greater number of stars, starlets and featured players than ever before have been seen at one time.

Advance announcements indicate that Doug and Mary, Charles Chaplin, Kenneth Harlan, Thomas Meighan, Gaston Glass, Orville Caldwell, Pola Negri, Barbara La-Marr, Ethel Shannon and all our favorites will shine simultaneously for the visitors.

And, since President Harding is scheduled to make a personal appearance during the exposition, there should be plenty of political, as well as screen notables to fill the eye of the visitor.

To seekers after literary inspiration, Olga Printzlau offers these words of advice: "get yourself a bungalow-studio in the heart of a zoo and start work."

Miss Printzlau, writer of a greater number of screen successes than any other contributor to screen literature, has done just this thing. Seated in the interior of a picturesque bungalow structure in the heart of the Selig Zoo, the bobbed haired scenarist is at work on her most ambitious story—a screen version of "Maytime," the tuneful comedy that now is being played by half a dozen companies on the speaking stage in as many cities.

Looking out of Miss Printzlau's front door one views an elephant or two, engaged in their daily occupation of reducing the hay supply on the lot. To the left are long rows

"Little Bo-Peep"

A PHOTOPLAY BY IONE MITCHELL

It happened so long ago—the story of Little Bo Peep—so long ago that there is no one left who can remember. Ireland was much the same then as it is today, a glowing green land set in an amethyst sea—in whose valleys and on whose hillsides the quaint hospitable peasant folk dwelt in primitive content. And it was there among Ireland verdant hills, that Little Bo Peep first opened her eyes upon a brand new world.

She was the only child of Patrick and Sally MacMahon, and for almost two short years she had frolicked about the clay floor of the humble cabin that was built of mud and roughly piled stones and filled always with the pungent odor of smoking turf upon the hearth. True, there were those among the inhabitants of the neighborhood village who claimed that Patrick had no love for the child,—he having longed for a son and heir, and having been deeply disappointed when the tiny girl-child had been born. But if this were true, Bo Peep was far too young to understand, and the gentle little mother who had brought her into the world protected and shielded her from the gruff brusequences of the disappointed Patrick.

And it is with this child my story is concerned,—the story of Little Bo Peep as it happened many, many years ago.

It was fast approaching twilight. The sun had slipped behind the emerald hills, and the lonely little cabin of the MacMahons' nestled drowsily against the hillside in the deepening shadows. From somewhere came the distant low of cattle, and now and again the tinkling of bells the returning herds broke the sweet stillness of the twilight hours. Patrick MacMahon stood at the edge of the gently flowing stream, driving his sheep ahead of him into the shallow water—urging them on with wide sweeps of his powerful bare arms—his deep voice ringing clearly through the silent hollows of the hills as he called to the barking sheep dogs. On the other side of the stream he picked up the winding path again, and soon the sheep were swarming into the fenced-in pasture lot.

His flock safely stowed away for the night, Patrick turned his steps toward the cabin of mud and stone that dozed among the shadows. He was hungry—and he knew that within those homely walls a fire of turf would be burning on the hearth, and over it the savory odor of his supper would seep out from beneath the lid of the huge black kettle to greet him. He quickened his step, urged on by his contented anticipations.

Then in the open doorway he stepped short—there was no fire glowing on the hearth, and the huge kettle on its crane was silent. The two roughly built stools were over-turned upon the clay floor. The worn stubby broom lay across the hearth as though it had been suddenly dropped there. Several copper pans had fallen from the walls where they were wont to hang in neat rows. The place bore a look of hurried departure—of neglect—as though she who had left had no thought of the man who had come home, hungry, in the twilight.

Patrick entered the cabin and looked quickly about, his great fists clenched at his sides. The door to the tiny room opening off the larger one stood ajar. He threw it wide and peered within. Sally, his wife, was gone.

For a full minute he stood leaning against the low frame of the doorway, his deep chest rising and falling with his heavy breathing, his shaggy brows drawn low above his deep set eyes, his strong white teeth clamped together with the firmness of a steel trap—making the muscles stand out like cords around his cheek bones. The room was just as it had always been,—save that the peg on which her shawl had hung was now vacant.

And in that first awful moment, Pat, ever ever quick at drawing his own conclusions, arrived at what was to him the only plausible excuse for the emptiness of his little home. She, his wife, had left him! * * * and not alone! she had destroyed his honor—and dragged his good name at her heels through the muck of the path she had chosen to follow—and she had not dared to face him in her weakness! She had gone while his back was turned—and left him only the dregs of a life gone suddenly bitter!

Then, into the burning tumult of his thoughts crept the consciousness of the little plaintive cry of a child.

Patrick turned back into the deepening shadows of the strangely changed room. In a corner a tiny mite with tumbled golden curls sat on a heap of straw, her little shoulders shaken with her sobbing, her dirty little fists digging themselves into the eyes from which the tears were streaming. Patrick stares at the quivering little figure in silence; and as he stares there deepened in his eyes a look that was not good to see. He passed one hand across his forehead, and for a moment seemed as though his great body was about to crumple and fall. Then, with a sound like that which comes from a wild thing fatally hurt, he lifted his great bare arms above his head, and in a voice that was choked with fury he cried—

"May every curse in God's universe descend upon him who has taken her from me! And may he drag her to the very depths of the bottomless pit at his side!"

Then he turned toward the sobbing child in the corner. Two little hands went out to him in a pathetic appeal for comfort, and between her convulsive sobs the child repeated again and again: "Mama!—Bo Peep—want—Mama! Bo Peep—want—Mama!"

The man's muscles grew taut as he looked at the pitifully helpless little figure—"and she left me—that!" he muttered beneath his breath—"she left me something that will grow up to look like her,—a living curse that will keep me from forgetting! A weak foolish thing that will grow to be—a woman!"

Far into the night Patrick MacMahon sat beside his cold hearth and stared before him through the tiny window that framed a bit of moonlit world beyond. And in a corner of the darkened room the half smothered wail of a child rose and fell, until, from the sheer exhaustion the sobs that trembled through the little body grew longer and far-

AMBITION
By Eric Mayne

"Cromwell,
I charge thee, fling away Ambition. By that sin fell the angels."

* * *

Wolsey's fall had dislocated his ideas, or, at any rate, his power of expression.

* * *

Ambition is not a sin.

* * *

Ambition did not cause either Wolsey or the angels to fall.

* * *

Milton attributes the fall of the angels to Pride,—he also was guessing.

* * *

Without Ambition Wolsey never would have been a Cardinal. With Ambition and good judgment he might have been a Pope.

* * *

Ambition led Wolsey to a position of great power, then he became proud, arrogant, despotic, and—he fell.

* * *

It is better to be Ambitious and wise, than to be Ambitious and otherwise.

* * *

Napoleon was Ambitious; but not wise. He sacrificed the men of France, he undermined its financial stability, he destroyed its prestige to satisfy his desire for power.

* * *

It is not a compilment to a man to call him a Napoleon of finance, or a Napoleon of anything else.

* * *

Napoleon was a bankrupt. If he had fallen leading the troops, he professed to love so much, in that last charge, he would have had desperate heroism to his credit.

* * *

In 1811 Napoleon terrorized Europe. In 1815 he was protected from those he had led to ruin, by those he had tried to destroy.

* * *

Lincoln had Ambition. Ambition to solve a great problem. To enlarge the freedom of humanity. To give civilizing strength and dignity to the people he loved and served.

* * *

Ambition to do good to all, made him one of the world's greatest men. It spurred him to do a noble work that commands our admiration and reverence.

* * *

"Fling away Ambition," and stand in the bread line of mediocrity.

* * *

Contentment without Ambition retards the progress of humanity.

* * *

Let wisdom guide our Ambition and we shall march with those who help to make life better and brighter.

* * *

Lincoln did not fling away Ambition, but he held fast to love, honor, devotion to his country, reverence for his God.

CAMERA'S WEEKLY WAKE-EM-UP

SPECIAL NEWS SECTION

SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1923

UNITED IS READY FOR GREATEST SUMMER

With the $800,000 improvement program now nearing completion at the United Studios, arrangements are being made by M. C. Levee, President of the plant, to handle the greatest summer producing activities in the history of the studio.

Contracts have already been signed by Mr. Levee to house the producing of eleven companies this summer and negotiations with five other producers of prominence are practically closed. This will mark a new summer producing record for any leasing studio in the industry and is made possible through the building improvements and enlargements in the big leasing plant which have been under way for the past two months.

This announcement is another definite indication that the present producing boom in Hollywood will continue through the summer, contrary to the usual July and August let-up in production evident the past four years.

Foremost in producing activities at the United Studios this summer will be Joseph Schenck and Associated First National Pictures with the largest number of companies. Among the producing organizations who will "shoot" at the United during the next three months are the Norma and Constance Talmadge companies, Maurice Tourneur, Sam Rork, Arthur Jacobs, Edwin Carewe, Frank Lloyd, Joseph De Grasse, Jack Dillon, Lynn Reynolds and John McDermott.

As soon as the new buildings and other improvements on the United lot are completed, the eleven organizations already signed, will be in full operation. Others will closely follow as soon as additional studio facilities now in work, are provided.

Bowers Misses Ocean

John Bowers, often called the "water spaniel of the movies," is having a dry time on location at Prescott, Arizona, with the company producing "When a Man's a Man," from Harold Bell Wright's novel. Not that Bowers has a hankering for the beverages Mr. Volstead tabooed. But Bowers is used to his daily dip in the Pacific, and it is too far from Prescott to motor to the ocean and be back by nine o'clock in the morning, made up ready for work on the set. When in Hollywood he rarely misses a morning for a plunge at Santa Monica.

AL CHRISTIE RETURNING FROM EUROPE JULY 1

Al Christie cables from Venice, Italy, where he is presumably looking over boats and gondolas, judging from his interest in yachting at home. He has recently joined the California Yacht Club, and is studying the best types of cruisers in home and foreign waters. Mr. Christie will return to his studio about the first of July and in the meantime his directors are working on pictures which were planned for fall release.

Mr. Christie reported from London last week that Betty Compson has created an enormous popular following in the British Isles, and her forthcoming pictures to be made over there are an important topic of conversation in film trade circles in London.

250 CHARIOTS IN UNIQUE RACE ON DESERT

The fastest and largest charge of chariots in 3,000 years took place at sundown Monday, on the 120-square-mile dry lake at Muroc. It is said that not since the days of the real Pharaohs has there been an equal to the dash across the huge flat expanse of two hundred and fifty chariots, five hundred horses and five hundred men. These represented the hosts of Pharaoh Rameses II in pursuit of the Children of Israel, and the scene was a climax of Cecil B. De Mille's film production of "The Ten Commandments."

Residents from all portions of the Mojave Desert gathered on the great natural speedway to watch the reproduction of ancient military greatness.

The chariots were driven by soldiers of the Eleventh United States Cavalry and the 76th Field Artillery. Each carried a civilian.

Ten teams ran away and were not stopped for four miles.

The scene is said to have been the largest equestrian stunt ever staged for motion pictures. The racing horses gained a speed of nearly 45 miles an hour on Muroc Lake, the largest absolutely flat expanse in the world.

Eileen Percy has been signed by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation for a leading role in "Yesterday's Wife." This feature, from the novel by Evelyn Campbell, to which C. B. C. has purchased the screen rights, will be the first of the series of Columbia Pictures which that company will distribute.

FORT RETURNS HERE TO PURSUE HIS FORTE

Garrett Elsden Fort, scenarist and playwright, whose one-act sketch, "Moonlight,' made a favorable impression at the Screen Writers' Play Room last Saturday night, has returned from a prolonged stay east. Mr. Fort intends to devote himself to free lance continuity work and titling. He has recently finished "The Critical Age," Ernest Shipman's picture, which is being released through Hodkinson, and has also completed a contract with Archie Comedies, Inc., an eastern independent concern formed to film P. G. Wodehouse's novel, "The Indiscretions of Archie." Mr. Fort was formerly assistant scenario editor for R-C Pictures Corporation, and did a number of scripts for Pauline Frederick, Sessue Hayakawa and Doris May.

GLORIA REALIZES LIFE AMBITION IN "ZAZA"

Gloria Swanson began the fulfillment of the most cherished desire of her screen career at the Paramount Long Island studio this week when she started work in the title role of "Zaza" under the direction of Allan Dwan, who has made preparations for this picture that insure it being one of the most spectacular he has yet produced.

Ever since Miss Swanson became a star she has had a desire to play "Zaza." Her interpretation of the role in this new screen play, which has been adapted from the opera and play by Albert Shelby LeVine, will have all the fire and zest that the famous "Zaza" has had in the past if her enthusiasm has anything to do with it.

"Zaza" will be the first Paramount picture Miss Swanson has made in the east, all her work heretofore having been done at the Lasky studio in Hollywood.

A cast of stellar proportions has been selected by Mr. Dwan to support Miss Swanson. H. B. Warner, who is at present playing the lead in the Harvard prize play, "You and I," will play "Bernard DuFrene" opposite Miss Swanson. Ferdinand Gottschalk, another member of the "You and I" company will play "Dule De Brissac." Lucille LaVerne will be "Aunt Rosa," and Mary Thurman will have the part of "Florianne." Other members of the cast are Riley Hatch, Ivan Linow, Marie Sheldon, Edna Wheaton, Eleanor Dell, Fern Oakley and Hazel Webb, a dancer.

FRISCO TO HAVE FILM FINANCE COMPANY

It has just been announced that San Francisco is to have a new moving picture financing corporation on a very large scale. In fact the actual paid-in capitalization is one million dollars. Louis Graf, President of the Graf Productions, is at the head of the new organization, and he has just returned from the South, where he spent a week on business connected with its formation. Mr. Graf has returned to San Francisco to confer with his associates on the project, the details of which will be whipped into shape at once.

The object of the organization is the financing of picture producers, but owing to the fact that no two pictures are alike in their varied needs, and conditions, no set policy can be announced. However, it is stated that the arrangements will be such as to let the producer live and give him a fair chance.

Although Mr. Graf has studied the picture production situation through first-hand experience in making pictures, the Graf Productions will not in any way participate in the benefits of the new corporation, as their future productions are already fully financed, with surplus laid away, and the money of the new organization will be used entirely for the needs of other producers.

SULLIVAN SEEKS PLOTS FOR TALMADGES IN N. Y.

C. Gardner Sullivan, who was recently appointed head of the scenario department of both the Norma and Constance Talmadge Film Companies, is in New York looking for material. Mr. Sullivan will not only be in charge of the continuities of future Talmadge productions, but will act in an advisory capacity as to what type of production shall be produced.

"I am a firm believer," said Mr. Sullivan, "in Constance Talmadge's ability to portray emotional roles and serious drama quite as successfully as her delightful comedy roles. I am bearing this particularly in mind in buying new Constance Talmadge material, so any of your readers, who have a good story up their sleeve, with comedy treading on the heels of tragedy, and laughter intermingled with tears, may send it to me at the Hotel Gotham."

Mr. Sullivan will be in New York only ten days, returning to the Schenck Productions at the United Studios, Hollywood, the early part of next week.

MARYON AYE GETS FIVE-YEAR JOB WITH TRUART

Tack up an ace card for Maryon Aye!

This popular little Miss of filmdom has just placed her name on the dotted line of a big, fat movie contract. There were clauses galore in the agreement and Attorney Herman L. Roth of Hollywood Productions Company, tried to explain each and every one of them to the actress.

But the clause that attracted the attention of Maryon was the one which stated the length of her contract—five years. Of course the salary was to be considered, but that was all agreed upon beforehand. And insofar as that part be concerned, Maryon's perfectly satisfied.

Miss Aye begins her new wood Production banner. This is a sister organization of Truart, the company which recently signed Larry Semon for a period of years.

Miss Aye has been in the film world for several years. Coming to Hollywood direct from the footlight world, the pretty maiden soon won her way into the studios and has risen rapidly, having played important roles in many of the recently made pictures. Her most recent work has been with Principal Pictures Corporation in "The Meanest Man in the World,' 'soon to be released.

During the life of her new contract, Miss Aye will journey east and to Europe on various productions. This has been her life's ambition—to see the world. Miss Aye was one of the original thirteen "baby stars" selected two years ago by the "Wampas." The publicity men's association announced at that time that each of the thirteen girls they selected, would rise to heights in filmdom. Miss Aye, therefore, helps the prophecy of the "Wampas" and proves the faith placed in her by that organization.

"Havoc" Nearing Completion

"Havoc," Universal special production from the pen of Lenore J. Coffee, well-known scenarist and author, is rapidly nearing completion. It is a colorful story of the Orient and has a strong cast of players including J. Warren Kerrigan, Anna Q. Nilsson, Tom Santschi and Winifred Bryson. Several unusually big and attractive sets have been built and the company expects the production to be one of the unique pictures of the year.

Following a vacation since the completion of "Sawdust," Gladys Walton's circus story, Jack Conway, the director, has returned to Universal City. He has several new stories in view and will decide on his next within a few days.

VETERAN WHO SAW AND HEARD LINCOLN SAYS FILM VERSION OF HIM IS TRUE

Capt. Harry H. Carmack, Civil War veteran, gave the opinion this week that the reproduction of Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg address, which the Rockett-Lincoln Film Company staged this week at Sawtelle, is faithful to the original scene in Pennsylvania in all particulars. Capt. Carmack's opinion is to be regarded as that of an authority since, on a leave of absence, he was present at the dedication of the Gettysburg burial grounds in 1863.

"I have racked my memory," Capt. Carmack told Al Rockett of the Rockett organization which is producing "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln" for which the reproduction was made, "to see if your scene is unfaithful in any of its details, but it is as true as the day I saw it. The lay of the land as you have selected it corresponds almost directly with that on which the speakers' platform and the crowd stood at Gettysburg. Your crowd and their costumes are Gettysburg come to life.

"Your Lincoln," Capt Carmack continued, referring to George Billings who is enacting the title role, "is in order. His height, his stature, his manner are those of Lincoln, and he delivered the address—I notice he knew it by heart—in much the fashion as Lincoln spoke the original words; too bad that the pictures couldn't get Billings' voice too. He's a real orator. Your cabinet, your Stanton, your Seward, couldn't be told from the originals. Having my duties here at the home, I don't go to see pictures so often, but this is one that I am going to see when it's finished. It's the kind that America needs."

Capt. Carmack is at present a member of the honorary firing squad at the Soldier's Home, Sawtelle. At the age of sixteen he ran away from Bethany College in West Virginia to join the Union forces as a private in 1861. At the time he was a resident of Harper's Ferry, Va., and his family divided between the North and the South. He is a cousin to the late Senator Carmack of Tennessee.

Philip E. Rosen is directing the Lincoln picture. Robert Kurrle and H. Lyman Broening are the cinematographers.

SCULPTOR HELPS THIS ACTOR WITH MAKE-UP

The are of keeping make-up exact from one day to another was the problem which confronted Bowditch (Smoke) Turner, who is enacting the role of Le Chapelier in Rex Ingram's production of "Scaramouche" for Metro.

In this portrayal Mr. Turner is compelled to wear a false nose of peculiar shape and rather abnormal proportions. To make the shape of the false nose identical each time it is donned, a sculptor has been assigned the duty of appearing at the Metro studios daily. His task is to place the nose in a plaster cast and mould it before attaching it to Mr. Turner's features.

The greatest difficulty of all was encountered during the recent hot weather. On several occasions Mr. Turner was compelled to remove the nose between scenes in order to have it remoulded.

Al Austin, formerly with the Charles Chaplin company, has been engaged by Lou Anger Productions to direct Clyde Cook, the famous Australian comedian, in a series of fun films.

It is not often that a beauty contest winner is suited to motion pictures, but the exception which proves the rule is found in the fact that Mary Philbin, selected in a Chicago beauty contest, has made good on the screen. She is to play one of the leading parts in Frank Borzage's new production for Arthur H. Jacobs.

LANGDON STARTS NEW COMEDY SERIES HERE

Harry Langdon, who signed with Principal Pictures for a series of comedies, has arrived in Los Angeles and has started the first of these new productions at Principal Pictures studios, Hollywood.

Sol Lesser, president of Principal, signed the noted comedian when he was playing a vaudeville engagement in Los Angeles. Langdon has been approached many times with reference to picture work but always had contracts too far in advance in the two-a-day route.

Alf Goulding has been selected to direct the comedian. Goulding made the Baby Peggy pictures for Universal and has been in the comedy fold of directors for many years.

It is the intention of Principal Pictures Corporation to surround the new comedy star with exceptionally well-known comedy players and no expense or time will be spared in giving the public the highest quality in comedies.

Langdon is noted for his ability to create and "put over" comedy situations. He was regarded as one of the ace comic headliners on the big vaudeville circuits and when he severed his associations with the footlights, he received the highest tributes from the directors of the circuit who expressed their loss but assured him of greatest success in his camera work.

Kit Guard, who plays the fight trainer in "Fighting Blood," is a member of one of England's most aristocratic families .

COSTLIER MOVIES NOT NECESSARY, SAYS COOGAN

"Bigger and better pictures," says Jack Coogan, senior, who is supervising the entire production of Jackie's first picture for Metro's, "Long Live the King," is suffering the fate of many another slogan. In short, it is being misinterpreted to mean "costlier productions," and that is the one error into which the producers must not fall. Primarily because of the exhibitor and the public, who have to pay ultimately for excessive production costs, but also for the sake of the film itself.

"You can't make a scene better,' says Coogan, "by spending more money on it. Its quality depends on many factors, among which the item of expense is merely one, and a comparatively unimportant one, at that. Story, acting and direction—these are the three real essentials of a 'bigger and better' picture, and they are of practically equal importance! Sets and photography can be classified right along with these three factors—and there are perhaps a score of others that must be regarded in making a really good picture.

"For 'Long Live the King,' which Victor Schertzinger is directing from Eve Unsell's and C. Gardner Sullivan's adaptation of Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel, we are building several groups of sets that will cost close to six figures on the left side of the decimal point, but we are not talking much about this element of them. We know that art director J. J. Hughes has given us backgrounds for the action which are not only beautiful and impressive but—what is more important—in the correct period and with a general feeling that is in keeping with the action that transpires within these sets. That is the one important factor in this phase of picture making. It so happens that the story on which Jackie is now working, calls for palaces, cathedrals, city streets and so on. They have been erected with an eye to adequacy and beauty, but their cost is absolutely incidental."

Lenore Coffee Versatile Writer

Lenore J. Coffee, author of such photoplays as "Temptation," Daytime Wives," "Havoc,' etc, was a short story writer and fictionist of note before entering the realm of scenario writer. She has also written several vaudeville sketches and dabbled a little in poetry.

George Hackathorne is on location at Prescott, Arizona with Eddie Cline and company, filming "When A Man's A Man," the Harold Bell Wright novel.

OLD-TIME CAST OF "BEN HUR" IN REUNION

A unique reunion, fraught with sentiment, was held at the Goldwyn studio last week. It consisted of members of the original cast of "Ben Hur," best beloved of any stage production. Of the six living members now in Los Angeles, four were in attendance — William Farnum, whose famous characterization of Ben Hur is well remembered; Emmett Corrigan, who first created the title role, and then played Simonides; Mabel Burt, who played Ben Hur's mother, and W. J. Kelley, who played Drusue and then Messala. William S. Hart, who for several years portrayed the villain, Messala, and Frederick Truesdale, who was the messenger Malluc, were unable to attend.

The reunion had its heart interest as well as its dramatic value. No camera has ever caught the expression in Bill Farnum's big blue-gray eyes as he greeted, for the first time in many years, the little white-haired woman, Mabel Burt, who played his mother. Not many words were exchanged at first in the little group—just everybody bravely smiling and trying to overcome the tears. "How many years has it been since we played together, Mabel?" asked Mr. Farnum, "I'm afraid to say, Will" (she always calls him Will) "for fear it will seem too long ago."

June Mathis, who is personally adapting "Ben Hur" to the screen, presided at the luncheon table, with Messala on her right and Ben Hur on her left. "Success for Ben Hur is already written on the heights," said Miss Mathis in addressing the diners, "for you who created it on the stage to the living, beautiful play that it was, have carried it far above common things, and it now rests with the screen to give that immense scope of which it is capable, to make 'Ben Hur' immortal."

WING IS ADDED TO U'S SCENARIO STAFF

William E. Wing, well-known writer of motion picture plays, has been added to the scenario staff of the Universal Pictures corporation.

Wing has just completed the screen adaptations of "Overland Red" and "Ridgeway of Montana,' 'and is now engaged in writing the continuity for William Desmond's next starring vehicle, an original story by Raymond L. Schrock and Harvey Gates.

He has written 438 original stories for the screen, all of which have been produced, many of which have served as starring vehicles for some of the biggest stars of the screen.

PALMER TO FILM STORY OF SMALL-TOWN DOCTOR

The Palmer Photoplay Corporation, which inaugurated a unique and revolutionary film producing policy with the filming of its first screen drama, "Judgment of the Storm," evidently is not content with proving its point about the superiority of "original stories" over "adaptations" with a single photoplay. It is announced that the story for the second of their proposed series of big special features has been purchased, and that camera work upon it will start shortly at Thomas H. Ince Studios.

"Trusie" is the temporary title of the screen play about to be produced. As with "Judgment of the Storm," by Ethel Styles Middleton of Pittsburgh, the new story was written by a hitherto unrecognized author trained in screen play technique in the Palmer Corporation's big story laboratory and clearing house. The author is Dr. Walter G. Hallstead, a practitioner in the little town of Penn Yan, New York.

Casting will soon begin. It is said that the story is so perfect technically that little adaptation or continuity work will be needed to get it ready for filming; a fact that in itself constitutes a big point in the Palmer Corporation's struggle to establish a separate and distinct literature for the screen, of stories written by trained screen playwrights directly and expressly for that medium.

"Our practice of paying unknown screen authors royalties —a uniform rate of one thousand dollars in advance of a five per cent basis for five years —has attracted a high class of creative talent," declares Roy L. Manker, President of the Palmer Corporation. "Its effect is already being felt, not only by ourselves, but by other producers to whom we supply original screen plays.

"However, the writers who seem to be producing the best material are those hitherto unknown. Dr. Hallstead has never sold fiction or scenarios before, although he has written many of the latter during his training course. Mrs. Middleton was also an unrecognized genius before we filmed 'Judgment of the Storm.'

"Another unique feature about our undertaking to film better and more consistently good pictures, is the fact that our organization works as a self-contained unit, which trains its own writers, selects its screen plays from their work, and produces them. The whole experiment, if one may call it that, is fraught with wonderful possibilities. We hope and believe that our efforts will form the nucleus of a new epoch in cinematic art; an era of independence from the older medium of expression. 'Judgment of the Storm,' our first production, has far excelled our highest expectations, and we believe that we can go even farther with our second production."

DOROTHY MANNERS GETS BIG PART IN "VICTOR"

"The Victor," Herbert Rawlinson's newest Universal starring vehicle, includes in its cast Dorothy Manners, a leading woman who has come up in the professional rank within a year, Esther Ralston, leading woman of Hoot Gibson's "Blinky," and several other Universal pictures, Otis Harlan and Frank Currier, character man of long established repute, and Eddie Gribbon, the comedian who has furnished "comedy relief" in a dozen dramatic features at Universal City.

"The Victor" is an adaptation of Gerald Beaumont's story, "Two Bells for Pegasus," and the director is Edward Laemmle, maker of historical serials and dramatic features. The hero is an Englishman of rank, who turns prizefighter in America and thereby turns his family's social world upside down.

Goodwin Re-engaged

Harold Goodwin, who took a big step upward in his career with the portrayal of the juvenile leading role in "The Flirt," and who has appeared in a dozen other Universal pictures, has been signed by Universal for the next Hoot Gibson vehicle, "The Ramblin' Kid,"

BRILLIANT TRIO CAST FOR "THE ACQUITAL"

A trio of players whose work has been highly approved by the public for some time will head the cast of the all-star Universal-Jewel production, "The Acquital," adapted by Jules Furthman from the Rita Weiman play and to be directed by Clarence L. Brown.

Norman Kerry, established through several excellent screen performances and about to be raised to a high plane of fame through "Merry-Go-Round," the Viennese film spectacle, will impart a dashing, romantic flavor to the leading masculine role.

Claire Windsor, heroine of ten big pictures of the past, will play the leading feminine role, which gives her more of an emotional opportunity than any previous portrayal.

Richard Travers, known for consistently successful work with five or six leading producers, will play the "heavy" role.

Entertains Miss Ulric

Lenore Ulric was the guest of honor at an informal courtesy luncheon tendered her by Warner Brothers, motion picture producers, on the eve of her transcontinental trip to Hollywood to star in "Tiger Rose."

McGRAIL GETS BIG ROLE IN "THE BAD MAN"

Walter McGrail, popular screen "heavy" and leading man, has been chosen by Edwin Carewe to play the part of Morgan Pell in the screen version of "The Bad Man," which Carewe is to produce and direct for First National.

With the engagement of McGrail the four principal roles for this brilliant satirical comedy play have now been filled. The remaining parts will be assigned during the next few days and production has been started.

Holbrook Blinn, who has starred for more than three years in the original stage production of "The Bad Man," is to have the same role in the First National picturization. Other parts have so far been assigned to Enid Bennett and to Jack Mulhall.

In the villainous role of Morgan Pell, a wealthy oil company agent and brutal husband, McGrail will have a part in which he will be right at home, for such parts have been his lot in many of the screen's most recent big productions.

His histrionic career covers, not only the screen, but also the legitimate stage, vaudeville and comic opera. His original motion picture engagement was with Vitagraph for whom he played in leads for five years. He played the leading male role in "Suzanna" opposite Mabel Normand and also played either lead or principal 'heavy" role in these recent successes: "Light's Out," "The Top of New York," "The Cradle" and "Wolf Fang."

GELDERT RETURNS TO DENY HE'S INJURED

On returning from location with the De Mille Company, where scenes for "The Ten Commandments" were shot, Clarence H. Geldert, a member of the cast, was surprised to hear that he had been reported seriously injured in the chariot race in which a score of actors were hurt.

Mr. Geldert, who portrays the role of the High Priest in "The Ten Commandments," is very much alive and uninjured for the simple reason that he wasn't a participant in the thrilling race. Having only recently recovered from an injury received during the filming of "Richard The Lion Hearted," Geldert was fortunate in not being cast as a charioteer.

Barbara Bedford, who played a principal role in "The Spoilers," and in the past two years has given some very charming portrayals to the screen, has been engaged by Universal to play the "heavy" feminine role of "The Acquittal."

ELECTRICAL CHIEF IS BURNED BY HOT CARBON

Lew Johnson, chief electrician of the Norma Talmadge company, was severely burned on the right hand by hot carbons during the filming of the final scenes of Miss Talmadge's latest photoplay, "Purple Pride," at the United Studios, Hollywood.

The scene was in a large castle representing the days of Charles IX of France. One of the large spot-lights on the highest run-way became loose and toppled just as Director Frank Lloyd gave the order to shoot. Luckily, a single rope held fast, but the eight-inch lens cracked and broke, spilling hot glass and burning carbons.

Johnson shouted for Miss Talmadge to move to safety. He rushed in to seize her just in time to ward off a large piece of burning carbon, sustaining very painful burns on the right hand.

"Purple Pride" is being made by Producer Joseph M. Schenck for release through Associated First National, Inc.

Apfel Formerly a Banker

If Oscar Apfel ever is handed a script with a banker for the lead he will not have to hire a leading man, for he can handle the role himself. The Metro director, who is making Viola Dana's "The Girl Who Dared," started his business career as a teller in Cleveland, Ohio. The drabness of banking palled upon him, then he became an actor, later a stage director, and then a screen megaphone wielder. Among his best known pictures are "The Squaw Man," "Brewster's Millions," "The Man on the Box' and "Ten Nights is a Barroom.'

"Wes" Writes Song

Wesley Barry, besides bursting into adolescent youth, has also burst into the ranks of song composers with a popular song entitled "If I Knew You Really Loved Me," which will soon be published. His admirers are wondering if the song is the result of sheer inspiration, or whether experience is to blame. He is now busy on his latest Warner Brothers picture, "The Printer's Devil," written for him by Julien Josephson.

Fred Farrell returned this week from Laguna Beach, where Henry Otto was filming "Temple of Venus" and has been engaged by James Flood to work in his next Fox Production.

Florence Campbell has been signed by Grand Studios to work in the Monty Banks Productions. Miss Campbell has just completed a contract with Fox, where she has been engaged in the "Temple of Venus' being produced by Director Henry Otto.

BUDDY, FILM CANINE, GETTING NEW HOME

We have all heard about the sumptuous homes occupied by motion picture stars, but little has been said about the living quarters of the canine stars, who often figure so prominently in pictures. Buddie, the intelligent film canine, who has played important parts in many screen successes, wishes to announce through his master, Henry East, that he is having a new miniature bungalow constructed on his new two-acre homesite in Laurel Canyon. When completed Buddie may give a house warming party to his many friends, with bones being a feature of the menu. He has just finished an engagement at the Fox studios where he played in support of Dustin Farnum in "The Man Who Won."

Upon returning from his vacation, John Rikkleman, secretary and treasurer of the Fine Arts studios, declares he was surprised to read in the press stories stating that his plant had been sold. "The Fine Arts studios has not been sold," says Mr. Rikkleman, "it still remains in the hands of myself and Nat Deverich, president. Any reports to the contrary are erroneous."

Dorothy Seay has been cast to do a gypsy part in Pola Negri's "The Spanish Dancer" being produced at Lasky's by Herbert Brennon.

TYRONE POWER ARRIVES ON GOLDWYN "LOT"

Tyrone Power, one of the leading figures of the American stage, has arrived in Los Angeles from New York accompanied by his wife, who was Bertha Knight, a former Los Angeles girl and graduate from the old Los Angeles High School.

Power, who came West to interpret the part of Michael Anstell, in Tod Browning's production of "The Day of Faith" at the Goldwyn studios, just closed a successful eastern season in "The Lights of Broadway."

Power comes from a family of actors, his father, Harold Power, and his grandfather, Tyrone Power I, are two of the outstanding figures of the American and European stage. Besides being an actor, Power is an accomplished musician and painter, his last portrait of his wife having sold for a thousand dollars.

"The Day of Faith" will be Power's fifth picture as he appeared in "Where Are My Children?" "The Black Panther's Cub," "Dream Street," and "Fury."

Pete Morrison has just finished "Under the Border," a mining story, at Universal City. It was adapted by George Pyper from a magazine story by Clarence A. Locan, former San Francisco newspaperman and now of the Universal publicity department. It appeared in story form two years ago.

Possibly About You----

E. Lloyd Sheldon, production editor at the Paramount Long Island Studio, has returned to New York after a short stay in New London, Conn., where Thomas Meighan and a company of players are making scenes for "Homeward Bound" under the direction of Ralph Ince.

Alfred E. Green and Thomas Geraghty are at George Ade's home conferring with him on the next production in which Thomas Meighan is to be starred, "All Must Marry." These four men were responsible for "Back Home and Broke," one of Meighan's biggest Paramount successes.

Ann Little, daring star of "The Eagle's Talons" at Universal City, had a narrow escape during a cliff scene in one of the episodes this week. While waiting for a scene her foot slipped and she dropped part way down the cliff. A jutting shrub saved her. Too bad the camera missed it!

Ray Gray has completed his role in "Lights Out," the R-C production, and was immediately signed to play the role of director in H. C. Kitwer's "Fighting Blood" series. The role which Gray portrayed is one which requires subtle handling, a villain.

Ralph Lewis has returned from Chicago, where he went to spend a few days with his father who was critically ill. His father, Capt. E. R. Lewis, died within a few hours of the arrival of his son. Lewis remained in Chicago and arranged the funeral ceremony, which service was conducted by the Masonic order of which Capt. Lewis was a charter member. Work on Lewis' next F. B. C. production "The Mailman," under the direction of Emory Johnson, was delayed during his absence in Chicago.

Derelys Perdue is now resting upon the completion of her latest Robertson-Cole production, "Blow Your Own Horn." A visit to Los Angeles' Seventh Street shopping district is Miss Perdue's daily venture, as the wardrobe in her next vehicle is to be resplendent.

Earl Metcalfe, who played a prominent part in Walter Heirs "Fair Week" at Lasky's, has been engaged to do the heavy in a Fox Special under the direction of Scotty Dunlap, with Horace Hough as assistant. Other members of the cast who are in support of Buck Jones featured are Fred Eric, Peggy Shaw, Jacquelin Gadson, Fred Kelsey, Claude Payton, Laura Anson and Will Chapman.

ALL BUT THREE IN "GREED" CAST COMPLETE WORK

With the completion of this week's work on "Greed," Erich von Stroheim's picturization of Frank Norris' "McTeague,' all but three members of the cast will have finished their parts in the picture.

Gibson Gowland, playing the role of McTeague, ZaSu Pitts, and Jean Hersholt will stay with the company, now in San Francisco, for the remaining scenes. Sylvia Ashton, Chester Conklin, Dale Fuller, Fanny Midgley, Hughie Mack and Joan Standing will return to Los Angeles.

Von Stroheim and the three remaining players will go to Death Valley for final scenes for "Greed,' after work is finished in San Francisco.

GOLDEN CHANCES

The latest production from the Hal Roach studios, "What Should A Girl Do," directed by Roy Clemens and starring Edna Murphy, boasts of an exceptionally fine supporting cast, among which is Lois Golden. Miss Golden recently scored a decided hit at the Majestic Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif., in "East Is West," presented by the Wilkes Stock Company.

At the age of five she made her debut on the stage in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," playing the part of little "Tommy." She also has the distinguished honor of having been selected in a beauty contest for resembling Mary Pickford the closest of any of the other contestants. As winner of this contest she was engaged to ride on a float in a parade in connection with the showing of Mary Pickford's photoplay "Tess of the Storm Country" in her city.

Miss Golden was born in Seattle, Wash., and is now approaching her 17th golden summer. She can already boast of a professional career that makes the veterans of the footlights envious, and it is predicted by her many friends that she has a very bright future ahead of her in the photoplay world.

TO SHOW "YOUTH TRIUMPHANT" SHORTLY

"Youth Triumphant," the initial Fisher Production, is now entirely finished with the work of titling and editing the film just concluded under the direction of Lillian Ducey, who also adapted the story from George Gibbs' book and staged the scenario.

The production will have an early Los Angeles release. Negotiations with various big distributing organizations who have made offers to the Fisher company for world's rights on the picture, are now under way and a definite announcement as to the distribution of "Youth Triumphant" and future Fisher productions will be made within the next ten days.

Meantime, plans are already under way for the Los Angeles premiere of "Youth Triumphant" at one of the leading theatres here. Virginia Lee Corbin and other members of the cast will participate in person in the local presentation of the photoplay, and arrangements for stage, prologue and musical settings for this occasion will soon be completed.

Victor B. Fisher, supervising director, leaves for New York shortly with the master print of the production to sign contracts for the American and foreign distributing rights. He will returne to Los Angeles immediately with several new stories for early picturization and to take care of the enlarged producing plans of the company which call for double the output originally outlined.

The work of Virginia Lee Corbin in this production and which marks her return to the screen after two years of theatrical engagements, is said to prove one of the outstanding artistic achievements on the screen the current season. Anna Q. Nilsson's portrayal as little Miss Corbin grown up, it is stated, is second only to the results registered by the girl actress.

Vidor Preparing "Wild Oranges"

King Vidor, the youthful Goldwyn director, who is personally adapting the Joseph Hergesheimer novel, "Wild Oranges," to the screen, will start camera work on the production in about three weeks. He will retain the same technical staff that assisted him making "Three Wise Fools," his first Goldwyn picture.

Fanchon Royer, a former editor of Camera!, succeeds Robert Sherwood at the critic's desk on The Story World and Photodramatist, Hollywood's foremost scenarist magazine.

POPULAR ACTOR OWNS NIECE OF PRESIDENT'S DOG

Truman Van Dyke, who is just finishing the portrayal of the important role of Leandre under Rex Ingram's direction in 'Scaramouche," is the proud possessor of what he calls "a canine of extraordinary distinction." And this is why—this dog he has just acquired is a niece of Laddie Boy, President Harding's widely famed pet and therefore the first dog of the land. Truman has christened his pup Dixie as a matter of recognizing his own loyalty to the south whence he hails and already Dixie is about the most talked-of and most admired animal in all Hollywood. With a pedigree the proverbial mile long, Dixie stands somewhat in a class itself so far as Southern California is concerned and although it betrays no signs of obnoxious ego, there is no mistaking the fact that it is not lacking in family pride.

To President Harding goes a great deal of credit for making the Airedale about the most popular dog in all dogdom and it has been noticeable in filmland that motion picture celebrities have vied with each other to increase the population of their kennels always a la Airedale. Thus far the score stands in Mr. Van Dyke's favor since he has been fortunate enough to corner one so distinguished in pedigree. Thus early he has been offered twice the amount he paid for Dixie, but he is steadfastly refusing all offers on the theory that "a dog like this is a dog of a life-time."

Prior to concentrating his brilliant talents on feature photoplays, Mr. Van Dyke was one of the foremost serial stars, he having won especial popularity as the hero of Seelig's "The Jungle Goddess."

Truman Van Dyke

Shows N. Y. "Broadway"

Irving Cummings is in New York proudly displaying the negative of "Broken Hearts of Broadway," his latest heart-throb drama of metropolitan life, in his suitcase. Since the completion of the picture which stars Colleen Moore and Johnnie Walker, with a stellar supporting cast including Alice Lake, Tully Marshall, Kate Price, Arthur Stewart Hull, Freeman Wood and Anthony Merlo, Cummings has had several offers from well-known distributors who saw it in preview. Cummings, however, gave his word not to dispose of "Broken Hearts of Broadway" on the coast before showing it to certain eastern film magnates and he stuck to his promise by taking the film East.

Patsy Miller Returns

After many months absence, and the winning of high honors afield, Patsy Ruth Miller will return to her studio home, according to announcement from the Goldwyn Studios that she will play the ingenue lead in Victor Seastrom's great production of "The Master of Men," from the novel by Sir Hall Caine.

Hampton Is Returning

Jesse D. Hampton, the film producer, is returning to Los Angeles immediately and has given up his plans for a European trip this summer, according to Karl Anderson, Hampton's representative here. Anderson, who assisted Hampton on his production of "The Spoilers" is now with Tod Browning on "The Day of Faith."

BARKER'S LATEST FILM FINISHED WITH LEAP

What is considered one of the most promising of the many big dramatic spectacles now under way for release during midsummer was completed last week when Reginald Barker staged a final thrill for his next Mayer-Metro special, "The Master of Woman," by having Pat O'Malley make a 125-foot jump from a precipice into a swirling river rapids to save Renee Adoree and Earle Williams from destruction in a water fall further on down the stream.

Ordinarily, such a daring leap would have been an unusual event in Pat's life, but after the hazards incurred during the months spent in the snowbound interior of Alberta, Canada, the shooting of the dangerous Seymour Canyon Rapids near North Vancouver, the adventurous thrills experienced in the Big Bear country and the several savage fights in which he participated on the studio sets, this last risk just represented another day's work to him. By photographing the jump from above Pat, the cameraman, Percy Hilburn, secured a weird effect that will bring people right out of their seats no matter how much they paid for them.

"The Master of Woman" is Barker's second independent unit production for Louis B. Mayer, and, according to all reports, it will stand out as his greatest achievement. A fiend for realism, as was proven by his startling forest fire in "Hearts Aflame," he has expended every effort toward making his new picture ring true to the last foot of film.

In addition to the players named above, the list of celebrities in the cast includes: Wallace Beery, Barbara La Marr, Josef Swickard, George Kuwa, Anders Randolf, Robert Anderson and Ed. J. Brady. Based on G. B. Lancaster's novel, "The Law-Bringers," the theme, while presenting Northwest Mounted Policemen among its principal characters, is not a story of the heroics of this famous red-coated soldiery. Fiery romance, deeply-sown love and tense drama predominate in the picture with good comedy, thrills, wonderful scenery and beautiful effects to maintain balance and even tempo. J. G. Hawks made the adaptation and Monte M. Katterjohn prepared the scenario.

Phillip La Vie is undergoing an operation at his home in Hollywood Canyon. His return to the screen will be immediate following the completion of the operation.

P. A. ENTERTAINS NEWSPAPER FRIENDS

Caroll Graham, of Joe Jackson's publicity staff at the Goldwyn Studios, who is handling the publicity on the "In the Palace of the King," staged a successful luncheon last Thursday—local newspaper and magazine scribes being the guests.

"Lap lunch" was served on the balcony of the Palace, some two hundred feet above terra-firma, giving the guests an excellent view of one of the largest and most complete sets ever constructed.

It was designed by Cedric Gibbons, art director of the Goldwyn studios, the castle being more than 200 feet in height and is in three wings, surrounding a courtyard, each wing several hundred feet in length. The construction manager stated that the labor and material involved in the general construction would build from fifty to sixty five-room bungalows.

The ageing of walls to depict a construction some century old, including every minute detail of vines and shrubs, birds' nests tucked away in almost invisible places, is faithfully carried out.

The palace set built at the Goldwyn studio is a reproduction of the palace of King Philip in Madrid, and practically the entire action takes place within the palace.

Emmett Flynn, recently put under contract by Goldwyn's, and who directed "A Connecticut Yankee" and "Monte Cristo," is making the picture.

DANCING WINS GIRL PLACE IN CINEMA SUN

At rare times there appears on the cinema horizon a few people whose work is of such magnetic quality and distinction that they almost instantaenously skyrocket to stardom of the highest order and judging from recent comments among prominent film producers, Susanna Thomas is one whose inclusion in this select group is definitely established by her work as a feature dancer in "Manslaughter," "Havoc," "Tut-ankhamen" and other notable screen productions.

Miss Thomas, who is 17 years of age and 5 feet 7 inches in height, is prominent in Los Angeles society. She is a niece of the late George Wilshire, who was one of the first among the elite of this city and the founder of the renowned residential section to the south of Hollywood that bears his name. In addition to her film work, Miss Thomas has appeared in terpsichorean and dramatic roles at the Philharmonic Auditorium, the Ambassador, Alexandria and Beverly Hills Hotels, and other favored gathering places.

Approximately 1,000 actors in addition to the principals were used in the scenes on the palace set. Don John was shown leading his army against the Moors in a conquest of Granada, and later, the victorious return of the army.

"TEA—WITH A KICK" GETS ACROSS WITH A KICK

"Tea—With a Kick," a sparkling comedy drama, in which more than twenty-seven well known artists appear, contained such a "kick" that Sid Grauman, now in New York on a business trip, personally booked the picture for presentation at his Third street theatre. Edward and Victor Hugo Halperin, producers of "Tea—With a Kick," were in New York at the time, negotiating for the release of the picture and were showing it before a gathering of film distribution officials. Grauman happened to be present. After the picture had been exhibited Grauman wired to Los Angeles to his office to make preparations to show the picture at his Million Dollar theatre for one week beginning June 18th.

This booking is looked upon with keen interest by the independent producers who heretofore have found it impossible to obtain a booking for their pictures in the Grauman theatres because it is generally known that these theatres are controlled by Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation and therefore seldom exhibit anything but Paramount features.

The booking is considered not only a great achievement for the Halperins but for the independent producers in general.

Simultaneously with its opening at Grauman's here, "Tea—With a Kick" opens at the Rialto, New York, thus booked in two of the largest theatres in the country.

One of the largest casts that has ever been assembled for a picture of its kind appear in "Tea—With a Kick." Among them are Creighton Hale, who plays the lead, Doris May, Gale Henry, Hank Mann, Victor Potel, Louise Fazenda, Billy Franey, Stuart Holmes, Rosemary Theby, Snitz Edwards, Sidney D'Albrook, Hazel Keener, Julanne Johnston, Irene D'Annalle, Ralph Lewis, Edward JoJbson, Chester Conklin, Harry Todd, Earl Montgomery, Zasu Pitts, Dot Farley, Fale Fuller, Spike Rankins and others, truly a cast of unusual strength.

The picture was directed by Erle Kenton, one of the screen's foremost directors of satire pictures, who is remembered for his pictures, "Down On the Farm," "A Small Town Idol," "Love, Honor and Behave," and others.

While the title of the picture would suggest that it deals with prohibition it does not take sides with either the "wets" or the "drys." A feature of the production is a huge ballet in which more than 100 dancers take part. Irene D'Annelle, who is known in Europe as well as America for her terpsichorean novelties, and who was featured in the Chauve-Souris on the Century Roof in New York for many months, directed the ballet scenes.

The Halperins are expected to close a deal shortly for the release of the picture and will then return to Los Angeles to resume work in the film producinfi field.

LOS ANGELES GETS DURO ESTABLISHMENT

The return from the east this week of Paul Engstrom, president of the Duro System of Auto Refinishing, brings important news to the motoring public of Southern California and Los Angeles in particular. According to Mr. Engstrom, negotiations have been closed whereby the manufacturers of the Rolls-Royce, Cunningham, Franklin and many other of the country's most expensive automobiles are now turning their cars out with this new system of finishing.

The most important part of Mr. Engstrom's announcement is that it is now possible to apply this system of finishing to cars in Los Angeles, at a price no greater than a first-class paint job.

Motor car manufacturers are most enthusiastic over the success that Duro has made in the east, during the rigid tests to which it was subjected. Mr. Engstrom declares the finish applied by the Duro System will not check, scratch or fade, which fact is almost unbelieveable to men who have had any experience with automobile painting. It is considered one of the most important advancements in the automobile world and those familiar with its accomplishments do not hesitate to predict a most successful future for it.

AND FROM ACORNS GROW BIG TREES

Further indication of the general prosperity which the motion picture industry is now enjoying is reflected in the announcement issued by Edah B. Arthur, proprietress and general manager of the Screen Stars Wardrobe Exchange, that the establishment is moving to new and more spacious quarters at 1060 North Western Avenue, near Santa Monica Boulevard.

In conjunction with a few associates Mrs. Arthur has built up a big wardrobe business within the last six months and the announcement of the removal to larger quarters augurs well for these enterprising and energetic young women. They are making a specialty of selling gowns, suits, furs, hats, shoes and other feminine wearing apparel which is placed on consignment with them by some of the most prominent of Hollywood's cinema ladies, and the values which they are offering are really attractive, selling beautiful apparel for almost half-price, and at rare times cutting down figures nearly 80 per cent.

The tremendous turn-over which they enjoy enables them to do this at a profit. Greater significance is attached to this announcement than would be ordinarily when one stop to consider that Mrs. Arthur began her business on practically nothing except several gowns which had been placed with her by a prominent actress who was interested in her proposition and expressed a desire to help her. Needless to say this same star still does business with her, and is taking an active interest in the progress of the thriving little concern. Her confidence has been well rewarded.

Fate Is With Her

Dorothy Chase, erstwhile publicity writer for Marjorie Warfield, Mickey McBan, and others, whose work in ingenue and character parts and bits has been creating considerable attention of late, thoroughly believes in the truth of that well-known adage concerning "a tide in the affairs of men." An interesting combination of circumstances, ranging all the way from a chance bit given her with the Katherine MacDonald Company two years ago, to a trip East and the temporary retirement of her sister, Marjorie Warfield, from screen work, led up to her present occupation and rising success. Miss Chase has played with the Monty Banks Company, Century, Universal, Richard Thomas, Warner Brothers and others, and has just finished a bit in Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche."

TEARLE TO GET A BIG WAGE IN CONNIE FILM

Conway Tearle, one of the highest priced leading men in the films, has again affixed his signature to a Joseph M. Schenck contract. He will be featured in the big cast supporting Constance Talmadge in "A Dangerous Maid," a comedy-drama of revolutionary England of the 17th century, which Victor Heerman will direct. Production will start June 18th.

The consideration involved is said to exceed anything Tearle has ever received before. In securing him for Constance's first big historic serio-comedy, Producer Joseph M. Schenck had to outbid several other producers who were angling for his services.

Through his superlative portrayals in Norma Talmadge costume plays Tearle has won himself a place unrivalled among players of roles of this type. His work in "Purple Pride," the Norma Talmadge spectale of old France, which is now being completed under Frank Lloyd's direction, is conceded to mark the highest point in his distinguished career.

Tearle established himself firmly at the head of that small company of film artists capable of playing aristocratic roles by his deft handling of his leading part in "The Eternal Flame," in which Norma Talmadge starred. It is said that casting indexes contain only 300 out of Hollywood's 30,000 performers capable of carrying aristocratic roles, and of these Tearle is the arch-exponent.

IRENE RICH RETURNS READY FOR NEW FILM

Ruddy of cheek and bright of eye, Irene Rich, accompanied by her mother, who is more like a big sister than a parent, returned from a short vacation trip to San Francisco where she attended the opening of "Brass," in which she plays one of the main roles.

"I had to go through another ordeal," says Irene, who altogether is too modest for so popular a star, "you see, the whole object of having me in San Francisco at the opening was for a personal appearance. I just hate 'em, and from now on I'm going to stick to my trade—no more stage for me unless I go on with lines and everything. We had a dandy time, however."

She starts her first Warner starring story in the near future. It is "Lucretia Lombard," by Kathleen Norris.

Katharine Lewis has been engaged by Victor Seastrom to play one of the leading roles in "Masters of Men," his first production for Goldwyn.

McREA TO RETURN SOON FROM CAMERA EXPLORATION OF ORIENTAL COUNTRIES

Henry McRae, American Camera Explorer, who left Hollywood for the Orient several months ago, will sail with the members of his expedition for this country within a few weeks, according to advices which reached his representatives here this week.

In the course of his quest of the unusual in scenes of the Far East, Mr. McRae reports a success even beyond the hopes he entertained at the start.

His pictures for the most part have been taken in the remotest districts of Oriental countries, where natives at times not only have never heard of a railroad or an automobile, but refuse, to believe of their existence.

Their very ignorance was in many cases, writes the cinematographic explorer, an advan tage to his party and its aims for, never having seen or heard of a camera, much less a motion picture camera, there was met in many instances none of the superstitious fear of being photographed.

The itinerary of the McRae expedition included Japan, China, Siam, and some parts of southern India; and in the gathering of the pictorial data, more than 100,000 feet of film was expended, not including the retakes made necessary by the spoiling of much footage by the oppressive tropical heat.

The idea directing the selection of the film material by the McRae party was not panoramic but human. As the leader himself said:

"Because a range of mountains or a lake lie in a country no white man has ever seen does not make them distinctive. They look about the same as any other mountains or lake; and the subtitle descriptive of their remoteness will add little interest.

"But the people in such places will be different. Their customs, their habits of life, their forms of worship, their creeds of marriage, their dances in demonstration of joy or grief—these vary enormously.

"And what I have seen and caught with the camera is but a fragment, for all that it a hitherto unknown fragment. The Orient has not really been touched as yet. To have seen what we have seen is the only way to realize how much still there is to picture. It would take twenty years to cover thoroughly the material we have come upon, from which we have taken only the highlights.'

WOMAN BOOKING AGENT OF N. Y. VISITS HERE

Ada Humbert, one of New York's best known theatrical booking agents and one of the pioneer casting directors in the film field, is a visitor in the city this week.

Scores of former legitimate actors now employed in the films in Los Angeles will remember Ada Humbert as one of the most reliable and kindly agents on Broadway and many owe their initial engagements on both the speaking stage and in the movies to this popular woman.

While in the city, Miss Humbert is being entertained by Eulalie Jensen, well-known character leading woman, and James Woods Morrison, one of screenland's most handsome juvenile leads, both of whom date their friendship with the booking agent from the days of their respective debuts in the dramatic realm.

Gets Goat For "Sub"

Now that Harry Myers is cast as a newspaper publisher, in "The Printer's Devil," Wesley Barry's latest Warner Brothers production, he is tasting the woes and daily events that make a publisher's life a vale of tears. Harry's first bit is to receive a goat in payment for five years' subscription to his newly purchased paper. He is wondering if someone is going to give him an elephant for life subscription.

MURIEL DANA'S SCREEN WORK WINS FAVOR

Some child stars always seem very proud of the fact that he or she has appeared in so many productions, one starlet even going so far as to say she has appeared in sixty pictures, but Muriel Frances Dana is very proud of the fact that she has appeared in only eight pictures in her entire life. Upon arriving in Los Angeles some time ago, Baby Muriel was seen by Thomas H. Ince and engaged for an important role in "Hail the Woman!" Then followed roles in "Mother O' Mine," "A Fool There Was,' "White Hands," with Hobart Bosworth, "The Forgotten Law," "Can A Woman Love Twice?' "Desire" and "The Sunshine Trail." The two latter productions are as yet unreleased. To have acquired the popularity of this tiny star proves her work in these productions has been of the highest calibre.

Falls Into Harbor

Sandy Roth, the assistant director of "Little Johnny Jones," the Warner Brothers production of the George M. Cohan stage success starring Johnny Hines, has no faith in the proverb that "pride comes before a fall." Detailed to find a deep water spot on the San Pedro harbor, he was doing his best reconnoitering when he looked too far over the bank and slipped, tasting some rather muddy water.

SETS WRECKED BY DESERT SAND STORM

Making desert scenes for a production is not an easy task. Further evidence of this fact was carried home in the case of Principal Pictures Corporation's company filming of Harold Bell Wright's "When A Man's A Man" in the desert region of Arizona this week.

The company which includes many well-known artists, left Prescott, Arizona, their headquarters while on location, and drove twenty miles into the desert. Here tents were pitched and sets erected for "shooting."

During the evening of the second day, a strong wind arose which seemed to grow stronger as night fell. Several natives of Arizona warned the film players to return to Prescott for the night, but early morning filming was on their schedule and director Edward F. Cline, after a quick consultation with the members of the company, decided to remain where they were.

A few hours later a huge sand mountain was seen forming in the distance and as it moved toward the movie camp, it enlarged itself into mountain size.

A property man gave warning and the company was awakened. Quick exit was the only thing that saved them from the onrushing sand-storm which demolished their sets and ripped the canvass from their tents as a clown dog would do with a paper hoop in a circus ring.

The residents of Arizona state these sand mountains form very quickly and move rapidly with the wind, tearing away the brush and all obstacles in their path. They subside almost as quickly as they form.

Among those who were endangered in the sand storm were Marguerite de la Motte, John Bowers, Robert Frazer, June Marlowe, and a host of others equally popular in filmdom. The company returned at once to Prescott, and hereafter will travel to "location" every morning, returning to safety in town at the conclusion of each day's work.

Louise's Birthday

Louise Fazenda is on the June birthday calendar. It's the seventeenth and on the same day, but not year, when, according to the learned comedy queen, the Battle of Bunker Hill was fought. In the role of "Mabel," chief of "The Gold Diggers," Louise showed the battling spirit, scoring twice with the office boy, in recent shots. It might not look well in print to say the office boy seemed to be knocked down. But maybe the shades of '76 were jogging the Fazenda elbow!

SEELING AND HIS STAR IN PLANE THRILLER

George Larkin, star of Charles R. Seeling Productions, and Doris Dare, his leading woman, miraculously escaped serious and perhaps fatal injury a few days ago during the filming of scenes for the company's latest picture, "The Tango Cavalier," in which an aeroplane was playing an important part. The experience of the players was related today following their recovery from cuts and bruises received in the accident.

Hanging head downward from the plane, Larkin was preparing to pull Miss Dare out of a speeding automobile. The day was very windy and one quite unfavorable for flying, especially for stunt flying. As Pilot Goebel dipped his plane toward the speeding auto it suddenly rocked then dropped. Grabbing Miss Dare by the hands, Larkin was thrown violently against the car which sped on as the plane swerved to one side and sped along only a few feet from the ground. Although a bad cut on his head was bleeding profusely, Larkin, with sheer grit, hung to the plane and to Miss Dare while both were dragged along the ground for many feet.

When the plane started to rise Larkin worked himself and Miss Dare onto one of the wings and it then dropped to the ground and came to a stop. During the excitement Vernon Walker, cameraman, had to jump for his life when the plane swerved to the side unexpectedly. His camera narrowly escaped being destroyed by the plane. Charles R. Seeling, who was directing the scene, suffered cuts and bruises when he attempted to rescue the pair from their perilous position. He was knocked over by the plane and received injuries to his face, legs and other parts of his body.

The players, together with Director Seeling, were rushed to a physician where they were given first aid treatment and then taken to their homes.

The scene in which the accident occurred was later exhibited in the studio projection room and according to those who have viewed it, it is one of the most unusual and thrilling scenes of its kind that has ever been recorded by a motion picture camera and adds the greatest interest and value to the production.

Malcolm St. Clair, who recently completed his contract with Robertson-Cole, for whom he directed H. C. Witwers "Fighting Blood" series, has returned from his vacation which was spent at Laguna Beach. The drug stores will do big business in the cold cream departments it is predicted.

IF MICKEY BECOMES A GENERAL, THIS IS WHY

Talk about fighting blood! If little Mickey McBan applies the same spirit and enthusiasm to his film work as his forefathers did to the business of battling, he's going to be one of the brightest constellations in the cinema sky. This four-year old actor, who is now enacting one of the major roles in "The Temple of Venus" which is being made at the Fox Studios under the direction of Henry Otto, has often been referred to as filmland's diminutive Rhoderick Dhu, but it is not until one has glanced over his long and distinguished list of ancestors that the true appropriateness of the title is revealed.

He is a direct descendant of Donald Ban, one of the first of the Scottish chiefs, and a favorite character in Highland lore. In the early part of the tenth century a merger between the Ban and McAlpin clans was effected only to be later nullified by intermarriages and a series of family feuds. The result was two new clans, the MacBeans and the MacBains. Mickey's people are all of the first named group, and it was this tribe that produced Gillis MacBean, the hero of the Battle of Collodon. As time went on the name MacBean gradually changed to McBan, and the members of Clan McBan became renowned for their prowess as warriors.

Frederick McBan, who was Mickey's great-grandfather, was a major of the Second Dragoon Guards of the Scots Greys, which has been rated as the best of Highland fighting units. He was slain at the Battle of Incaman in Russia, and his son, Wesley McBan, who was a captain of the Seaforth Highlanders, was killed in South Africa during the Boer War. The record was further immortalized by Mickey's father, Fred McBan, who saw active service at the front in France during the World War. He was a member of the regiment that included Sir Harry Lauder's son. Lauder's son was killed in action, but McBan came through unharmed and is now technical director of the Trimble-Murfin Productions producing the Strongheart series. He was born in Edinburgh and was educated at the schools there, at Finsbury College, London, and is a graduate of Columbia University in New York City.

All of these fighters are from his father's side, but his maternal ancestors are equally distinguished. His mother's mother was one of the Camerons of Australia, and her husband was aide-de-campe to the Governor of South Australia. Though the McBans and the McAlpins were the first of the Highland clans, and among the strongest, there are only six remaining members in the world today, according to the most authentic information. The McAlpin Hotel in New York was founded by members of this group, and is today in the hands of distant relatives of the little screen starlet.

With this warrior blood in his veins Mickey should be able to put up a good fight for celluloid stardom. Perhaps some day he will bring to the shadow stage a drama of those stirring days of Robert Bruce, of the time when the Highland clans held their own and protected their country against invasion by the soldiers of the British kings; a picture replete with the beauty of the lochs and glens of that distant country, that will bring a new and more compelling theme to the silversheet. Let the role of Rhoderick Dhu and those other romantic heroes be portrayed by one who is from their clans. It may be some time hence, but it will be worthy of patience on the part of art lovers.

Ben Hewlett has just finished a six weeks engagement with the Robertson-Cole Studios, playing the "Heavy" in their special, "Lights Out."

It is rumored about Hollywood that Tiny Sandford, who is playing the heavy in Sherwood MacDonald's Circus picture featuring Gloria Joy, is looking for a letter of introduction to his family.

Tiny has been going at top speed the past few months and wishes he had been born twins instead of "one big one" so he could carry on his work and at the same time keep on speaking terms with the family.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles King of 1524 Hudson Avenue, announce the arrival of a nine-pound boy. Mother and son are doing nicely.

HOLLYWOOD SOCIAL LEADER ENTERS PICTURES

After a prolonged absence from the screen, Miss Goldie Fessendo, one of Hollywood's charming society maids will again take up the more serious duties of characterizing the blonde vamp in the silent drama. Miss Fessendo is a typical affirmative reply to the much discussed topic as to which is the more "deadlier"—the blonde or the brunette type of vamp, and is one of screenland's most beautiful blondes, her versatility, however, lending itself to a wide range of roles, from comedy to heavy dramatics.

In her recent appearance on the screen she portrayed the vamp role in Leslie T. Peacock's production, "The Midnight Flower," in which she scored a decided success, her efforts being pronounced by the critics as a superior piece of art. Previous to that role she was cast with Wm. Farnum in "The Tale of Two Cities,' and with George Walsh in "Black and White."

Miss Fessendo is a professional classical dancer of more than usual ability, having appeared on the Pantages circuit in that capacity and has also been booked with her dancing partner as "The Castles of the Coast.' Her stage and dancing career began at the age of four at which time she took the leading dancing part in the production of "Ben Hur." Miss Fessendo says that she attributes her success in dramatics, expression and dancing to thorough study and concentration, having been a pupil at the Boston School of Expression, the Cummock School of Expression and has studied voice under Professor Miller at the University of California.

Miss Fessendo has also endeared herself to the Los Angeles and Hollywood public for having so often lent her talent to charitable and other social benefits, having depicted the role of Galatia, of Pygmalion and Galatia at one of the annual benefits at the Auditorium given by the Theatrical Mechanical Association; appeared with Lillian Burkhardt in the Four Season Dance, the "Kirmess," a benefit for the Los Angeles Orphans Home and took a prominent part in the Sunshine Society Ball to benefit the "Shut-ins" and invalids.

It Was Lincoln's Move

Lincoln Plumer and family lived in Los Angeles three years. Last week, while motoring out Hollywood way, the wife remarked, "I think Hollywood is the garden spot of the world."

Lincoln's address has been changed to the Hollymar Apartments.

LITTLE BO PEEP

ther between, and then at length sleep came to relieve the tortured little soul of the terror of consciousness.

At the end of fourteen years the little child who had cried herself to sleep on that frightful night of hunger and loneliness, wakened at dawn on the same straw mattress into which she had sobbed her first childish grief. When the earliest ray of sun crept through the tiny window to caress the tangled flaxen curls, she streched a slim bare leg from beneath her ragged blanket, brushed the lingering dreams from her eyes, shook the loose straw from her head and shoulders as she jumped to her feet. She was dressed in the garments of a boy,—a pair of trousers that ended well above the knees, a loose blouse, girded in at the waist with a bit of rope, the sleeves of which fell away from her round white arms in tatters—leaving them bare almost to the shoulders.

As she drew water from the well and set it to boiling over the fire, the man in the opposite corner of the room turned over on his bed of straw and watched her with sullen, disapproving eyes. The girl was mixing meal and milk in a stone bowl, and as she worked she sang softly to herself with a voice as sweet as a meadow lark's. The man in the corner rose from his bed and streched his great brawny body. Then turned upon the girl.

"Quit that infernal racket I tell you; It's bad enough that I should see you—without hearin' you all the time!"

So the singing stopped and the meal was ground in silence.

Since that night when Patrick MacMahon had returned and found his home deserted, a black cloud seemed to have settled about him, folding hin in and shutting out the sunlight from his life. And he gave vent to all his ill feelings against the world through unkindness toward any living thing, and in particular toward the daughter he wished had been a boy.

Among the villagers he was known as "Black Patrick," and they often shook their heads in regret of the change that had taken place in him. The girl had grown up without friend or companion—knowing no love save that given her by the sheep dog and the flocks she herded. Her father never called her by name, and to the villagers she was known only as "Bo Peep," the nickname given her by her mother.

While "Black Patrick" stood at the side of the cabin dashing his eyes with cold water, Bo Peep ushered a fat sow and her ten chubby offspring to the hearthstone where she placed a bowl of milk for the tiny pigs. Then she turned back the blanket from her straw bed and gathered the soft wooly body of a baby lamb to her breast, crooning soft words to the little creature. She stood with it in her arms rocking it gently to and fro, when the doorway of the cabin was darkened by the entrance fo "Black Patrick." The frown deepened upon his brow as his eyes fell upon the old sow and her young one.

"So," he growled, "You feed the swine while I stand around empty!"

And with several kicks he sent the little pigs tumbling across the door sill. Bo Peep's eyes were filled with an unspoken hurt, and she quickly stowed the baby lamb away in her straw bed.

"Your breakfast is cooking, father," she said, then with a coaxing little smile she drew nearer to him, adding: "Come, let me take the bits of straw from your beard while we wait." But Patrick brushed her roughly aside, saying:

"Think you I can let half the day go by while you fool around with your eternal nonsense?" and the smile faded from Bo Peep's lips, as she turned away to take the meal cakes from the glowing coals.

In silence they ate their breakfast, while Bo Peep, under cover of the table, dropped bits of food into the waiting jaws of a huge, shaggy shepherd dog. At length she timidly addressed the sullen man who sat across the table, "Father," she said, smiling up at him, "They say that today the Prince will pass through the village on his way to the hunt. I wish that I might see him—only I couldn't leave my sheep—could I, father?"

Patrick scowled at her until her smile was gone. He did not like that smile; it made him remember things. "Faith!" he sneered, "A pretty pass we've come to when a maid can leave her flock and hie herself off to the village for a holiday to see a paltry Prince pass by!"

So Bo Peep did not go to the village that day. Instead she gathered her curls up under a peaked clap, adorned with a scraggly feather, and taking her little lamb under one arm unlatched the pasture gates and followed her flock of snowy sheep along the winding stream to the hillside where they grazed.

Alone with her flock she sat beneath a shady tree and watched the white clouds dirfting across the sky—like so many sheep. "The wind must be their shepherd," she whispered to herself. Often she was lonely as she sat there on the hillside, but she would have been more lonely were she not able to make companions of the beings who dwelt in her imagination. She was sure that fairies lived in the hollow trees, and she liked to pretend she was one of them. She knew that the birds understood when she talked to them, and many of her sheep she knew by name, and when she called they would come and eat out of her hand. She wondered about many things as she sat there alone, and most of all she wondered why the birds and the sheep and the fairies could not quite keep her from being lonely. She did not know that it was love for which she longed, —the love of a mother, and the need of a human companion.

Suddenly the quick, muffled beat of horses' hoofs upon the hillside trail broke in upon her lonely musings. One of the great sheep dogs stood alert, his ears bent forward, his inquisitive nose sniffing the air excitedly. Then he bounded away through the trees and reached the path just in time to dart suddenly out from under the underbrush and bark ferociously at the heels of the galloping horse. Frightened by the sudden appearance of the dog the horse stopped short, reared up on its hind legs, pawed the air with its forefeet, and then as it broke into a mad run, stumbled over the barking dog that darted across the path under its very heels.

Bo Peep sprang to her feet. She had

Charles Murray quit the C. C. Burr organization last week to retire from pictures. Charles says he may do one once in a blue moon for pastime, but not again as a steady diet.

If you Hollywoodians want to see a great show don't fail to see, "Romeo and Juliet," with Jane Cowl. The Shakesperian play has just closed a twenty week run at the Henry Miller Theatre and will open in Los Angeles at the Mason July 30th.

The Annual Gambol of the Lambs at the Earl Carrol Theatre Sunday night is said to haved grossed $15,000 for the organization. The programs brought $9000.

Tears and laughter mingled freely Saturday night when Will Rogers cried as he said Au Revoir to his pals (men and girls) at the "Follies." Rogers left for the Coast.

heard the howl of the dog, the cry of a man, and a heavy thud as the horse and rider were thrown to the ground. She left her sheep and ran through the tangle of brush. The horse had struggled to its feet, and now stood at the side of the path, its flesh still quivering with fright. The sheep dog came limping toward her, his tail drooping sadly and one paw lifted from the ground, but the rider was nowhere to be seen.

And then she found him—a still dust covered figure lying in the underbrush, a cut at the edge of his hair where his head had struck against a stone, a tiny trickle of blood coursing down his cheek. Bo Peep knelt at his side and lifted his head to her lap. When her fingers touched the red blood on his cheek her eyes filled with sudden tears, and to the dog that crouched beside her she whispered tremblingly—"Oh Shamrock—see what you have done! He is hurt—he does not speak—and there is blood upon his face!"

Then resting his head upon a bed of moss, she went to his horse and took from behind the saddle a canteen of water, and bending over him again bathed his face with a bit of cloth torn from the tattered sleeve of her blouse.

Slowly the man's eyes opened, and as from a distance he heard a soft voice whisper: "Look Shamrock—he wakens! And soon he will speak to us!"

For a moment more the stranger lay still and felt the soft touch of gentle fingers as they smoothed the hair back from his forehead. Then he drew himself up on one elbow and looked at the little figure that knelt beside him. The wide open blue eyes were smiling frankly into his own, and the peaked cap, adorned with its scraggly feather and pulled down low at a jaunty angle, allowed not even one tiny curl to peek from beneath its edge. The man's lips parted in an answering smile: "You have been good to me little lad," he said.

PICTURES AND PAINTINGS

of structures that house lions, tigers, leopards and less common animals of the jungle. Close at hand are another series of cages that hold birds of gay plumage, baboons and other members of the monkey family. When the animal and bird population celebrate the approach of mealtime by lifting up their combined voices the writer has every opportunity to set her story to an impressive, if not tuneful, melody.

The latest contribution of the speaking stage is the person of Joseph Schildkraut, he of "Liliom" fame, who has just completed work in the New York theatre Guild's production of "Peer Gynt." Mr. Schildkraut will play the leading male role in Victor Seastrom's production of "Master and Man," now under production at the Goldwyn studios.

Gambling on the future popularity of today's screen favorites, a hazardous occupation of picture producers in the past, appears to have become as much a matter of business sagacity as a London Lloyd's policy. The straws that show the direction of the wind now are being used to show the location and volume of screen applause.

Back of the announcement that Kenneth Harlan has signed a long term contract with Preferred Pictures under the most favorable of conditions, is a story of the manner in which favorites are identified by the producer.

"Make-Up Headquarters of the Motion Picture Industry"

IT is very difficult to satisfy motion picture people where make-up is concerned for a good make up is absolutely essential to the perfect interpretation of a part, and this means that they must exercise the greatest discrimination in the selection of their material. Probably an unusual sales knack has been responsible for our consistent success, but we prefer to credit it to the quality of our merchandise and the conscientious service we render. We believe we can say in all sincerity that everyone who has patronized us has become our steadfast friend.

As the Editorial Mind Works

Fortune smiles on the one who smiles on misfortune and everything in all creation frowns on any frown. So, why frown?

Occasionally there is reason to doubt someone, but as a general rule, doubts are uncalled-for. Filmland is no place for Doubting Thomases just as it is no place for Cheap Johns. The chap who is most welcome is the Tom, Dick or Harry who's in earnest and will work assiduously and honestly.

Troublesome times are ahead in the Ruhr nor is the Chinese situation encouraging and the Balkan question is up again, all of which is mentioned merely to remind one and all just how lucky a fellow is to be living amid the glories of Southern California, where peace and prosperity rule supremely.

"Opera de Photoplay" is one of the possibilities of the early future and in fact it is being tried in a practical way right now. What, with musical movies, can be the next goal for those ever in quest of something new under the sun which is supposed to shine upon no such a thing!

Although you do not hear so much about it any more, the high cost of living is still well elevated. We bought a new straw the other day and if we had bought it one day earlier we would have saved fifty cents. We're not complaining, but we are pointing out the incontrovertible fact that prices seem as reluctant to come down as wages are to go up.

Motion picture people will find much to appeal to their artistic desires in the symphony concerts to be given in the Hollywood Bowl this summer and it is to be hoped that they will prove their willingness to support something so worth-while in musical uplift. Meanwhile it will help prodigiously to have it become known generally that photoplayers as a body are more interested in the best there is in music than they are in "wild parties," which have been so greatly exaggerated by the press at large.

Liquor is getting more plentiful in Prohibition America every day. In fact, it is getting so plentiful that the prices are being reduced amazingly. Practically none of the best citizens are helping in any way to have the liberty-denying law enforced and as a consequence it is the greatest farce ever written as legislation. Now why in the name of very ordinary common-sense doesn't the populace of the nation arise in its might and obliterate all this illicit traffic by legalizing light wines and beers whereby the fabulous fortunes boot-leggers are making would be diverted into the federal treasury in the form of taxes, automatically reducing several totally unfair taxations under which the people are now struggling so valiantly!

According to reports emanating from those "in the know," this is no time for anyone in any branch of the picture-making business to make a "blind jump" to New York City with the idea of getting an engagement there, because conditions are decidedly bad throughout Gotham so far as filming activities are concerned. It is estimated that practically ninety per cent of all filming is being done in Southern California and this is the place to stay if the wolves of poverty are to be kept away. Other conditions in the business world in general are good throughout the east and there is a more rapid movement towards normalcy than ever before since the war, but Los Angeles and environs constitute the center of photoplay-building and it is therefore the center of jobs in this line of work.

Those who make motion pictures and those who take them are both important, but those who pay for the making and the taking—the great army of patrons of movie theatres—are even more important and should be at the bottom of every consideration more than ever now. It is no longer to be accepted without reservation that no one knows what the public wants, because it is being demonstrated that it is not difficult to ascertain this pretty accurately. Most everybody should know the public wants good pictures and most anybody who knows anything at all about the various elements entering into the making of a good motion picture should know just about how to go about supplying the demand. Frankly, there is seldom any excuse whatsoever for a bad picture in these days of abundance of all kinds of film-wise brains.

It is utterly beyond the normal comprehension why Los Angeles newspapers are so ready to present news of inevitable tragedies in the film world in ways so derogatory to film folk in general. Is it not enough to have out-of-town papers take advantage of opportunities to scandalize? Verily, it would seem the part of the most fundamental prudence and simple conservation of civic pride to adopt policies such as would at least avoid unsavory intimations founded entirely upon some reporter's conclusions. If the Detroit newspapers defamed people in the motor car industry with as much reckless abandon as Los Angeles newspapers defame people in the motion picture industry, there probably would be a protest of national scope if such scandalizing tended to interfere with the efficiency in automobile factories and the morale of those upon whom the legions of people depend for dependable motor service. It is certain the proclivity of the local dailies for making mountains out of mole-hills every time a screen celebrity breaks into print unfavorably has a detrimental effect upon the morale of the big army of earnest men and women upon whom the great public depend for the best humanly possible in the way of motion picture entertainment. Is it just or is it right?

ANNOUNCING the establishment of a complete and comprehensive motion picture publicity service at 6318 Hollywood Boulevard under the direction of who has relinquished the advertising management of "Camera!" to Mr. John Cornyn in order to devote more time to his publicity accounts. Mr. Fox will continue with this publication as Director of Advertising Copy and Exploitation, but the active liason between advertisers and the magazine will be carried on by Mr. Cornyn.

No effort will be spared in rendering an unexcelled publicity and exploitation service. Inquiries are invited from progressive players, directors and producers who realize the value of the right kind of publicity, preferably those who have established themselves to some degree in the profession.

Moderate rates will prevail. All types of material will be handled; newspaper and magazine news bulletins and feature stories with local, national and international distribution. Our aim is to supply the press with truthful, timely, and interesting news; news that will be NEWS for the newspaper and PUBLICITY for the client.

A Eulogy Due and by Others Unpaid

When the news of the untimely and tragic death of Evelyn Nelson was broad-casted to the public this week by the Los Angeles newspapers, the facts and alleged facts were presented in such a way as to leave room for most any kind of an unsavory deduction as to the real story behind the sad affair. Two outstanding facts were seized upon to give the accounts all the sensationalism of which the present-day yellow press is so abundantly capable—one was that Miss Nelson had ended her own life and the other was that she had been a motion picture actress. Certain passages in the farewell note she left to her mother and sister were distorted so as to make it appear as if she might have been a drug addict. Those who knew Miss Nelson best know there could be no malicious conclusion farther from the truth inasmuch as she at no time in her life ever had any objectionable habits of any sort.

The possibility of a love affair with a prominent screen star being the cause of the unfortunate girl's ill-advised act may be deserving of some credence, but certainly not in the light ungraciously chosen by the news writers of the day. It is a common occurrence for suicide to follow unrequited love or bitter disappointment in the turn of events which seem to close the door to one's prospects for future happiness. Self-destruction under such circumstances is not nearly so extraordinary as it was made to seem in this instance merely because people prominent in the motion picture world were involved.

The contents of the late Miss Nelson's last note would indicate that discouragement over her struggle for success as an artist was more to blame for her temporary derangement of mind than anything else. But to be satisfied with a cause so lacking in sensational elements did not seem to be possible with those who wrote the reports of the tragedy. There can be no gainsaying the rank injustice heaped upon members of the cinema fraternity by the press on the slightest excuse and in this case a young woman of very fine character and many admirable traits was the victim of such maligning after she had ceased to be capable of defending herself.

Here is the farewell note she left and it is printed verbatim with no additions or eliminations:

Mother Dear and Dot:

I am going away tonight. I am tired. I know I am being very unkind to you. I love you both. I know you have done all you could to make me happy. I have lost my ambition. I don't even want to work any more and I couldn't if I wanted to. I want rest more than anything in the world and I am going to find it. Please forgive me if you can. God bless you both. EVELYN.

As must be perfectly apparent to everyone, it would be difficult to so far misconstrue these lines into giving any substance to any theories having to do with the use of "dope" or an ill-fated romance. Of course there are those who know Miss Nelson had fostered a strong, honorable affection for a certain young man, but the fact that if there was such a love affair there was no happy fruition to it does not justify intimations reflecting discredit upon anyone. The willingness of the local press to lead a large public into jumping to such conclusions simply because the ones involved in the story happen to be picture people is not to be condoned by anyone believing in ordinary fair play. And, Miss Nelson's life was such as to command admiration rather than implied condemnation. Her many friends know this positively, but due to the manner of presenting the story of her sad ending a very small percentage of the great public would believe it now. Therefore, she has been done an everlasting injury she in no way deserved.

The last rites conducted over her remains this week constituted an eloquent answer to all the attacks which have been made upon her by these uncalled-for inferences. Seldom has a funeral in filmland been so largely attended by so many notables of the great industry in which she was respected. The floral offerings were so extensive as to make it a really difficult problem to care for all of them.

Those who served as pall-bearers were: Jack McDermott, Robert Dillon, Charles King, Craig Hutchinson, Leo White and S. W. (Doc) Lawson and each had known the deceased for many years, not one of them knowing one single thing which could be interpreted as derogatory to her character.

In conclusion, the tragic case of Evelyn Nelson shall go on record as an outstanding protest of all filmdom against the usual press treatment of its people and it is to be devoutly hoped all newspapers will see the error of their way in indulging in so much fulsome sensationalism and will make the distinct gain of devoting their energies to being more generous to those who pass into the Great Beyond.

The Fate of Big Pictures Promising

"Special pictures—bigger and better!"

"That's the cry going up from the general public using the exhibitors as a mouthpiece," declared Floyd Brockwell, general sales manager of First National Pictures, Inc., in an address before the annual convention of film sales managers from the principal cities of the Pacific Coast and the Rocky Mountain States.

"The cry for big specials cannot be resisted," says Brockwell. "The general public's taste for pictures advances just as fast as the art of picture-making progress. Exhibitors throughout the nation are convinced of this, hence they are calling for bigger and better—and lots of them.

"The public's taste of certain types of photodramas may be fickle, but they always want the best. For this reason First National will offer to the screen public more than seventy of the finest 'specials' to be made this year.

"A canvass of the situation has shown that these exhibitors are looking forward to the release of First National specials and are making preparations for a big film season. We have had thousands of inquiries regarding Norma Talmadge's 'Purple Pride,' now being directed at the United Studios by Frank Lloyd. The announcement that Thomas H. Ince will deliver not less than four big specials for First National distribution has been widely applauded by the men who know the picture-going public.

"Richard Walton Tully's 'Trilby,' John M. Stahl's 'The Wanters,' Frank Borzage's 'Children of Dust,' and 'Dust in the Doorway,' Constance Talmadge's 'Dulcy,' which she has just completed and her 'The Dangerous Maid' and 'Mme. Pompadour' to be made in the near future have attracted no small amount of attention.

"It is safe to say that George Fitzmaurice's 'The Eternal City' and Samuel Goldwyn production of 'Potash and Perlmutter' will be two of the picture drawing cards of the year. Edwin Carewe's 'The Girl of the Golden West' and 'The Bad Man' will be specials worth while and John M. Stahl's future production, which will include 'Why Men Leave Home' and 'Women That Pass in the Night,' are already eliciting a very large number of inquiries.

"Previews of Maurice Tourneur's 'The Brass Bottle' and James Young's 'Wandering Daughters' have convinced First National executives that these two dramas are of exceptional box office drawing power. Charles M. Duell's presentation of Richard Barthelmess in 'The Bright Shawl' and 'The Fighting Blade' will make screen history as will the enormous production planned by Joseph M. Schenck in which Norma Talmadge will be starred. These future productions will include 'Secrets' and 'Dust of Desire.'"

First National's own production of a limited number of pictures to round out the year's big schedule of special presentations were explained to the convention by John McCormick, western representative of First National and by Earl J. Hudson, production manager of the unit and Richard Walton Tuly, who is acting in the capacity of advisory counsel.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 20.—The film of "Youth Triumphant," first picture of the Fisher Productions recently finished at the Hollywood Studios, was brought to San Francisco last week, and has been given a pre-view at the new Filmore Theatre, before the stockholders of the organization, and a few invited guests. It was much enjoyed by the small audience, as it is well filmed, and the cast contains such well known names as Anna Q. Nillson, Raymond Hatton, George Siegman, Joseph Dowling, Virginia Lee Corbin, Lucy Beaumont, Boyd Ervin, Arthur Jasmine, and Eugenie Besserer, with Glen MacWilliams at the camera.

Jean Hersholt, who is playing Marcus in the Eric Von Stroheim production of "Greed," met with an accident last Thursday which might have been very serious. The company was working on a picnic sequence at Shell Mound Park in Oakland, and Hersholt and Gibson Gowland, as Marcus and McTeague, were staging their big fight in the story, when Gowland threw Hersholt over his head at the finish. Hersholt landed on his head and back with such force that he became unconscious, and Dr. J. W. Peck of Berkeley, who was hastily called, feared for a while that his back might be broken. The injured man was rushed to a hospital, where X-Ray pictures were taken till it was decided that the hurt was not serious. Hersholt was later able to return to work.

The Red Wood Films company of this city is making most interesting production plans to be carried out in the near future. They expect to make as their first picture a five-reel feature dealing with conditions in the Ruhr District. The story is by Walter Montague and has an allegorical prologue, and the whole production will be shot in the country in which the scenes are laid, which means that the company will go to England, Germany, France, and Russia. Richard Kipling will have a prominent part in the making of the picture. At the same time the organization will make short travelogues of the countries in which they work.

Allan Mackenzie, motion picture man of New York, and Los Angeles, has come to San Francisco with a view to settling permanently here. He will work in conjunction with Frank L. Burt, vice-president of the Pacific Studios, and expects to begin work shortly on a picture to be made at the San Mateo Studios.

James Flood, director for Fox, and a cast and crew of thirty-five people, arrived in San Francisco on the boat last Saturday. They had worked on the boat and did some street scenes here, and left for Los Angeles on Monday evening. The picture is being filmed under the working title of "The Best Man Wins." Walter Mayo is assistant director, and the leading roles are being played by William Russell, Dorothy Devore, Lloyd Whitlock, Edgar Sherrod, and others. Arthur B. Cohen is production manager, and arrived a day or two before the company.

Victor Seastrom and the Goldwyn company filming "The Master of Men," under his direction are still doing location work near Burlingame, and at twin lakes. They have been a little delayed by a couple of dark days, but expect to finish and return to the South the latter part of the week.

Charles Stalling, having just finished his duties as production manager on the "Hunchback of Notre Dame," with his wife and little daughter, motored to San Francisco last week, and was here for several days just on a holiday after his long and hard work on the big picture.

On Sunday Eric Von Stroheim shot the only real mob stuff in the filming of "Greed." It was supposed to be the Easter Sunday parade of the Polk Street Improvement Club, and big street scenes are enough of a novelty in San Francisco. that besides the couple of hundred extra people who were hired to work, large crowds gathered to watch the fun. In fact it looked for a while as though half the town was there.

Robert Gordon, who lately played one the leading roles in "Main Street," and wife, and Helen Chadwick, Goldwyn st with George R. Giroux, came to San Fr cisco last Saturday morning for a two da stay. Their visit here is part of the Cha ber of Commerce Sociability Trip, duri which they have visited thirty coast cit and towns to tell them about the big Mon Centennial, and Motion Picture Exposit to be held in Los Angeles in July. Wh here they were the guests of honor at luncheon of the local Chamber of Commer where they presented Mayor Rolfe, and few other leading men with the Mon Centennial coins. The special half-dolla were struck off by the United States Go ernment to commemorate the one hundred anniversary of the Monroe Doctrine.

Mrs. Herbert Standing is spending a we here as the guest of her daughter, Jo Standing, who is a member of the "Gree cast.

After the extensive alterations and repai that the Century Theatre will undergo aft it is taken over July first by Louis R. Lur its name will be changed and it will l known in future as The Capitol.

The Plaza Hotel had a surprise the oth day when it leaked out that a wedding und romantic and most unusual circumstanc had taken place under its roof. The happ bride is Emily Pinter, until a few days ag a member of the cast of "The Demi Virgin and the proud husband, Jefferson Asher, Los Angeles, both well-known to both th stage and screen world. Miss Pinter's thea rical engagement came to a sudden end wit the closing of the play, and the departur of the management without the formality o paying the company, just after which sh was taken ill with a bad attack of "flu." S Ashes, who has been her admirer for som time decided that the time had come whe she needed the protection of a manly arm A license was obtained and the marriag took place with Miss Pinter still too ill t leave her bed.

Phillip Tannura, who cranks for Johnnie Walker, writes east he is so anxious to get back here that he would gladly pay his own fare back to a job. Now, Philly, here is some sound advice. Don't do it. Even first-raters, men who have spent all of their lives behind the camera, even as you have done, are starving to death here. A job at its best here with a few exceptions, lasts only one picture. Money is tight here too, salaries small and when it's due, it's sometimes pretty hard for the employe to collect. I know more than one chap who has been lucky enough to work now and then who is carrying, instead of a bank book, notes, just notes. A word to the wise, stay where you are, and eat regularly. Ask Charlie Murray.

Max Linder has signed to do a picture called "Le Clown Par Amour," written by himself. Work will commence the middle of September with Rene Hervil as producer. Studios in Paris will be used.

The writer of this paragraph had the pleasure of attending the "International Congress on Motion Picture Arts," held by the Authors' League. Several of the speakers gave the pictures and picture people the panning of their young lives. Now if these certain authors would just realize that even a bad picture had helped many a one of them to eat and then whose fault is it that a "high percentage is poor stuff." Didn't an author say himself that "the play's the thing?"

Arthur Ashley, a "use-to-wuz" in pictures, is appearing in vaudeville in the dope scene from "The Man Who Came Back." He is at the 125th street theatre.

England will see Laurette Taylor next season in "The National Anthem," by J. Hartley Manners, in which she appeared last year, at Henry Miller's Theatre in New York.

Will Rogers has taken out $250,000 in life insurance. With policies already issued to him, the comedian is now insured for $300,000. The premiums are said to be $25,000 yearly.

John Emerson is again the head of the Actors' Equity. The annual meeting and election of officers was held in the grand ball room of the Astor Hotel, June 4th, and was attended by about 1,500 players. The regular ticket was elected, consisting of Emerson, president; Ethel Barrymore 1st vice-president; Grant Mitchell, 2nd vice-president; Grant Stewart, recording secretary, and Frank Gilmore, treasurer.

Betty Blythe is in Germany working on "Chu Chin Chow."

Juanita Hansen substituted for Mrs. Wallace Reid last week in the pulpit of the First Congregational Church in Washington. Mrs. Reid was ill, so Juanita delivered her message to the good people on the "Dope Habit."

Ten Million Stories Begging Places on the Screen

The apparent success of their efforts to anslate the life and events of Abraham ncoln into motion pictures, the production ing now so far advanced that its release forecast for September, has caused Al and y Rockett, of the Rockett-Lincoln Film mpany, to announce that they will hence- rth look exclusively to history to supply eir screen stories.

"We are through with original stories and st sellers, magazine play-ups and weekly riodical leaders as material for picture ays," declared the Messrs. Rockett in a nt interview recently, "and from now on, will make our pictures from the real ppenings of life, not what some writer agines might have happened, for an event real life is better than an event of like ture in fiction.

"Henceforth, therefore, we shall draw our spiration from history, the life story of ankind, and we shall dramatize the events history as our offering for the ideal type vehicle of the cinema art.

"The stage with 2500 years of history be- nd it—and perhaps with 25,000, nobody ows—has found its archetype in the plays William Shakespeare as produced by oth and Barrett, Forrest, Sothern and arlowe, Henry Irving, Walter Hampden d others past and present, and Shake- eare made his plays from history, actual ppenings and doings of people in real life d recorded in what we call history. And hat is history but the visible record of the olution of life and form in the universe, cluding man? And what is evolution but work to do to find an archetype? That, anifestly, is the purpose, the work and the stiny of the soul.

"It is the divine purpose that runs rough all nature and it is the inspiration every artist, high or low. The greatest nius among artists is he who catches the earest glimpse of an archetype. This is he flame snatched down from genius' lestial fire,' and it will be noted that these e the works which live and that do most inspire and make men happy.

"If all evolution, therefore, is the seeking ter archetypes, why should not the nema, even though it be but an infant in s life as an art form, aspire to find its chetype? And if we look to Shakespeare a guide and motor, are we taking any- ing from the stage?

"The immortal Bard of Avon dramatized story and his works have come to be the knowledged archetype of the drama. hy, then, should not the cinema look for s archetype in the dramatization of history terpreted by animated pictures?

"We believe that we have glimpsed our rchetype in such pictures as we purpose he Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln' to e—the dramatization of the life and times this great world figure, not as somebody reamed he might be, but as he, indeed, ally lived and moved and had being among e men and events of that period of human volution marked by his career.

"A mere series of episodes taken from his fe as we find these things presented in ost of our student's text books of history ould interest nobody. To get into the art, a subject must be dramatized, must e presented intimately, must appeal to the nermost self. Anything else merely ad- resses the intellect and intellect is only lucation achieved through eye knowledge. passes away, but the lessons the heart arns do not pass away. The self records em and they remain a part of the eternal go.

"To instruct the heart, therefore, is the chiefest business of the cinema, according to our idea, and the heart can best be taught by presenting human interest stories from real life—life that has really been lived—in the form of dramatized history, a form that not only instructs but entertains.

"There is no end to history. It is as old as creation and eternally in the making. There are ten million stories to tell and more making every day. There need be no fear that the supply will run out.

"In the crusades, alone, there are a thousand picture plays. The story of the Medes and Persians, the Assyrians, the Egyptians, has never been attempted. Who will be first to tell even the beginning of the story of Alexander the Great? What has the screen shown of the ancient Greek immortals? What have we offered in relation to the philosophers and teachers—Confucius, Lao Tze, the Buddha, Zarathustra; the Aryan sages; Plato, Anistotle, Pythagoras and the host of lesser ones?

"The story of the Prince of Peace has yet to come to the screen in a convincing way and the stories of the early Christian fathers, the saints and the martyrs are still untouched.

"Who has told the wondrous stories of Charles XII, of Charlemagne, of John Sobieski, of Peter the Great, of Bruno, Savonarola, Luther, Hypatia, and ten thousand others? What of the riches of Rome, of Carthage, of Venice, Florence, the middle ages and the Renaissance; of the world discoverers and pioneers?

"There is one charmed book of the east that has 150,000 stories in it of pure historic fact, more interesting than the Arabian Nights; and there is in Siberia and China an unworked and inexhaustible mine of cinema wealth.

"In the history of England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, there are mighty stories to be told in pictures, but why continue? The list is as long as the Bible text.

"Also, nobody seems to be interested in presenting the amazing story of the rise and spread of Islamism. There is a story, or rather a thousand stories of incomparable drama, romance, human interest, poetry and pageantry—work for many a great cinematic genius."

Owen Moore, who, despite the fact that he is one of the screen's very first stars, is now more popular than ever. He is now playing an extraordinarily difficult dramatic role in "Thundergate," he being the principal male character. In this film he will be seen in three characterizations.

AN INTERNATIONAL LOT

Madrid, San Francisco, Siberia, England, France and New York are the settings for six feature film productions now being made by the Goldwyn studios.

The Russia of today, under the rule of the soviet is the locale of "The Rendezvous," being directed by Marshall Neilan from the story by Madeleine Ruthven. The cast includes Conrad Nagel, Lucille Ricksen, Elmo Lincoln, Emmett Corrigan, Syd Chaplin and others.

Madrid in the sixteenth century when Spain was ruled by King Philip II, is the locale of the Emmett Flynn production, "In the Palace of the King," a historic spectacle which promises to be the biggest picture of its kind Goldwyn has ever made.

The company under the direction of Flynn is now working on interior scenes of the king's palace, while that structure is being built. A sixteenth century palace, one of the largest motion picture sets ever built, will be a feature of the picture.

Blanche Sweet, Edmund Lowe, Hobart Bosworth, Pauline Starke, Sam de Grasse, William V. Mong, Aileen Pringle, Lucien Littlefield, Charles Clary and others make up the cast.

Modern San Francisco is the setting for "Greed," the picture Erich von Stroheim is making from the famous novel, "McTeague," by Frank Norris, and with characteristic Stroheim accuracy, the picture is being made on Polk street, San Francisco—the exact spot Norris chose in his novel. Von Stroheim's cast includes Gibson Gowland, ZaSu Pitts, Dale Fuller, Cesare Gravina, Jean Hersholt, Sylvia Ashton and Chester Conklin.

Charles Brabin and a company headed by Corinne Griffith, Frank Mayo and Myrtle Steadman have almost completed "Six Days," an Elinor Glyn story which is set in England and France.

"Six Days" is a typical Glyn story, and the climax comes when hero and heroine are trapped in a dug-out underground trench in a deserted battlefield of France for six days.

Tod Browning, most recent addition to the Goldwyn forces, has started work on "The Day of Faith," from the novel by Arthur Somers Roche. The story, which deals with the creed, "My Neighbor Is Perfect," is set almost entirely in New York.

Tyrone Power, Eleanor Boardman, Raymond Griffith and Charles Conklin head the cast.

Paris is the locale of "The Magic Skin," a fanciful tale taken from Balzac's "The Wild Ass' Skin." George D. Baker is directing the production for Achievement Films. Bessie Love and Carmel Myers have been selected for leading roles.

Victor Seastrom ,the great Swedish director, is preparing to film Hall Caine's "The Master of Man," as his first picture produced in America. Joseph Schildkraut and Mae Busch will play the leading roles.

Rupert Hughes, director of "Souls For Sale," and King Vidor, who just completed "Three Wise Fools," are considering stories suitable for their next productions.

HAPPY DAYS OF YORE

Lydia Yeamans Titus, one of the members of the cast of "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's Metro production, did her first screen motion picture acting in a one reel comedy several years ago. As she walked into the first scene a barrel of water was poured upon her. In the second scene a fire hose was turned in her direction and in the third she was thrown into a tank of water. Those were the happy days!

THE GIRL ON THE COVER

June Norton, who recently finished a two-year contract with Paramount, has just been signed by the Ingram Productions to be co-starred in their special which will start within the next few weeks. Miss Norton, who was formerly a featured player with the Real Craft Comedies of New York, was selected for this important part because of her ability as a horsewoman and swimmer. Upon her arrival to the coast she became interested in motoring, golf and tennis, and, is greatly enthused over all outdoor sports. Negotiations were made with the W. J. Irwin Productions to borrow Miss Norton for this production, and upon completion of the picture she will return to portray the leading feminine role in "The Blood Barrier," which story is now in preparation by Mr. Irwin.

MIRTH CREATORS

A Laugh!—Genuine laughter.

What a wonderful gift to mankind! W

Because a laugh is a purifier of mind d body. It causes one to forget at inter the burdens of life and other worries. It erases malice and produces happiness, th by becoming conducive to a clean wholesome enjoyment of things as intend

But how much thought is given to th who are responsible for providing mank with the reason for sending forth genu hearty laughs? Aren't they to be conside of infinite benefit to humanity?

In the motion picture industry there many men and women who create situati which millions of people see—and laugh To them may all credit be given. Howe these lines are about three individuals —"by their works ye shall know them."

This triumirate is composed of Mack S nett, Mabel Normand, and F. Richard Jo Sennett is the creating, supervising geni Mabel Normand, the artist through wh his ideas are transposed to the screen; wh F. Richard Jones is the transformer thro which Sennett's ideas pass to Miss Norma He interprets the producer's creation in der that Miss Normand may properly press them. Consideration of previous S nett successes, particularly "Molly-O" "Suzanna," two of the best comedy-dra yet produced, vindicates this assertion.

Though comedy predominated, neither these pictures lacked "the emotional." each were scenes which never fail to tug the heart strings, to cause tears to well in the viewer's eyes or cause a tightening the throat. But the tears were not of sorr or of sympathy, but rather an acknowle ment of an artist's ability to portray realities of life—a combination of the s ous with the humorous incidents wh blend themselves into the augmenting ye of our various lives.

"SMOKE'S" RECORD

Bowditch "Smoke" Turner has portray every stage character he has ever heard and he believes he can recollect most them from those in William Shakespear first play down to the most modern offeri Mr. Turner also has played hundreds roles in motion pictures and is adding to list of screen characterizations by depicti the historical character of Le Chapelier "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's newest Me production.

Mr. Ingram found Mr. Turner an id type for one of the roles in "The Fo Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and believ he is perfectly fitted for the part of Le Ch elier in Rafael Sabatini's story. He gain the nickmane, "Smoke," as a result of renown as a blackface comedian.

VOICE FAILS HIM

"Funny to be here on this lot at work a picture," declared Edward Everett Horto during the filming of "The Sign," a Trimbl Murfin Production in which he is a memb of the all-star cast.

"You see, I once had dreams—day drea —of playing in pictures right here on th stage."

Three years ago, almost to the day, Ho ton, then winning honors on the legitima stage, was called to the same lot by "t powers that be" for a test.

"Figuring that after a successful care on the stage, the jump into pictures shou be easy," says Horton, "I made up joyful for the test. And all I ever heard of the r sult was a note which came to my dressi room at the theater several days later, whi read:

" 'It must be your voice.' "

ARTIST WILL PRODUCE NOVEL DOLL MOVIES

Antor Novak, the Hungarian artist, has opened a studio in Hollywood for the production of a new kind of motion picture.

He will put into operation his new invention in photography, which makes dolls seem to fly about, dive into the ground and be full of life and activity.

He will produce motion pictures specially designed to entertain children and at the same time give them useful information.

KINEMA REDUCES PRICES HUNDRED PER CENT

The Kinema Theatre in Los Angeles has made a radical departure in its policy of operation.

Decision was made by officials of West Coast Theatres, Inc., to have a downtown house with popular admission prices and to this effect a new scale has been initiated at the Grand Avenue and Seventh Street theatre. The price for Saturdays, Sundays and holidays are scaled at twenty-five cents all over the house, with ten cents for children and fifty cents for the big loge chairs. During the rest of the week the general admission to all parts of the theatre will be twenty-five cents excepting the loges. The tax is added to these prices and since the inception of the new policy it has been found that the move was not only a wise one, but certainly one deserving success.

During the first two weeks of operating this new policy at the Kinema did a tremendous business at popular prices. West Coast Theatres, Inc., are adopting the slogan "the picture is the thing" for the Kinema and eliminating all stage and atmospheric embellishments. Greatest care is being devoted to the proper musical accompaniment of pictures and short subjects. The desire often voiced by Los Angeles theatre patrons to be able to witness pictures without the long drawn-out and often tiresome programs seems at least to have been realized with a change of the Kinema policy and not a little favorable comment has been heard.

There is now provision for all those who desire nothing but pictures to go to the Kinema and observe at popular admission prices, the program of diversified screen subjects headed by first-run feature picture.

JOHNNY HARRON IS IN "GOLD DIGGERS" CAST

A familiar face at the Warner Brothers studio these days is that of Johnny Harron, brother of the famous Bobby who was a Griffith star for years, and the idol of the film fans.

Johnny has been engaged by the Warners for a leading part in "The Gold Diggers" now in production at the West Coast Studios under the direction of Harry Beaumont.

"The Gold Diggers" is from the David Belasco stage play

WARNER BROTHERS SIGN ERNEST LUBITSCH

Ernest Lubitsch, world famous director from Europe, was today signed to a contract by the Warner Brothers.

Mr. Lubitsch takes up offices in the Warner's new studios Monday at the head of his own production unit. He is to make only major productions for the Warners, one of which will be David Belasco's "Deburau," which is to be the greatest undertaking ever attempted by any motion picture organization.

Lubitsch has just completed Mary Pickford's biggest picture, made under the title of "Rosina" and to be released as "The Street Singer." He comes to the new organization independent of past connections and is to commence work on the preliminary details of his first picture at once. Lubitsch is incidentally the man credited for those successful European pictures which were shown in America the past year or two. He is considered the peer of European directors.

The signing of this important director may be recorded in film history as another step of marvelous advancement by the Warner Bros. With David Belasco under contract and a number of the most important producers and directors of the picture world signed, this company bids fair to advance considerably further in the picture field during the coming years than in the past, when it grew from a small producing unit to one of the most important film companies in the world.

Hoot Gibson is on location at the Flynn ranch, in the high Sierras, where the exterior scenes of "The Ramblin' Kid" are being made. Edward Sedgwick is directing the new Gibson play, to be one of his new series of Universal-Gibson special productions.

VANDALS DESTROY COSTLY PART OF "SET"

Sight seeing vandals, in the guise of studio visitors, this week completely destroyed an almost priceless Chinese screen on one of the sets used in the filming of "Thundergate," a First National production now being directed at the United Studios by Joseph De Grasse.

The huge screen, made of teakwood, ivory and gold, stood for years in the home of a mandarin of interior China. During the revolution of Dr. Sun Yat Sen it was carried away and finally sold to an English collector at Canton.

The screen eventually found its way to America and was loaned for the "Thundergate" production. The materials making up the antique had been patiently and skillfully carved by hand and the finished screen was valued at several thousand dollars.

It was thickly studded with ivory miniatures as well as carved mother-of-pearl ornaments.

Many of the ivory and pearl ornaments were cut from the screen by some visitor who deftly wielded a pocket-knife in his search for souvenirs of the picture set.

Director De Grasse declares the article is almost completely destroyed and can never be replaced. Private detectives have been placed on the case and strangers who have recently visited the set may be questioned at length if any clue to the vandals is discovered.

The discovery of the screen's destruction was made by Owen Moore, star of "Thundergate," and immediately reported to First National officials.

Hale is in Frisco

Creighton Hale, debonair leading man, whose screen career dates back to the days of the earliest D. W. Griffith pictures, "Intolerance," "The Clansman" and others, and who scored a decided hit with Los Angeles audiences a short time ago when he appeared as the star in "Just Suppose," at the Mason Opera House, is on location at San Francisco with members of the Goldwyn company, filming "The Master of Man" under the direction of Victor Seastrom. In this picture Mr. Hale is playing the part of "Alick," a sympathetic juvenile role, which is said to allow him an unusual opportunity to demonstrate his versatility and histrionic ability.

FINIS STARTS 4th INDEPENDENT PICTURE

Finis Fox has started work on his fourth independent feature production, "Bag and Baggage" at the Hollywood Studios with a notable cast of screen artists. Like all his other productions, Finis not only wrote the story, but is also directing and supervising the details of production from story and theme to the cutting room.

The cast is headed by Gloria Grey, the most recent Finis Fox discovery. John Roche, who scored a big hit in David Belasco's New York stage success, "Deburau," has been signed for the male lead. The cast also includes such film notables as Paul Wiegel, Carmelita Geraghty, Adele Farrington, Arthur Stuart Hull, Maxine Elliott Hicks and Ned Grey.

The story is a typical Finis Fox drama with pathos and comedy relief. The continuity was written by Lois Zellner.

The executive and technical personnel of the Fox organization includes R. R. Beaty, General Manager, William Dashiell, Assistant Director, Danny Hall, Technical Director and Hal Mohr, Photographer. "Bag and Baggage" is the first of a new series of super productions that Finis Fox will make for the independent market.

STORY OF METRO PICTURE-MAKING TOLD IN REELS

A precedent was set by officials of the Metro west coast studios when they sent Howard Strickling, director of publicity at the Hollywood plant, to the annual national Metro sales convention in New York with a three-reel film showing the exact progress of the various pictures now under course of production. The film contained scenes from "Scaramouche," "The Eagle's Feather," "The Girl Who Dared,' "Strangers of the Night," "The Master of Woman' and other pictures now being made.

In addition it shows sidelights on the various productions, the actual difficulties involved in making some scenes, the handling of huge crowds and other interesting features. Following the convention Mr. Strickling will confer with Metro officials and return to Hollywood about July 1st.

William S. Hart this week signed a long term contract with Lasky, and will start at once to re-establish himself after an absence from the screen of two years. He will resume his old-time virile western characterizations.

Back to Free Lancing

Eugene A. Vogt, having completed his engagement as scenarist for the H. and B. Film Company at the Bronx studio, has opened an office at 5515 Santa Monica Boulevard, where he will free lance in writing subtitles or continuity. Vogt has the titling of a number of important productions to his credit as well as several stories and continuities.

CONSTANCE HEARS HER OWN SONG ON THE RADIO

Constance Talmadge has had two new thrills this week. First of all, she has heard her own song, "If Anyone Can Steal You, Then You're Not the One For Me," out in California, across the radio, as sung by Miss Rita Gould in New York. And secondly, all her Hollywood friends have been dropping in at tea time, at the palatial new Talmadge home on South Ardmore avenue, to hear Constance's first musical effort on the OKeh phonograph records.

Constance originally wrote the song, "If Anyone Can Steal You, Then You're Not the One For Me," sometime ago, in collaboration with Edward Laska, well-known composer and playwright. This is the first lyric Constance has ever written, though she has frequently composed little jazz melodies on the piano for her own amusement. The song has been published by Stark & Cowan, and the Okeh record is recorded by Markel's orchestra. All Miss Talmadge's friends in the screen world are listening in these days and praising Constance's unexpected new talent. Many First National exhibitors are planning to capitalize the success of this song and fox trot by Miss Talmadge, by using orchestrations of it during the run of "Dulcy," Constance's next Joseph M. Schenck production.

MABEL NORMAND HAS HER OWN GOLF COURSE NOW

That she may keep in practice and brush up on some of the more intricate points of the great outdoor game of the Scots, golf, Mabel Normand has had constructed a miniature golf course back of her bungalow on the Mack Sennett studio lot, where one will find her every minute she is not busy on the set of "The Extra Girl."

Miss Normand has been an ardent golf enthusiast for many years and was one of the first women in Los Angeles to take out a golf membership in any of the clubs. The Annandale and Wilshire Country Clubs get Miss Normand's patronage, where it is admitted she is one of the best and steadiest players among the women.

Suffering Musician

Cecil Crandall, one of "Mickey" Neilan's Fiddlers Four, having had several teeth extracted on his "chin-rest" side, is finding no trouble in making the mournful Russian music more mournful on the set of Neilan's Russ drama, "The Rendezvous," Crandall is thankful he doesn't play the slide trombone or something equally as convulsive to the muscles of the face.

OFFERS A CZAR A JOB IN MOTION PICTURES

Czar Boris III, Bulgarian monarch whose throne is tottering, may come to Hollywood.

M. C. Levee, president of United Studios, yesterday offered him a job as technical advisor after reading an Examiner special dispatch from Paris quoting the king of the buttermilk fiends as saying he would come to America if he had to doff the purple.

"Job as technical advisor motion pictures awaits your acceptance," read the cablegram the fast-thinking Mr. Levee dashed off at the breakfast table as he read the Czar's words.

"Foreign pictures, with their kings, empereors and czars, their unique clothing, furniture and interiors, are coming to the fore," Mr. Levee explained. "We want to be exact, to picture people, manners, customs, clothes as they are. We need advice. A czar, steeped in the traditions of his people and of his class, is better equipped to give us that advice than anyone else. There is a place for him, as there is a place for everyone with a special knowledge, in pictures."

The Paris dispatch published in yesterday's Examiner quoted Czar Boris as declaring that he would not be frightened if he lost his throne, as he could "go right to America and get a job." Revolution in Bulgaria threatens Boris' position.

Miss Moore to Star Again

Colleen Moore is to be starred in "Flaming Youth," First National's picturization of Warner Fabian's daring story of contemporary life. The picture is to be made at the United Studios and it is estimated that it will cost upwards of $500,000 to produce. The elaborate feature will be filmed immediately following the completion of "The Huntress," in which Miss Moore is now appearing in the star role.

Harold Lloyd and Hal Roach have parted ways after an affiliation of nine years. Lloyd will head his own producing unit henceforth and Roach will continue to operate his other six units.

FIRST ALL-WOMAN FILM COMPANY LAUNCHED

The first motion picture company composed entirely of women has been launched. It is the only one in America, in the world, or in film history. Its first production has been made, and preparations are on the way for making a large regular program of feature releases, educationals, and other films in San Diego at the Sawyer-Lubin Studios.

Women occupy the positions of producers, directors, co-directors, script-clerk, screen editor, continuity writer, assistant director, and publicity director. At the head of the company is Mrs. Lule Warrenton, who has been upon the stage and in motion pictures since childhood. With Universal Film Company and other organizations she was, first, character actress, then writer and director of a number of productions.

Mrs. Warrenton's chief aides are Mrs. A. B. E. Shute, Mrs. Katherine Chesnaye and Miss Edith Kendall, all of whom come to the screen with no other motion picture experience than that supplied by the educational department of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation. Mrs. Shute is a novelist, whose first book was published about 12 years ago. Mrs. Chesnaye is a short story writer, the wife of British officer, and a world-traveler, who spent six years in Central Africa. Miss Kendall is also a writer.

The special significance of this organization not only embraces the fact that women fill all creative and executive positions, but that three who occupy very important positions are newcomers, trained, but not experienced on either stage or screen.

This means that the "outsider" can enter films after receiving adequate training, without "working up from the bottom," and that careers in all important branches of the motion picture industry are open to women.

Hamilton is Back

Lloyd Hamilton has returned to Los Angeles and will start work immediately on his new series of Hamilton Comedies to be released through Educational Film Exchanges. Hamilton had been in New York for several weeks on his annual vacation and conferring with E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, regarding production and distribution plans for the coming season, and immediately on signing the new contract, Hamilton left New York for the Pacific Coast. He visited his mother in Oakland before going on to Los Angeles.

BLOOD TESTS MAY SOLVE INDIAN MYSTERY

Test of blood from Susee, white wife of Chief Broken Horn, Arapahoe Indian, and J. S. Thurston of Laguna Beach, or his 82-year-old mother, may determine whether or not the Caucasian squaw is the sister of Thurston who was kidnapped in Utah 54 years ago.

Because Dr. C. L. Thudichum of 1758 North Kingsley Drive, Hollywood, asserted in the Professor Tiernan scandal at South Bend Indiana, that such tests would determine the blood relationship of individuals, he likely will be appealed to in the Susee Broken Horn-Thurston mystery, which has been the theme of talk for several weeks among the Indians encamped at Cahuenga Pass.

Dr. Thudichum, when approached on the subject by Sid Grauman, who has interested himself in the case because of a recent appeal for his aid made by Thurston, declared such a test would prove whether or not the squaw is the sister of the Laguna Beach man, who insisted he believed her to be the same girl stolen by Indians in 1869 during a raid on the Thurston homestead in Utah.

It only remains to obtain the consent of Chief Broken Horn and Susee that the test shall be made. Opposed by nature to the mysteries of the white man, the Indians are slow to yield themselves to unusual situations. The Arapahoes contend, also, that Susee was one of two children who survived the pillaging of a wagon train while it was crossing the Sweet Water River many, many moons ago.

Col. T. J. McCoy, who brought the Indians to Hollywood to appear in the prologue to "The Covered Wagon" at Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian Theatre, is endeavoring to win the Chief's consent to having his wife's blood tested by Dr. Thudichum, who says Thurston must be a full brother to the missing child or else his mother's blood must be used in the test.

Want Success? Join Stock

A few years ago, the theatregoers of Portland, Oregon, were very proud of a certain group of actors known as the Baker Stock Company, of which certain gentlemen by the names of George Baker and John Sainpolis were the sponsors. Today, George Baker is the Mayor of Portland, while John Sainpolis is one of the best known character actors of the screen and is playing an important role in "The Social Code," Viola Dana's new Metro picture. Moral: Join a stock company.

AND THAT VERY CHILD MAY YET LEAD THEM

Little Philippe deLacy, five-year-old film starlet, who has won the unanimous praise of photoplay critics for the naturalness and human characterization which he presents in the role of "Dicky" in "Divorce," now showing at Grauman's Rialto, has no doubt been subjected to a greater number of distressing experiences, endured more hardships, encountered more sadness and suffering and see more bloodshed than any other youngster of his age.

The story of little Philippe's life reads like a page from fiction, and has brought forth the pity of all who have heard it. His father, killed in the line of duty on the French front, his mother captured and murdered by the enemy forces, the home in which they lived bombed and completely wrecked, little Philippe left in the care of his grandmother, who lost four sons in the war—these and many other sad experiences marked the first year of the youngster's life.

At Nancy, a small town near Verdun, the American forces had established a Red Cross hospital. One day a call came, telling that an old lady in a nearby town was dying of poverty. A special nurse responded to the call. She found the old lady living in the cellar of what had formerly been her home. She was lying on some filthy, torn blankets stretched out on the cement floor of the cold shack. It was the only bed she possessed. Near her was a small child, pale and thin, his cheeks sunken and covered with sores, weak from not having eaten for two days and his body covered with a dirty, ragged garment. It was Philippe.

The nurse took the unfortunates to the American hospital, where they were given every care and attention, but a few days later the old lady died. Before she passed away she placed the youngster in the care of the nurse, who had rescued them, and asked that she "please be good to him." Philippe slowly gained strength and color and when hostilities between the enemy and ally forces ceased abroad a few weeks later he was a picture of health. He was brought to America by the nurse, who before leaving France had taken all legal steps for his adoption, and upon the persistent advice of friends he was placed in pictures.

Today one cannot realize by looking at the youngster that he had ever gone through such pain and suffering and that he was on the verge of physical collapse when he was rescued. He reflects the strength and magnetic personality of Joan D'Arc of his native land and is considered unusually bright for a child his age.

Chester Bennett, director and producer of "Divorce," declares that little Philippe deLacy is one of the easiest children in pictures to handle and predicts a great future for him in the photoplay world.

"BARNEY" RANDALL IS ENGAGED FOR "PONJOLA"

Bernard Randall, who played "English Eddie" in the original stage production of "Within the Law" and later played the same role in the first film version of this famous comedy-drama, has been cast for an important role in "Ponjola," which is to be produced by Sam E. Rork, with Donald Crisp, directing, for First National.

Randall is to play the part of "Eric," a hardened character of the veldt in this First National screen version of Cynthia Stockley's celebrated masterpiece of South African gold field life.

The latest addition to the cast, which includes such screen luminaries as James Kirkwood, Anna Q. Nilsson and Tully Marshall, has had an extensive career as an actor, both on the stage and before the camera.

He was a favorite actor before the footlights for twelve years, before he deserted the legitimate for the screen, in 1916. His first role was in the Vitagraph production of "Within the Law."

Since then he has appeared in a number of big screen features, chief among them being "The Auction Block," "Song of the Soul," "Polly of the Follies," and "The French Doll."

HAMPTON RETURNS WITH GOODS NEWS AND SCRIPTS

With his brief case bulging with prospective film stories, JesseD. Hampton arrived in Los Angeles this week from New York City, accompanied by his wife.

Hampton abandoned his European trip so as to reach Los Angeles in time for the world premier of his film, "The Spoilers," which is scheduled to open at Miller's Theatre, Los Angeles, following the current presentation.

Hampton brings the news that "The Spoilers" which Lambert Hillyer directed at the Goldwyn studios, was selected over 35 other photoplays to be shown on the world's largest liner, "The Leviathan," on its maiden voyage from New York to London on July 4.

Tellegen Finishes Another

"Mike" Tellegen, who is one of filmland's most promising "heavy heavies," has just completed the role of Strongarm in Charles R. Seeling's production "The Tango Cavalier," which stars George Larkin. In this picture Mike was called upon to stage a terrible fight with Larkin, and needless to say, sacrificed nothing to realism.

WILD ANIMAL SHOW PLANNED EOR SELIG'S

Edythe Sterling, famous rodeo star, is rounding up and hog-tieing a bunch of daring cowboys and cowgirls to appear in Wild West feats at the Circus and Wild Animal Exposition to be staged at Selig Zoo by Los Angeles Post No. 1, Disabled Veterans of the World War, from June 23 to July 1, inclusive. A number of stellar riders have come south for the Frontier Days celebration to be held at Prescott Arizona, and many of these will appear at the rodeo here.

Cowpunchers, rope artists, broncho busters and steer riders will be among the performers at Selig Zoo. Bill Strother, the "Human Spider," and an up-to the-minute midway have been added to the attractions at the circus, which also will have dancing acts, musical features, novelty feats, boxing bouts and animal performances on its nine days' programs.

Strother, who often doubles for motion picture stars, is known from coast to coast for his daring climbing stunts. He has scaled most of the best known skyscrapers in Los Angeles.

The circus midway will contain all the usual features, with several specialty novelties added. It will be open from noon to midnight and is planned to be one of the stellar attractions of the exposition.

Aside from participating in the battle royal that is to be the main event of each Saturday's boxing card, the newsboys of Los Angeles will appear in musical specialties. Henry Warner, vocalist; Tony Geyer, banjoist; Louis Jacobs, violinist; and the Newsboys' Trio are among the music features of the daily programs.

Little Shirley Widman, toe dancer, will perform and concerts will be given by the crack jazz orchestra of the Disabled Veterans of the World War and the Hollywood American Legion band of 45 pieces, which has donated its services for the benefit, by which the veterans hope to raise sufficient funds to pay off the mortgage on their club home at 246 South Hill Street. Col. W. N. Selig's trained lion, tigers, leopards and bears will appear in the animal acts.

Beginning Monday with the State Department, D. V. W. W., the successive days have been set aside for the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the United Spanish War Veterans and the G. A. R.

"PG" SMITH HEADS NEW COMEDY COMPANY

The clan of independent producers is steadily growing. Last week the "PG" Smith Productions, located in the California Bank Building, at 6548 Hollywood Boulevard, was organized with a program of 12 two-reel comedies to be produced and released during the 1923-24 season. These productions have been tentatively named "The Pumpkin Center Comedies," and will deal with life in the rural communities of the United States The theme will deal principally with a delapidated locomotive and string of coaches evidently built some time during the Stone Age. They will be made with all-star casts, headed by Jack Duffy, well-known local comedian.

"PG" Smith, who is at the head of the company, has spent the last eight years studying the fil mfield from every angle with the determination to some day produce pictures of his own. He was formerly a film salesman for Paramount, Vitagraph, Goldwyn, Selznick and other distributing concerns, and also managed theatres in various parts of the United States and Canada. He later purchased a theatre in Los Angeles, and was actively engaged in the management of same, only giving up this enterprise to enter the production field.

"PG" is one of the youngest producers in the business, being only 24 years of age, but he has shown great ability along executive lines and this, linked with his varied experience in the film world, should enable him to climb to the top of the cinema ladder within a very short period of time. Smith has stated that he believes there is a dearth of good rib-tickling comedies at the present time, and that the public wants the shorter variety of film farce. The excellent reception the small-town plot has always received at the hands of the theatre-goers was a factor in his decision to film something revolving around the life of the small towns and coutryside of the nation.

Harry DeVere Recovering

The many friends of Harry T. DeVere, who has been ill at the Clara Barton Hospital for the past five weeks, will be glad to learn that he is now well on the road to recovery. Mr. DeVere was cast for the heavy lead at the Universal in "The Lady of Quality," and had played but three days when taken ill. A great deal of credit for his return to health is evidently due to his wife, the popular character lead, Josa Melville, who has been untiring in her attention to him in addition to "keeping the home fires burning."

SOME STARS MUST DIE SO THEY CAN LIVE

Some motion picture artists have the distinction of getting married in nearly every picture in which they appear. Others have gained a reputation of performing some hair-raising stunt before the camera, but perhaps no artist of stage or screen has "died" in more plays for the sake of his art than Eric Mayne, one of the screen's best-known character artists, who, before entering motion pictures, was a foremost actor on the London stage, gaining wide recognition for his masterly portrayal of leading roles in Shakespearean plays and others.

During a recent interview with the actor, he advanced a few interesting ideas as to how and why he has had to "die." He said:

"For many years I played villain and was compelled to die one way or another at the end of the play. The villain must not die too soon because it is only through the darkness of his vile deeds that the purity and nobility of the hero and heroine can shine forth.

"In 'Hamlet,' in which I played the king, I could not die until the very end of the play, for I must live in order to allow Hamlet to finish his work. It is only after I have been killed that he completes his work.

"In 'Romeo and Juliet' I played 'Mercutio.' I enjoyed this character more than any other I have ever portrayed and I regretted every night that I had to die so soon. Although 'Mercutio' is a light-hearted, good-natured fellow, beloved by everyone, he must die toward the middle of the play in order to give Romeo a chance to establish himself as the leading man.

"In motion pictures I have been killed in sword fights, I have shot myself, been shot in pistol duels, poisoned myself; indeed, I cannot recall a possible death that I have not met in the interests of retributive justice."

Mr. Mayne concluded by saying: "Actors must live, and in order to live many of us must 'die.'"

Graves Finishing

Ralph Graves is finishing the leading male role opposite Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl," which is being filmed at the Sennett Studios, and already is preparing to start work upon another picture. There is a rumor to the effect Ralph has just signed a very alluring contract with one of the biggest producing corporations in the industry which will provide for his appearance in leading roles in several big pictures.

BOXING FAVORITE SPORT OF PEGGY O'DAY

Peggy O'Day may at times be cast for roles in society dramas, but in everyday life one of her favorite pastimes is the sport of Jack Dempsey and Benny Leonard—boxing. Peggy is much interested in the art of self-defense and for the definite purpose of making any fight scenes in which appears, look like the real thing and not of the usual fakey appearance, the little actress has taken lessons from no less an expert than ex-champion Kid McCoy. As several members in the cast of "The Fighting Skipper" can testify, Peggy at times becomes perhaps a little too realistic in her endeavor to get a punch into the story.

NEW GARRISON UNIT PLANS EDUCATIONAL FILMS

It is the aim of the Garrison Production Company, who has just returned from South America where they made a series of educational pictures, to start production of a series of educational and society dramas here, on or before January 1, 1924.

The personnel of the company is G. W. Garrison, financial manager, R. W. McGree, director and manager, J. H. Rush, assistant director, and C. E. Tosh, cameraman. Edith Rush, well known in theatrical circles, will be featured in this series. Miss Rush's leading man has not yet been selected. The Garrison Production Company has a strong financial backing.

J. H. Rush is desirous of obtaining studio space and any information regarding this company or studio space will be gladly answered by him, by phoning Hollywood 561.

Aspiring leading men, here is your chance to get in touch with something worth while.

Sargent Supports Gladys

Louis Sargent, who was formerly starred by Universal in a series of Louis Sargent comedies, is once more working at that studio, having been engaged to play the leading juvenile role in Gladys Walton's latest starring vehicle, "The Wild Party," which Herbert Blache is directing.

DOUG DISCOVERS NEW TYPES FOR "BAGDAD"

For his new picture, "The Thief of Bagdad," Douglas Fairbanks is not selecting a conventional cast. In fact, nearly everybody so far engaged is comparatively new to picture audiences. The reason, says Doug, is that he wants his players to express new note the moment they flash on the screen. Furthermore, the play is to be a fantastic drama, and personalities that have been conventionalized might appear grotesque against the unusual backgrounds.

The most difficult feminine roles will be portrayed by Julanne Johnston, a tall slender girl known heretofore primarily for her dancing. She will appear as princess of Bagdad. The grace that she has acquired in dancing and her willowy figure have, from the studio standpoint, provided her with two of the necessary qualifications for the part.

The villain will be played by Sadakichi Hartman, who is absolutely new to the screen. His previous claim to note has been as a writer. He is partly oriental, and in the robes he wears in the picture, might actually have stepped from the pages of the Arabian Nights.

Brandon Hurst, Snitz Edwards, Charles Belcher and Anna May Wong are others who have been cast. Two of them are rather unknown.

Doug found new angles to well known personalities when making "Robin Hood," but he apparently is discovering altogether new people for "The Thief of Bagdad."

ACTRESSES PLAN QUIET CLUB AS THEIR RETREAT

Rosemary Theby is a busy woman these days—she is represented by two pictures having their first run locally, "The Girl of the Golden West" and "The Midnight Patrol" and at the same time is playing an important role in support of Jackie Coogan in "Long Live the King." She is the leading figure in a group of prominent motion picture actresses who are forming a new social organization to be called "The Nunnery," the name to be applied to their clubhouse in the foothills of Hollywood.

"The Nunnery" will provide a haven of refuge from the bustle of the studios and the whirl of social engagements between pictures. At "The Nunnery," the members will find peace and quiet, for an hour, a week, or longer—since the clubhouse will contain a limited number of rooms as living quarters, in addition to the reading rooms, social rooms, tea rooms and other communal quarters. Eligibility is limited to actresses who have been playing leads in pictures

SHE CAME TO FILMLAND FOR HEALTH AND GOT WORK

Coming to Hollywood a short time ago to recuperate from an attack of scarlet fever, Peggy Cartwright, eight-year-old film artist, not only found Southern California sunshine to be her best doctor, but she found an opportunity to enter motion pictures, all of which has resulted in her becoming a most popular member of the screen juvenile fraternity.

Peggy came from a most distinguished family. She is the grandchild of Lady and Sir Richard Cartwright, the latter formerly being a prominent statesman of Ottawa, Canada. Her uncle was Col. Robert Cartwright, the oldest colonel in the Canadian army; her father, Conway Cartwright, is a doctor by profession and was the youngest major in the Canadian army. Because of his gallantry during the World War he was recently elected to membership in "The Ypres League" in London, His Majesty, King George the Fifth and Field Marshall Carl French acting as patron-in-chief and president of the loyal organization.

Peggy made her screen debut at Universal and scored such a decided hit with officials of that studio that she was given the part of the little crippled child to portray in Frank Mayo's picture, "Afraid to Fight." Her performance in this picture won the unanimous praise of photoplay critics who referred to it as a feature of the entire production.

After appearing in support of Harold Lloyd in "Hand to Mouth," Peggy went on the Orpheum circuit in a special dancing act with her brother, Dick, acting as her partner. They made a tour of the complete circuit and then returned to Hollywood to resume screen activity. Peggy has appeared in support of virtually every foremost star of the silversheet. She was cast as the little sister of Louise Glaum in the star's picture, "Love;" with Bert Lytell in "Alias Jimmy Valentine," with Betty Blythe in "The Third Generation," and with many others. She has also been seen in many Christie comedies.

In "A Lady of Quality," now in production at Universal, starring Virginia Valli, little Miss Cartwright plays the part of the star as a child. The part carries added significance in that she makes up as a boy, allowing her a splendid chance to more firmly establish her versatility and ability to enact difficult roles. She is at present engaged with the Jack White Productions in whose latest picture she is playiing the featured role opposite little Benny Alexander, under the direction of Norman Taurog.

In addition to her accomplishments before the camera and footlights, the youngster is an expert horsewoman and has won three cups with her equestrian exhibitions. Two of the cups were won at Ambassador Horse Shows and the other at the Ventura Horse Show. She is also proficient as a dancer, swimmer, pianist, artist and cartoonist.

Peggy has never been to school. Her schooling has been placed entirely in the hands of private tutors. Like her parents and grandparents Peggy has taken a keen interest in things literary and she is conversant with the works of such noted authors as Rudyard Kipling, Mark Twain and Shakespeare.

CHAMP CHILD SWIMMER TO TRY FOR BIG RECORD

Mickey McBan, little film actor who is the world's youngest member of the Amateur Athletic Union and the holder of five swimming medals, has resumed aquatic training at Bimini in Los Angeles preparatory to competition for several new water records, and at the present time is concentrating his efforts upon perfecting his high diving and backstrokes. This four-year-old boy who was recently seen in Gasnier's "Poor Men's Wives" and who is now playing one of the big parts in "The Temple of Venus" at the Fox studios, is champion over all comers in his class on the Pacific Coast and in the first of his new exhibitions, which will probably be held within the next thirty days, he will probably be called upon to compete with some of the best of the newly developed young water wizards of the north country as well as a number of his former opponents. The film people are getting behind their tiny representative and on doubt a good number of them will turn out to see the events.

HARRY MYERS ENGAGED FOR "THE BAD MAN"

Harry Myers, he of "Connecticut Yankee" fame and more recently Horace Ventimore, in "The Brass Bottle," has been engaged to play a prominent part in "The Bad Man," which Edwin Carewe is to produce and direct for First National, with Holbrook Blinn in the title role.

Myers has been cast to enact a comedy role, that of "Red" Giddings, a Westerner whose business in the play will be to produce laughs. He is the fifth member of the company to be engaged. The others are Holbrook Blinn, who will play the character he made famous on the stage, Enid Bennet, Jack Mulhall and Walter McGrail.

The latest addition to "The Bad Man" cast has been a prominent figure in pictures since 1910, when he deserted the legitimate stage to play the part of "Red Eagle" in "Red Eagle's Love Affairs," the screen version of "Strongheart."

He has played in many recent successes including: "Turn to the Right," "Robinson Crusoe," "Kisses,"

FILM FOLK DOCTOR DISCUSSES NERVES

Nerves are like children, according to Dr. W. I. Schuster, whose hands are said to control the working forces of a considerable part of the motion picture industry in Hollywood.

Schuster has virtually become the motion picture colony chiropractor, as his clientele includes executives, directors and players from every studio in the film center.

"A child that receives kind and efficient training usually develops into an efficient and useful citizen," he says. "Nerves are like children. If they are treated right they keep the body in efficient working order. But like children they sometimes misbehave. Because of improper treatment they stray from their regular duties. Just as soon as they do the body gets out of tune.

"Perhaps they might better be compared to the strings of a musical instrument. As the chords of the instrument lose their beauty when the strings are loose or improperly placed, the human body loses its 'stride' when its nerves are wobbly."

Schuster avers that he has corraled and tamed some of the wildest nerves in Hollywood. He says that the strain of motion picture work is without a peer as destroyer of nerve regulation. He has soothed the jumpy nerves of representatives of all classes in all industries during his many years experience, but says that the work of motion picture folk is more strenuous on nerves generally than any other trade or profession which has come to his attention.

Mlle. BALZAC HAS HER FIRST FILM TEST HERE

Jeanne de Balzac, great-grand niece of the famous Honore de Balzac, has had her first film test.

Mlle. Balzac has just arrived in Los Angeles, where she has come to advise in the making of "The Magic Skin," the favorite story of Balzac, which Achievement Films is making at the Goldwyn studios. At first it was just planned that she assist director George Baker from her storehouse of intimate knowledge concerning Balzac's ideas. But her beauty has proven so entrancing and so thoroughly French that she has been persuaded to don the greasepaint. Her test, a very emotional one, was staged before about a hundred extras, who cheered her loudly at the completion of it.

Mlle. Balzac is just a little over twenty and has been acclaimed the "most perfect model" by noted French artists.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Margaret Landis has been added to the cast of "The Love Brand," being filmed at Universal City under direction of Stuart Paton. Miss Landis is a sister of Cullen Landis, well known juvenile of the pictures.

Sydney de Grey, now appearing in "The Love Brand," under direction of Stuart Paton at Universal City, is an old stage favorite. He was one of the support of Kolb and Dill in the old days of "Lonesome Town"

J. J. Pasztor has been signed to photograph "The Power of Darkness," featuring Wallace Beery and directed by Jacques Jaccard, at the Golden West Studio, on Lankershim Boulevard, opposite Universal City.

Winnie Brown, considered by many the leading horsewoman in America, has been engaged for a characteristic part in Metro's all-star production of "The Eagle's Feather," which Edward Sloman is directing.

Dorothy Devore, farce comedienne of the Christie studios, has been loaned to the Fox company to play the lead with William Russell in a new production to be directed by James Flood. After this picture Miss Devore will return to resume her work in Christie Comedies.

Conrad Tritschler, the master artist from London, brought to this country by Richard Walton Tully to lend his skill to the screen production of "Trilby" is now engaged on similar work for First National's "Thundergate."

Irene Rich has been secured by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation for an important role in "Yesterday's Wife," the first of the big Columbia Pictures series which that company will distribute on the independent market this fall.

Neely Edwards, the former vaudevillain, now maker of comedies at Universal City, once tried, as a boy, to learn to be an acrobat. His boyhood training is coming in handy now—he does a gymnasium scene in his new comedy, "Restless Rest," in which he puts on a complete tumbling act in a gymnasium.

Alma Rubens is the proud possessor of a signet ring which was formerly the property of Cardinal Richelieu. The ring was presented to her by Grand Duke Pierre Mollay, who is a direct descendant of the Cardinal. It is claimed that this is the ring Cardinal Richelieu used when signing death warrants.

Raymond Cannon, who will soon be seen in "Mary of the Movies" and "The Printer's Devil," has returned from a week's sojourn in the Sierras.

Fredric Santley, who has just closed in "Up She Goes," will start immediately on a new picture contract which will keep him busy for the entire summer.

Ben Lyon, who is playing the leading juvenile role in "Potash and Perlmutter," has received an offer to star in a series of specials to be made on the coast.

Martha Franklin, having completed her work as "Mme. Vinard" in the Tully production of "Trilby," has been signed for an important role in "Ponjola," a forthcoming First National picture.

Lillian Leighton, who plays Ma Pettingill in "Ruggles of Red Gap," has left for Eureka, where the James Cruze Company, now filming the Lasky feature, will location for a fortnight.

Florence Rittenhouse has been engaged by Sam Wallach for the leading female role in Edward Locke's new play with music, "Yesterdays," which opens at Asbury Park, July 9th. This will not interfere with Miss Rittenhouse's work on the screen, as she is at present working on a series of specials.

J. C. ("Jack") Fowler has completed his role of Pharris in "What Should a Girl Do," at the Hal Roach studio under direction of Val Paul in support of Edna Murphy. "Jack" is a new recruit from the legitimate stage and has been constantly at work in pictures since his arrival in Hollywood last February.

James Woods Morrison, who has just finished his work in "The Unknown Purple" at the Goldwyn Studio, has been engaged by Metro as one of the all-star cast of "Held to Answer," a big special to be directed by Harold Shaw from the story by Peter Clark MacFarlans.

Al St. John, famous Fox comedian, aspires to be a professional auto race driver. He likes to "burn 'em up" as a speed king and is known throughout the Hollywood colony as a crack amateur driver who can "scorch" the roads when the speed cops are not around. Al owns eight fast cars, all capable of doing better than eighty miles an hour, and he takes them out for a brush in some secluded spot whenever the opportunity offers.

Harry Lamont has finished playing the part of a Lavonia spy in Jackie Coogan's new production, "Long Live the King," at the Metro Studios.

Harold Rhoades, child film artist, has just completed an engagement with Lasky, apppear-in "To the Last Man," under the direction of Victor Fleming.

Paul Weigel is working with the Finis Fox Company in "Bag and Baggage," playing the part of Anthony Hope, a music-master type of role.

Caroline "Spike" Rankin is now playing straight as well as eccentric character roles before the camera. Her latest engagement is with Nate Ross at Universal, where she is appearing in "Six Fifty."

"My Mamie Rose," from the well-known novel of the same name, will be the next production to feature the talents of Mary Philbin, young actress who has scored such a hit in the Universal super-production, "Merry-Go-Round."

Oliver Follansbee has received an offer from the Majestic Stock Company, Toronto, Canada, to appear in their future stock productions during the coming year. Follansbee, however, will be unable to accept the offer as his screen work will require his remaining in Southern California for some time.

Dainty Frances Arnold, better known to the profession as Iva Forrester, has decided to discard the latter name and work under her own trade-mark. She has been leading lady in the Universal serial, "The White Horseman," and several other current productions. The Bob Horner Productions has just placed her under a year's contract.

The task of supplying about two hundred ex-service men for work in "The Life of Abraham Lincoln," being filmed by the Rockett Film Company at the Mayer studios, was fulfilled a few days ago by the Reliable Photoplayers' Association. Harry Lewis is serving as studio representative for the organization and Frank Morris is his assistant.

"The Girl Who Dared" has been chosen as the final title of Viola Dana's current production, instead of "To Whom It May Concern," the original title of Rita Weiman's mystery story of which it is a screen adaptation, according to an announcement made by Milton E. Hoffman, Metro production manager.

Raymond Lee, young son of Art Lee, make-up maestro, has just signed for the part of Bobbie, the American boy, in Jackie Coogan's "Long Live the King" at the Metro studios.

Work is progressing rapidly on "The Worm," Johnnie Walker's latest production for F. B. O. The production is being filmed under the direction of William Worthington.

Louise Lorraine, who plays the leading feminine role in H. C. Witwer's "Fighting Blood" series, has just received a pair of ring-necked doves from an Eastern admirer.

Norma Talmadge has returned to Los Angeles from Santa Barbara, Cal., where some of the final scenes of "Purple Pride" were made in the gardens of William Miller Graham, Montecito millionaire.

Tom Wilson, a member of the Robertson-Cole stock company, has left for New York, where he will play one of the leading roles as a black-face in D. W. Griffith's next production. It is probable that Al Jolson will also take part in this picture. Wilson expects to be away from sunny Southern California for three months or more.

Muriel Reynolds, who recently portrayed the role of Cinderella, at the Hollywood Bowl, with her director, Mrs. Idealine Meredith, and part of the troup, enjoyed many hours gladdening the hearts of the children at the County Hospital and the Children's Hospital by staging part of the Cinderella play for the amusement of the suffering children.

Margaret Morris has just returned from location at Keen Camp, Jacinto mountains, where she portrayed the leading role in Robert Bradbury's, "Ace of the Saddle," featuring also Edwin Cobb. Jay Morley played the heavy. On her return to the "U" lot, Miss Morris was immediately cast as lead in a new Jay Marchant western picture, which started Wednesday Pete Morrison has the male lead.

Joseph Du Bray and Pierre Collings, cameramen on "Alimony," James W. Horne's latest Robertson-Cole production, have obtained some marvelous shots of the Wrigley playground, Catalina Island, where the company has been filming many yacht scenes for the production. Grace Darmond, Warner Baxter, Ruby Miller, Jackie Saunders, Clyde Fillmore and many others are in the cast.

"HAVOC" PROMISES SOME UNUSUAL REALISM

Java, melting pot of the Pac, and one of the strangest d least known of lands, was ited, and months of research o accounts of explorers pre- red the way to the filming of avoc," the Harry Garson ectacle being filmed for Uni- rsal. Incidentally, one of the st known screen actresses in erica qualified as research pert for the picture, for much the detail is due to the aid of ara Kimball Young, who ssed months in Java, Burma, d the Orient, on her recent nd-the-world trip, and who unteered for services to help epare the spectacle.

Every possible nationality is presented in the strange popu- ion of Java, a tropical coun- of strange resorts and ange people, some outcasts in eir own land, some adven- rers, some representatives of mmercial interests—and all icken with the virus of the pics—a queer charm that ds far afield.

The play is a massive specta- e—showing Java's strange fes, pitfalls for souls, its ex- ic charm, and, as a climax, a gantic typhoon and tidal wave ch as occur in this queer land ring the "six months rains" riod along the equator.

J. Warren Kerrigan and Anna Nilsson head the cast in the rson story, and a small army extras of all nationalities ap- ar as the polygot population the queer country.

Many of the scenes were actu- ly taken in Java, a special trip ing made for this purpose, d the rest were made in a vil- ge constructed to duplicate the cality filmed on the trip.

NEW AD MANAGER

John Cornyn, has joined the anks of Camera! as Advertising Manager. Cornyn has just sev- red his connection with Screen- and as their Western Represen- ative.

AUBREY AND LEON LEE JOIN TO MAKE COMEDIES

Jimmy Aubrey, for years a star on the Vitagraph program as a comedian in a series of two-reel comedies, has signed a contract with Leon Lee to appear in 12 two-reel fun-films.

Lee is well-remembered as the "man" who put over the "Joe Rock Comedies" to such a run of popularity. Lee signed a contract with the Universal Film Corporation to use any and all sets that are erected at the Big U Studios, and to have built anything that their stories call for, and when one knows that Universal City has anything from an elephant to the smallest prop, they can readily understand the possibilities that the company will have at their command.

Charles Saxton, the well-known New York Evening World cartoonist, who is known as the "Wise Cracker of Broadway," has been engaged to write stories and make humorous cartoons which will help put the Series over. Reggie Lyons, who was the cinematographer on "Black Beauty," the Vitagraph special, has been engaged to photograph the entire series.

ELINOR GLYN NOW HERE TO FILM "3 WEEKS"

Motion pictures are "the greatest moral force in the world today" according to Elinor Glyn, world-famous English authoress who has just arrived in New York.

The noted woman novelist has left New York for Los Angeles, where she will collaborate in the filming of her greatest book, "Three Weeks" at the Goldwyn studios at Culver City.

The famous authoress, still vibrant and attractive despite her years, at a tea given by officials of the Goldwyn corporation in her honor in New York, announced she was the grandmother of three children.

Mme. Glyn, who was induced to come to the Goldwyn studios to collaborate in the filming of her novel, is very enthusiastic over the screen possibilities of "Three Weeks," and declares the motion picture version can be made to bring out the spiritual lesson of the book, that "the wages of sin is death."

"The highest mission in my life was accomplished when 'Three Weeks' was written," Miss Glyn declared at the Luncheon. "The screen needs a psychologist. The human mind must be analyzed to interest other minds through the eye."

"Six Days," an original story by Mme. Glyn, is now nearing completion at the Goldwyn studios. Corinne Griffith and Frank Mayo are featured in a cast directed by Charles Brabin.

NEW DRAMATIC CLUB IS RAISING CHURCH FUNDS

The "Hollywood Players" is the name of a new club that has recently been formed by motion picture artists in the Hollywood film colony for the purpose of raising funds with which to construct the "Little Church Around the Corner," of which Rev. Neal Dodd is the sponsor. Gay Wellington is director of the club, Miss Mary Arter is secretary and other officers are now being elected. The first play was staged by the club a few nights ago at the Hollywood Woman's Club and scored a big hit. Plans are being made to stage a play of greater importance within the next week at San Fernando. The club already boasts a membership of several hundred artists and among those who have recently enrolled is Betty Jean, well known film artist and manager of the Reliable Photoplayers' association, a Hollywood organization.

BENNETT CALLS "LULLABY" MISS NOVAK'S BEST FILM

The entire personnel of Chester Bennett's producing organization is a unit in expressing themselves that Jane Novak has perhaps the greatest role of her entire career in her current production of "Lullaby," his current personally directed and supervised production.

In "Thelma" Miss Novak had a splendidly appealing role and in "Divorce" she interpreted a character that is resulting in heavy bookings all over the country in first-run theatres.

Bennett is sparing no time or expense in surrounding Miss Novak with the best supporting cast that could be secured for "Lullaby."

Bennett believes the actress who best personifies the sweet woman, with womanly ideals and entirely free from the sex personality, is the popular actress of the next hour and he intends to direct only this class of shadow plays in the future with Miss Novak in the stellar role.

BEAUTY OF SIMPLICITY IN WEARING OF HATS

Grace Darmond, who is now playing the leading role in "Alimony" at the R-C studios, gives a few hints to girls on the choice of hats. She admits that it sounds paradoxical, but she says the greatest beauty always shows in simplicity. Some girls choose elaborate and flashy hats as an aid to their beauty. Instead of being so, however, these often detract by being too conspicuous, while the simple hats seem to set off the beauty to an amazing degree, and, put on at the right angle cast a spell that is well-nigh irresistable.

Miss Darmond has just completed her role opposite Guy Bates Post in "The Man From Ten-Strike." Previous to that picture she appeared in the leading role in "Daytime Wives."

ADDS CHARACTERS TO FILM AT THE FINISH

Several notable players have been added to the big cast filming "Whose Baby Are You?" starring vehicle for the diminutive Baby Peggy, at Universal City. King Baggot, the director, after assembling a notable list of picture players to support his tiny starlet, has built up several new roles, in which names long familiar on the speaking stage are added to the list of principals.

Rex Davidson, famous character actor of the speaking stage, is to play "Levinsky," the quaint old showmaker of New York's ghetto, in the production. Minnie Steele, well-known in vaudeville, plays his wife. The two parts are rich in comedy but essentially human-interest factors in the story.

Frank Currier, veteran of the stage, has been added to the cast to play Baby Peggy's ancient grandfather. Currier has been in pictures for some years and has played a variety of important character roles.

J. Gorman Rex, another character man, who, in his younger days, played with Booth, Barrett and John McCullough, has been added to the cast to develop an important-human-interest role in the part of a pushcart vendor.

The play, a lively story in which the baby starlet appears as a tiny Italian immigrant, is laid mainly in New York's lower Eastside, and on the Atlantic steamer. The ghetto is reproduced in remarkable detail at Universal City, and several hundred people are used in the big scenes.

The story was written by King Baggot, the director, and Raymond L. Schrock.

Advertising Does Pay

Since offering a prize of $1,000 for the best idea for a scenario, Charles R. Seeling, film producer, has been besieged with letters from all parts of the country, a strong effort being made by the authors to win the prize. After wading through a hundred or more of the manuscripts, Mr. Seeling announced this week that many of the ideas submitted were worthy of consideration, but many of them are impossible for screen material. The best idea sent in by July 15th will be used by the scenario staff in preparing a new feature story for "Big Boy" William, one of the company's stars. Mr. Seeling requests that the contestants enclose return postage so that in case their idea is rejected it can be returned.

William Parks, who directed "Legally Dead," is busy at Universal City preparing for his next picture, "Upside Down," in which Herbert Rawlinson is to be starred.

News and Gossip About the Moving Throngs of Movieland

Summer Releases

The four comedies which the Christies are releasing this summer include a wide range of subjects, beginning with a snowy picture "Winter Has Come," starring Dorothy Decore, and winding up with a timberland comedy, "Back to the Woods," starring Neal Burns. In between come Jimmie Adams in the blackface comedy, "Roll Along," and Bobby Vernon as a plumber in "Plumb Crazy."

Entertains War Veterans

Mervyn LeRoy, who has just finished an important role in "Little Johnny Jones," a Warner Bros. production featuring Johnny Hines, makes it a point at least once a month to entertain at the Old Soldiers' National Home at Sawtelle, California.

LeRoy was on the vaudeville stage for several years in a singing and dancing act.

Eng a Proud Daddy

Charles Eng, manager of the Transportation Department of the United Studios, has a new customer. Charlotte Eng, six and a half pounds, introduced herself Friday morning and asked that arrangements be made to furnish her with daily transportation. Eng has ordered a new car, with a wicker body and solid rubber tires, for his daughter's use. It will be parked at 1211 Tamarind street, Hollywood, nights. M. C. Levee, president of United Studios, has ordered an addition to the studio garage for the new customer's daytime use.

'Tis Scandalous

This promises to be a great scandal year for Huntly Gordon, talented Louis B. Mayer studio star. Following his sly conquest in Fred Niblo's "The Famous Mrs. Fair," he went into romantic adventure on a wholesale scale in the leading role of "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," and now he is back at the Mayer Studio carrying on a naughty flirtation in a star part in John M. Stahl's new picture, "The Wanters."

Van Dyke Signs

As one of the important steps in his plans for increased production activities, Louis B. Mayer has signed W. S. Van Dyke on a long contract to direct all-star specials of melodramatic and spectacular trend. Other famous directors now working under the Mayer banner include John M. Stahl, Fred Niblo and Reginald Barker. Mr. Van Dyke's first picture at the Mayer Studio will probably be "The Span of Life," the scenario of which is now being completed under the supervision of J. G. Hawks.

La Verne Making 'Em Up

Harry La Verne, well-known stage and screen character actor who was recently seen in "Robin Hood," is in charge of all make-up for "The Spanish Dancer," starring Pola Negri, which is being filmed at the Lasky studios under the direction of Herbert Brenon. Co-operating with La Verne is James Collins, who is wigmaker for the unit. Several interesting make-up innovations are assured as the result of the combined efforts of these two.

Cloninger's Big Plans

Plans are rapidly being formulated for the first of a series of independent productions to be filmed in and around Salt Lake City, and which will be sponsored by several capitalists of Salt Lake City, Spokane, and other northwestern cities. Ralph Cloninger, for many years a stage favorite in that territory, will be actively concerned in the productions, both from the acting and managerial standpoint. Negotiations are under way for a director and several cameramen, and a formal announcement is expected within the next fourteen days.

Otto Quits Realty Business

Otto Lederer says, "Once an actor always an actor," and as a result he is going to devote his time to his film and stage work alone. He sold all of his real estate holdings on Beachwood this week, for he will not have sufficient time to devote to their development and upkeep, and the costumers and wigmakers are busily engaged in—ah, but that's the secret; probably another "Abie's Irish Rose."

Still Buying Stories

Supplementing its already splendid array of story material for the coming season, First National has purchased four more works that have proven their popularity with the reading public. All four are exceptionally well adapted to screen presentation. They are: "The Sea-Hawk," by Rafael Sabatini; "Rope," by Holworthy Hall; "The Moving Finger," by Elizabeth Irons Folsom, and "Pearls Before Cecily," by Charles Brockett.

He Knows Africa

Randall H. Faye, a native of Rhodesia who, it is believed, knows more about that section of Africa, its people and their customs, than any person engaged in the motion picture industry, has been engaged by Sam E. Rork to act as technical advisor during the filming of "Ponjola," a Frst National picturization of Cynthia Stockley's famous story of the African veldt. Almost all of the dramatic action of this exciting story of the gold lands is laid in Rhodesia.

Globe-trotter is Versatile

Otto Lederer is probably best known as an interpretor of Hebrew characters, his superb portrayal of Solomon Levy in "Abie's Irish Rose" having won him the praise of critics and theatergoers alike, but it is not so generally known that he is equally competent as a "heavy" of the most villainous type. Lederer's experience has been unusual in scope, and for two years he toured the Orient, where he appeared in several stage plays in Shanghai and other cities. His most recent screen appearances have been in "Forget-Me-Not," "Your Friend and Mine," and "Hungry Hearts."

Henry Headed Stagewards

John Henry, who a short two months ago made his debut in motion pictures, is now seriously considering an offer to play the leading role in a play which is shortly to be presented before the footlights at a theatre in Los Angeles. Stage work is nothing new for Mr. Henry as he played juvenile leads and heavies with the Shusterman Stock Company in Boston for three seasons before coming to Hollywood. His latest work in pictures is with Ann Little and Fred Thomson at Universal in whose picture, "The Eagle's Talons," he plays the part of Secretary to Thomson.

TO Preview "Boy"

With the cutting and titling of the Mission Film Corporation's latest feature production, "The Barefoot Boy," now in the final stages of completion, plans are being made by Norman Walker, business manager for the company, for a preview of the picture at one of the theatres in Hollywood or Los Angeles, preparatory to shipping it to New York for release. "The Barefoot Boy" was written by Wallace Clifton and was produced with a cast which includes the names of sixteen well-known film artists, among whom are John Bowers, Marjorie Daw, Sylvia Breamer, Raymond Hatton, little Frankie Lee and others. It is the first of a series of six special stories to be produced by the Mission Film Corporation during the year. Leon Rice is the newly elected president of the company.

Monty's New Girl

Monty Banks, who is heading one of the comedy units at the new Grand studios in Hollywood, has a new leading woman in the person of Catherine Bennett, sister of the well-known Enid. Miss Bennett hails from Australia and is said to be a perfect "foil" for Banks in his new series of feature length fun films.

Morelli Wins Part

The part of Robert Lincoln the youthful son of Abraham Lincoln, in the Rockett Film Company's production of "The Life of Abraham Lincoln," has been assigned to Reggie Morelli a well-known film artist and native of Italy. Morelli was chosen for the part from a list of more than a hundred applicants, all of whom resembled the son of the martyred president.

Peggy Has Chicken Ranch

Other players can invest in real estate but Peggy O'Day, star of "Thundering Hoofs," "The Storm Girl," and other productions, has a little side line of her own. She is nothing other than a chicken fancier. Peggy recently bought a ranch out on Ventura Boulevard, about three miles from Hollywood, and she has there established a farm of thoroughbred white leghorns. Already she has a thousand laying hens and the number is rapidly climbing. Peggy, of course, doesn't do all the work herself. She is sort of director and supervisor in chief; and she has several assistants.

Movie Lure Permanent

No more musical comedy for Eulalie Jensen. The lure of the movies is too strong for her even to return to her first love. For it was in "The Time, the Place and the Girl" company and other big musical shows that Miss Jensen, now finishing her role in George D. Baker's production, "The Magic Skin," scored her early stage successes. She was asked to return to a big new musical comedy that will make its debut on Broadway, New York, this fall, but the old love has given place to a new and stronger affection for the motion picture, so Miss Jensen declined the principal part offered her and will remain in Hollywood.

How Lucky We Are

Making a dollar do the work of two is the easiest thing in the world, according to Oscar Apfel, noted Metro director. That is, if you are in Europe. Apfel, who recently returned to Los Angeles from a tour of the Continent, says a gold "cartwheel" or "iron man" from the U. S. A. will do the work of five dollars, even more, in some of the European countries that are pouring out paper money in a perfect flood. Every time somebody gets to growling about "hard times" over here, Apfel puts a damper on their grouch by telling them what some of the European victims of the World War's aftermath have to endure. Then they shut up.

Pulse of the Studios

FULL DRESSES OF EARLY FRENCH PERIOD SERIOUS HANDICAP IN PRESENT DAY

Full dresses, of the style worn by court ladies during the time of the French Revolution which serves as the background for "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's newest Metro production, are out of place in the present period. Mr. Ingram learned this during the making of this picture and was forced to some length to solve some of the difficulties presented by the odd style of gowns.

Each gown consists of 12 yards of material, and a woman wearing one takes up as much room as two or three persons in modern clothes.

During the filming of ballroom scenes at Madame Plougastel's Paris mansion, 200 women, all fashionably attired, were used. Every gown was elaborate, made of brocades and satins and with a great deal of lace. It was necessary for every woman to be as careful as possible with her costume for the trains swept across the floor and two seamstresses were kept busy on the set to mend rents and tears.

The first big difficulty came during noon on the first day when the company was dismissed for lunch. Only half of the 200 women were able to get into the two cafes across the street from the studio. Booths constructed for the purpose of seating four ordinary persons would accommodate only two ladies attired in bouffant gowns. The capacity of the restaurants would have been taxed in any event but under these extraordinary conditions it was lessened by half.

Consequently the half that were not seated had to wait until the other half had completed their lunch. Since then, when using a large number of women Mr. Ingram sends portions of the company to lunch at a time.

The cast of "Scaramouche" includes Alice Terry, Ramon Novarro, Lewis Stone, Edith Allen, James Marcus, Julia Swayne Gordon, Otto Matiesen, Lloyd Ingraham, George Seigman, Lydia Yeamans Titus, William Humphrey, Lois Lee, Bowditch Turner, Carrie Clarke Ward, Nelson McDowell, Yvonne Gardelle, John George, Snitz Edwards and others.

Moviedom's Triumvirate

This triumvirate has undertaken the production of another semi-serious vehicle, and expect to complete within the next few weeks an original story to be known as "The Extra Girl," in which the irresistible and much loved Mabel Normand is again starred with a particularly well known cast, including such personalities as Ralph Graves' leading man, George Nichols, Anna Hernandez, Vernon Dent and Charlotte Mineau.

The story of "The Extra Girl" is by Mack Sennett and was adapted for the screen by Bernard McConville, and gives every promise of excelling any photodrama yet produced by this triumvirate. Laughter sympathy and beauty are all incorporated in this picture, is the claim of its creators.

Making her appearance at the beginning of the picture as the daughter of an honest, hard-working, mid-western family, Miss Normand introduces a new character to the screen. A type of American girl we all know exists but whom we seldom meet. A daring, ambitious enthusiast, cherishing the bigger and finer things in life not provided for in the narrow circle of activities in a country town, and who with girlish simplicity and unchallenged determination, sallies forth much as the soldier of fortune to accomplish that which she aspires to. Then through the evolution of incidents into which the element of love romance and adventure play an all important part, our heroine finally settles into that blessed state of happiness prescribed for right thinking and healthy bodied youth.

John Elliott, who is appearing in Metro's picturization of "The Eagle's Feather," enjoys the distinction of being an honorary chieftain of the Brule Tribe of Sioux Indiana.

FILM FORECASTS BALKAN IMBROGLIOS

Always one of the political volcanoes of the world, the Balkans are crowding the front pages of the newspapers again. The unrest which exploded on that memorably tragic day at Sarajevo in 1914 has not been entirely stilled by the four years of war and the millions of lives sacrificed since a crazed student fired "the shot heard round the world."

The motion picture has often followed closely upon the herald of important world news; but it remained for Jackie Coogan to embark on the filming of a story that presages the mid-European chaos. "Long Live the King," which Jackie is now making under the supervision of his father and the direction of Victor Schertzinger, tells a story of political imbroglio in the mythical Kingdom of Lavonia, typical of all the Balkan states. The author, Mary Roberts Rinehart, wrote this novel some years ago; but when the Coogans were seeking for the first story to be made by Jackie under his new contract with Metro, Jack Coogan, senior, selected this tale from the many under consideration, not only for its intrinsic drama and entertaining values, but also for its timeliness. He foresaw that conditions in the Balkan states were bound to bring on a political eruption—and that eruption has come to pass, even sooner than he expected.

"Long Live the King," will be released as soon as possible after completion—it is now in its seventh week—and it will afford the American public a uniquely valuable opportunity to see the social conditions which exist in these little-understood communities and thus derive greater appreciation of the historical events transpiring there at the present time. Fundamentally, of course, the picture will be offered on the screens of the world as Jackie's biggest and most elaborate film, with a superlative cast supporting the starlet in his finest acting role, but the concomitant exposition of Balkan life will doubtless be of additional interest to audiences everywhere.

Rafael Sabatini, whose Scaramouche," a romance of the French Revolution is now being filmed for Metro by Rex Ingram, is hailed as the modern Dumas.

ABOUT LENORE ULRIC AND SARAH BERNHARDT

With the arrival of Lenore Ulric, noted actress of the legitimate stage, who is about to commence work before the motion picture camera as the star of David Belasco's "Tiger Rose," for the Warner Brothers, many stories of this artist and her connection with the beloved Sarah Bernhardt are pouring into the executive offices of the Warner studios from interested showmen.

Perhaps the most interesting bit of information about Miss Ulric and the divine Sarah comes from Albert Dorris, motion picture editor of a Hollywood newspaper who was formerly prominent in dramatic circles of the east. Mr. Dorris has watched and studied the performance of Miss Ulric since she broke into the Belasco realm a few years ago. He was drawn to her art because of the interest she displayed in Madame Bernhardt, who was at that time under the management of Ike W. Hope, a close friend of Dorris.

It seems, according to the kind informant, that Miss Ulric had chosen the "Madame," as she was always called by the profession, as her idol, and each night at Frohman's theatre, would find the young actress deeply absorbed in the performance of the noted French artist. Finally Ike Hope carried his little secret to Madame, with the result that the Madame insisted upon Miss Ulric's company at an early date. The little incident terminated with Madame presenting a most beautiful portrait of herself to Miss Ulric with a personal touch of certainty that her young admirer would be heard of in the "big lights" before long.

The affair took place in late 1918 when Madame Bernhardt was appearing at the Empire Theatre in New York City. Miss Ulric had just finished her first hit under David Belasco and coming from so important a personage as Bernhardt, the little token of good will was most welcome.

Miss Ulric commences work in the immediate future on "Tiger Rose." This is the play in which she made such an impressive showing on Broadway. The picture version will be known as a Sidney A. Franklin production with Mr. Franklin handling the megaphone.

Katherine MacDonald was married last week to Chas. Johnson at Atlantic City, at the home of Dr. R. Johnson Held, uncle of the bridegroom. Mary MacClaren, the sister and Mrs. L. A. MacDonald mother of the bride, were present.

As the Editorial Mind Works

In view of the early approach of the Fourth of July again, let us resurrect that old saw: Beware of the gun that's not loaded! Also, mind your fire-cracking if you mind losing a finger or two.

Any man who takes advantage of another man when he's down on his knees need not expect to stay on his own feet so very long. Time sweeps the unfair into the discard unaided by mortal man.

There's going to be a revolution in motion pictures one of these days, but it won't be a Trotsky or a Lenine at the head of it, and, when it's all over, some of the present-day leaders among producers will probably go under.

The east had scarcely recovered from a blizzard when a man-killing heat wave hit that section of the country. From frigidity to torridity seems like a silly jump to endure when it's so simple to take a jump to Southern California.

Gradually the old-time, machine-made program picture is passing into discard, as one by one the producers are forsaking that field in favor of the so-called "special." Yea and verily, it is highly possible that in another couple of years you'd hardly know a photoplay, so different and better it will be.

There seems to be some doubt in the minds of some people as to the status of the motion picture industry so far as prosperity is concerned. All doubts should be dispelled by the simple statement of the fact that more money is being spent on film production this year than at any time in the entire history of the business. This is status enough to be optimistic over, we think.

Motion pictures about Hollywood are all right as far as they go, but more good would come of it if there could be injected a more serious note in all pictorial references to the home life of this community. The sooner the world knows that Hollywood people—including motion picture people—live just as people live in any other wholesome American city the better it will be for all concerned. Exaggerations one way or the other will not help one iota.

A movie a day keeps the "blues" away just as an apple a day will keep the doctor away. Now of all times should it become the habit of all civilized peoples to patronize the motion pictures more than ever, for an increase in patronage at this time will prove a great boon in encouraging the many improvements in screen fare which is so much demanded by the public. It takes money to pay for improvements and the activities around box-offices are requisite to making possible the defraying of the expenses. Hence let there be all the activities required since it is all for the common weal that motion pictures should be improved.

Next week the first annual Motion Picture Exposition opens at Exposition Park in Los Angeles. Out of common patriotism—an element which should be universally common in all Filmland—this enterprise should be given the utmost support by the picture people. It cannot be said that this rather gigantic affair has been advertised either judiciously enough or extensively enough, but it seems certain a sufficient number of people of the great general public know about it to insure record-breaking crowds. The very novelty of the idea of having a motion picture exposition is alone amply powerful to prove a big drawing card.

There is a veritable influx of child artists amazingly apparent in Hollywood just now. Mothers and fathers are bringing their off-spring from the north, east, south and west and all in-between directions as they never did before since the movies became the universal rage. Meanwhile there is very small demand for such juvenile talent. It is being proven daily that it is most difficult to develop second Jackie Coogans and second Baby Peggys and someone should take the trouble to broadcast the information relative to the great surplus of child aspirants here at present. It was demonstrated at a certain studio just this week that the issuing of a call for children brings at least fifty for each job. It is to be hoped the ratio will not be increased simply as a matter of sparing some doting parents from bitter disappointments such as are inevitable in such a big majority of the cases.

Myron Zobel, publisher of Screenland, a fan magazine, and Hollywood Confessions, ostensibly a sensational publication, is "on the pan" on the charge of his editorial policies and various tactics being unfair to Hollywood and detrimental as well. One of the local newspapers has been "jumping unto him with both feet" and many merchants have joined in a movement to make known their disapproval of him most emphatically. Meanwhile Mr. Zobel has moved bag and baggage to New York, where he does his own work at least, and it is highly doubtful whether or not he is justified in advertising that his Screenland comes from Hollywood at all, especially in view of the fact that it is not even printed here. He has had wonderful opportunities to do Hollywood many good turns, but evidently he has not elected to be conspicuous as this city's benefactor. While he does not maliciously malign this center of film-making, yet there are unsavory intimations in many of the stories he publishes and for this he can be blamed. Here's hoping, however, he will prove it is all a mistake and that he really is a good friend to the old home town, which certainly has been good to him.

"It takes two seconds to shoot off a skyrocket---and two months, at least, to build a skyscraper. We mention it because that goes for business too---J. M. Bundscho

The Mark of GOOD Publicity

This is the competitive era in motion pictures. The age-old law of the survival of the fittest carries on as relentlessly as in days gone by. From time to time we see a few, who have been acclaimed as artists of extraordinary merit and the ushers of a new order of things in the industry, rise to a momentary triumph and as quickly fade away into oblivion or mediocrity. They are the skyrockets of the profession; they have not built a strong foundation for the structure that is their career. They last but two seconds.

Others, unfavored and unknown, through sheer hard work and the magnetic quality of their art, slowly climb to the heights and find their niche. They make skyscrapers of their career, reaching to the height of worth-while achievement. They build a firm foundation for that structure. They learn through experience, their ability is gained through intensive and conscientious training. They last two months, then two years . . . .they last, that's the thing.

Far-visioned people of the industry realize that one of the biggest factors in film success is ADEQUATE PUBLICITY . . . . GOOD PUBLICITY. Through the medium of this worth-while publicity they are enlisting in their aid the tremendous and far-flung power of the press. They are making themselves known. Publicity is the cornerstone of the foundation of any real screen success. I want a few people who believe in themselves, to discuss this publicity phase with me. I believe I can be of genuine service. I am now representing several prominent actors and actresses and I will unhesitatingly refer you to them that you may ask them if publicity, GOOD publicity, pays. You will see above and below the mark of GOOD publicity. It is known to progressive editors throughout the world.

Vi Offers to Uplift Villains High

Viola Dana has offered to undertake the tk of uplifting the poor downtrodden sreen villains of Hollywood.

Charles Gerard, one of the ill fated and lsed at tribe, leers, plots and connives trough several hundred feet of film of Miss Ina's newest Metro starring picture, a rstery story written by Rita Weiman, "The Scial Code." Oscar Apfel is directing.

The little star does her level best to foil r. Gerard's evil plans while before the cam-a but otherwise she is one of his best fends.

"Some of the nicest men I've known are sreen villains," she told him. There are Ernest Torrence, the Beery boys, Walter ng, George Siegman and a dozen others. he trouble is that you don't stick together. ou have no standing in the community. A of people think you are as bad off the sreen as you are on it.

"My suggestion is that you form a club, ve regular officers, meet one night a week d unite your efforts to uplift the status of the screen villain. I don't think there's any need to vote for officers. I wouldn't do it that way. Just get together with paper and pencil and figure out what pictures each has played in during the past year.

"The one that has killed the most people, foreclosed the largest number of mortgages on widows and stolen the greatest amount of pennies from the blind men's cups—all in pictures—should be president. The villain with the second best average would be be vice-president, and so on down the line.

"The by-laws of the club might be arranged so that if at any time one of the ordinary members raised his average of misdeeds above that of one of the officers that he take that officer's place. Any person who failed to maintain an average of at least three mortgage foreclosures every month and three railroad wreck plots might be automatically dropped from membership.

Mr. Gerard considers that idea a good one. Has promised to "take it up with the boys" and report what progress he has made to Miss Dana.

VIOLA DANA

Composing Music as He Directs Picture

Many of the big films since "Intolerance" ve had special musical scores written for em, usually compilations of different estab-hed pieces of popular and classical music. ometimes the musical score for the presen-tion of a big film consists of entirely origi-l music, written especially for the photo-ay and therefore all the more appropriate. uch was the case with Douglas Fairbanks' Robin Hood," for the presentation of which ictor Schertzinger wrote an entirely origi-al score.

In the filming of Jackie Coogan's Metro ffering, "Long Live the King," Schertzinger as gone another step forward. He is direct-g Jackie in the picturization of this popu-r Mary Roberts Rinehart story under the ersonal supervision of Jackie Coogan, enior, and he has been composing the music hich is played on the stage by the "set rchestra" during the taking of the actual cenes. This same music will be transposed o some degree and arranged for the presen-tion of "Long Live the King" when it is ffered to the audiences of the world this all.

It has long been the custom for most di-ectors to use a set orchestra, which plays usic that the director or the actors feel ill inspire them to greater emotional eights, but this is the first time in film his-ory that entirely original music has been layed on the set during the making of a hotoplay, and scores another advance for he Jackie Coogan organization.

Thus Schertzinger has written several ew ballads for the scenes between Ruth Renick and Alan Forrest, who provide the hief love interest in the piece, and some in-eresting "villainous" themes for Rosemary

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

San Francisco, Cal., June 25, 1923—The Fox company with James Flood directing, and William Russel as the featured lead, shot some scenes on Market Street last Monday, and Tuesday worked on the docks, and departed for Los Angeles by train Tuesday evening.

Milton Gardner, Vice-president of Goldwyn, came to San Francisco last Thursday morning, and spent several days here looking over the work of the two Goldwyn companies now shooting in our midst. While in town Mr. Gardner visited the Victor Seastrom outfit working on location near Half-Moon Bay, and Eric Von Stroheim just starting his fourth month of work on the big made-to-order set at Hayes and Laguna Streets. And he also saw some of the lately finished film of "Greed," with which he was much pleased.

James Cruze and thirty members of the cast and staff engaged in making "Ruggles of Red Gap" for the Famous Players-Lasky company, arrived in San Francisco last last Saturday morning, spent the day at the Palace Hotel, and left in the evening for Eureka on location. Among the leading members of the organization are Ernest Torrence, Fritzi Ridgeway, Anna Lehr, Lois Wilson, Edward Everett Horton, and Charles Elliott. Vernon Keys is assistant director and Karl Brown is head cameraman.

Metro has also been represented in San Francisco the past week, as Harold Shaw, director, and seven others just starting the filming of "Held To Answer" from a story by Peter Clark McFarlane came to town last Thursday morning. Nate Watt is assistant director, Andre Barlabier at the camera. and House Peters is being featured. The picture will be an eight-reel special, and the leading feminine role has not yet been cast. While here they, with the help of some dozen local extra people did some two days of work on an Alameda ferry boat travelling back and forth across the Bay, also some scenes in Oakland, and at the Oakland Hotel. They returned to Los Angeles Saturday evening and will begin work at the studio on Monday morning.

Speaking of ferry boats, going to sea on San Francisco harbor seems to have suddenly become very much the fashion, for Eric Von Stroheim, most of his cast, and some fifteen extras, also spent two days last week sailing back and forth to Alameda via a ferry boat, and still have another day's work ahead of them on the beautiful waters of the Bay. All the company rather regarded this part of the picture as a lark, and even the company from Von Stroheim himself to Frank, the property boy, lunched together perched up on stools in the lunch room of the boat, and enjoyed the fresh air, and the beauty of the battleship dotted harbor between shots. As on Friday, both Metro and Goldwyn were working at once, only on different boats of the same line, they could wave at each other now and then as they passed by.

A. H. Sebastian, of the Belasco Production, and George W. Davis of the New York end of the organization, have been in Los Angeles the past week completing some important arrangements for the company.

Victor Seastrom, director, and the Goldwyn company working with him in the making of Hall Caine's "Master of Men," have finished their location work here, and left for the South on Friday evening. Their second and last week of work here seemed to be dogged with so many misfortunes that Jimmie Hogan, production manager, threatened if much more happened to go jump in the Bay himself. First of all the sun was not well behaved, and refused to shine several days when needed; then Charles Von Enger their head cameraman, trying to get some shots just at sunrise at Half-Moon Bay slipped on the rocks, and sprained his ankle, the property man had an infected foot, and last but not least, Patsy Ruth Miller retired to bed with bronchitis, but in spite of delays they at last got finished up, and our friend Jimmie wasn't quite driven to a watery grave.

Joan Standing, who has been playing "Silena" in "Greed," has finished her part in the picture and left for Los Angeles on Friday evening. Frank Hayes is also done

Along New York's Rialto

By RAYMOND McKEE

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond McKee are leaving New York City to settle in Hollywood. Ray has a log cabin on Cherokee Avenue all furnished with wild animal skins and rustic things from all parts of the globe. So there they will live until his tenants vacate from his bungalow. It will be Mrs. McKee's first visit to the land of flowers. She was Marguerite Courtot. Remember?

Eva Tanguay, the cyclonic comedienne, is wearing mourning over the death of her dog. Miss Tanguay's "Baby" croaked in Omaha while she was playing on the Orpheum Circuit. The dog's heart has been sealed up in a jar of alcohol, and his skin is being stuffed by a taxidermist. The lady is overwhelmed with grief.

The Court has given Mrs. Locklear, wife of Omer Locklear, the late daredevil aviator, permission to bring new action by serving an amended complaint within twenty days. The Fox Company filed a motion for the courts to dismiss the suit for $50,000 which Ruby Graves Locklear brought shortly after her husband met his death while performing in an aeroplane for the Fox Film Corporation in Hollywood.

Bessie Barriscale has closed her season and come back to New York for a rest before leaving for the Pacific Coast.

Michael J. Connelley, formerly casting director for the Cosmopolitan Studios, has opened offices of his own at 140 West 44th Street under the name of the New York Casting Office. He has already cast principals for some of the biggest productions now in the making.

Tyrone Power will play an important part in "The Day of Faith" which Tod Browning is to direct for Goldwyn.

Herbert Corthell and Walter Catlett have been engaged for important roles in "Second Youth," which Distinctive Pictures has put in production as a feature vehicle for Alfred Lunt and Mimi Palmeri.

Sherry Hall, a real "Native Son" of Erin is cutting his latest special for Distinctive Pictures. Sherry is kept busy these days between directing pictures and listening over the radio he must find time to sing, at least once each night, "Lady of the Evening." Believe me the "old kid's" clevah.

The general approval with which the press and screen public have received the film "Main Street," has won for it the distinction of a second week's showing at the Strand Theatre. Credit for this goes to Harry Beaumont, for his capable direction and a good cast which includes Monte Blue, Alan Hale Harry Myers, and Florence Vidor.

On July 1st the Green Room Club will move from its home in West 47th Street to its new home in West 48th Street, near Fifth Avenue. The Actors' Order of Friendship owns the present quarters which will be used for restaurant purposes.

THE SILENT TREND

COMPOSITE OF VIEWS, PREVIEWS AND REVIEWS OF MOTION PICTURES

We are back again after a vacation. It es a reviewer of pictures good to have re- te from projection rooms for a few weeks ry once in a while. Protracted sieges d to warp the judgment and to make one l as if none of the films are what they ould be. Fatigue is responsible for this. edless to add, one can become extremely igued as a result of watching fifteen to nty full-length productions projected ry week without music and often even hout good air. The cinema art deserves w viewpoints and such can be obtained y through rest. According to our way of nking, it is entirely wrong to send a tired n to criticise any photoplay. In order to be t in any appraisal one's mind, primarily. st be clear and in view of the fact that re are so many angles to observe, study l analyze in a picture production, it is ential to be sitting somewhat at ease with world if anything worth while is to be veloped in the subsequent review. So now t we have had our recuperation, we shall gin all over again, devoutly hoping to be structive and helpful in everything we do this department.

Wallace Beery as the king in "Richard, e Lion-Hearted" is one of the forthcoming ats. This production might well be called sequel to "Robin Hood," but of course it not nearly as pretentious nor is it equal Fairbanks' classic in story value and es- ially in romantic interest. However, it an intriguing picture and gives Mr. Beery ple opportunity to go further in his prov- that he is more than screen villain. In t, he makes King Richard such an out- nding characterization that it seems al- st certain of living as one of the high- hts of the present generation's cinema hievements. It will not be easy to arouse e public to much excitement over the story the Crusades, which constitutes the basis this film feature and therefore it seems e essence of wisdom to exploit along lines ch as will make its "Talisman" qualities ite secondary. The picturesque character Richard and the delightful interpretation ered by Mr. Beery seems to be the out- nding advertising point for this picture. any rate, when one sees it and studies it, ere will be full entertainment while one ins real education.

Jesse D. Hampton's production of "The oilers" is having all kinds of encomiums stowed upon it and well does it deserve is praise, for it is one of the outstanding reen classics of current times. Although it to be admitted that comparisons are ious, it is irresistible to admit this new oduction of the famous Rex Beach story considerably superior to the original ver- on. The improvements in methods of pic- re-making and story-telling are discernible an advantageous degree and far from the ast important is the superiority of the cast players Mr. Hampton selected to portray e numerous characters. Fully a half dozen embers of this cast are decidely in the run- ng for the very first honors and it would difficult to choose THE one out of the lot. nna Q. Nilsson and Barbara Bedford both fer superb performances while Noah Beery, ilton Sills, Robert Edeson and Robert Mc- im are at their best throughout. The di- ction of Lambert Hillyer is also worthy special mention—he has handled the un- lding of the story in a masterly manner id his handiwork is always one of artistic finesse and fidelity to truth. "The Spoilers," always a good bet, is now a better one and as a picture revival of the popular tale, it seems destined to enjoy unprecedented popularity throughout the realm inhabited by photoplay fans.

Well, "Main Street" is on the screen map and bids fair to be as popular there as it was on the book market although, frankly, the screen version is scarcely recognizable as having been related to the book Sinclair Lewis wrote. True, the epic of Gopher Prairie as originally written had practically no picture value and it was indispensable to infuse many angles of dramatic worth in order to get even the semblance of a plot. Of course, frankly again, the one reason why "Main Street" ever reached the screen had to do with the exploitation value of the title due to the fact that it was the best seller of its time. Universal policies which would make the fixed rule to relegate high grade original stories written expressly for the screen for the sake of acquiring the prestige of the popularity of a work not written with the idea of any picturization, could not possibly be beneficial to the industry in the long run although it is true quite a pretty penny is to be made off such a venture as that of Warner Brothers. However, much clever work has been done by someone in assembling the few available picture points of the book Mr. Lewis gave to the world and attaching them to incidents of greater visual importance. The cast of characters is almost countless, there being no less than twenty-five principals who get screen credit. Florence Vidor carries off the top honors with Monte Blue a close second. Alan Hale, Noah Beery, Harry Myers and Louise Fazenda also give good accounts of themselves.

James Young has given the exhibitors of the country another real box office attraction. His latest is "Wandering Daughters" and the title alone "gets 'em in." It is a story concerning the much-discussed flappers of the moment and inevitably it gets much of its impetus from the jazz craze which is still with us. There is plenty to interest one throughout this production although, of course, those inclined to want a little more of the serious and of the high-brow will not be fully satisfied. However, there is real drama in many of the situations and it is of the variety that strikes home especially since everyone has watched the career of some one flapper at least. Besides a moral is presented in the course of events and with it all there is an abundance of delightful diversion in these six reels. Most of the interest centers around the performances of Marjorie Daw and Marguerite De La Motte although Pat O'Malley, the hero, is excellent too. Here is an excellent feature for the popular priced house.

TENDENCIES TERSELY TOLD

The inclination of various groups of exhibitors to squabble and fight is not abating any and the continuance inspires the question: What are they fighting about? As near as we can ascertain, it is all a battle between a few leaders and near-leaders and it's very certain no good can come of the situation.

It seems authors cannot avoid the unpleasantness of suits. Whatever may be the merits of the various cases, it does strike one as more than passing strange that the ones who write the screen material have the most trouble getting any credit therefor, and frequently they seem even unable to collect all the money due them. It is to be hoped that eventually the writer will find his sun in the film business.

The coalition of A. L. Erlanger and the Messrs. Shubert is being bitterly assailed as an attempt to gouge the public. These leaders of the legitimate field have announced their intention of maintaining a motion picture circuit and the project does not have the approval of leaders in the film field.

This promises to be the banner year for screen adaptation of published novels. Never before have so many books been on studio schedule and yet there are those optimists who predict the original story is about to come into its own. Here's hoping anyway.

Photoplays with purposes are enjoying a vogue just now largely due to the world-wide interest aroused by Mrs. Wallace Reid's anti-narcotic picture, "Human Wreckage," which is proving potential as a force for arousing the public to renewed efforts to stamp out the greatest menace of all. The more the photoplay helps some worthy cause while it entertains the better it will be for insuring the permanence of the great cinema art as a perpetual benefactor of humanity.

One by one great publishers admit the screen ranks with the press as a factor in promoting the public welfare. William Randolph Hearst is the latest to add his concession on this point. Some of the hide-bound censors may yet have to mete out justice to motion pictures.

There is a revival of interest in western photodramas, a revival which may be traced to the success of "The Covered Wagon." At the present time there are more companies making western pictures in Southern California than at any time for two years. Meanwhile the high-society is suffering and the costume play is on the wane.

PROOF—REAL PROOF

Truth is stranger than fiction!

Here is proof.

Fiction: In "Wandering Daughters," a recent James Young-First National production, a dramatic highlight is an incident when an artist uncovers a nude painting—the body of which was of one girl and the head of another.

Truth: A well-known New York society woman sues a prominent sculptor for $200,000 claiming that he had used the model of her head on the model of the nude body of another woman.

THIS BUTLER HOLDS RECORD FOR SERVICE IN FILMS

This is a story about John Underhill, the butler in Viola Dana's newest picture, "The Social Code," which Oscar Apfel is directing for Metro.

Mr. Underhill's praises are seldom sung but he is known to every director and casting director in Hollywood. Almost everyone who attends motion pictures even occasionally knows him by sight. When his figure is flashed on the screen it is just like looking at an old friend.

To recount the pictures in which this famous character has played would require the listing of 90 per cent of the productions in which butlers or waiters have been used, and that means a good share of the hundreds turned out yearly.

"I'm doomed to the life of a butler and a waiter," said Mr. Underhill. "I probably never will be anything else. I was in pictures long before most of our present stars had finished McGuffey's fourth reader and if my health holds out I probably will be still opening doors and announcing, 'Tea is served, madam,' when most of them have been retired to their country estates.

"I pride myself on being one of the best butlers in motion pictures. I used to be one on the stage. Character parts are not for me although I often have longed to try one. I don't care much for waiter roles—I don't consider them as dignified as buttling. A head waiter isn't so bad, there's a deal of poise to be maintained when you're playing a role like that."

Mr. Underhill is rather tall and well built with thinning gray-brown hair and cold gray eyes. He is exactly the type of person, if he were a waiter in a high class cafe, patrons would never think of tipping less than a dollar.

Others appearing in support of Miss Dana in this Rita Weiman mystery story include Malcom McGregor, Edna Flugrath, Huntly Gordon, Mary Ruby, John Sainpolis, Yvonne Gardelle, William Humphrey and Charles Gerard.

FIFTEEN CENTS A DAY HIS WAGES

Working in a theatre for fifteen cents a night, later traveling through the British empire with his father's step-brother, Alfred Capper who is now in England as a successful mind reader, then working at odd jobs for the next few years in France, Switzerland, British Columbia and other foreign countries, only to finally land in Seattle, Washington, where he went to work as a newspaper reporter—this is a brief summary of the career of Reggie Morelli, film actor, before his entrance into motion pictures in 1912.

The actor's parents and grandparents have all been identified with the theatre. His mother, an Italian, was a renowned singer and ballet dancer and for many years appeared with the Royal Ballet at the Scala Theatre in Italy.

His father, an Englishman, was one of the best known impressarios in that country. When he was fifteen years old Morelli worked as a stage hand at the Venice Theatre in Naples for which he received the startling sum of fifteen cents a night. At that time Lina Cavalieri was the star at the theatre and was just starting to gain fame as a singer.

His first job in America was on the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, where he worked for two years as a reporter. He made his debut in motion pictures as one of the Keystone cops in the old Mack Sennett comedies when Gloria Swanson, Charles Chaplin and Ora Carew were among the players with the company.

CHARACTER ACTRESSES

According to the studio casting director the number of capable character actresses on the screen can be counted upon the fingers of one's two hands. This lends importance to the fact that two of the ten, Lydia Yeamans Titus and Carrie Clark Ward, are members of the cast of "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's newest production for Metro.

Their last meeting occured in 1896 when they appeared on the same program at the Grand Opera House at First and Main Streets, Los Angeles. Miss Ward had the lead in her own company's production, "The Golden Giant Mine" and as was the fashion in those days Miss Titus went before the curtain between acts and sang "Sally In Our Alley" and other songs. She was one of the best known vaudevillians in this country or Europe.

On one particular night the stage director conceived the idea that it would be an excellent touch to have Lawrence Hanley, the leading man, register rapture at a point near the footlights as he listened to the strains of "In the Gloaming," sung from a position in the wings by Miss Ward. She told him she couldn't sing and the argument was becoming good when Miss Titus saved the day by volunteering to sing in Miss Ward's place.

"The audience will never know the difference," she explained.

Miss Ward agreed and at the conclusion of the song she made her entrance on the stage. The applause was thunderous. Miss Ward paused and bowed and smiled, bowed some more and smiled some more. She tried to continue with her lines but the audience drowned her voice.

"Without a doubt it was the most embarrassing moment of my life," she said.

She was panic stricken. At last with a final bow she made her exit. After Miss Titus obligingly sang another stanza off stage Miss Ward returned to an appeased audience and the show went on.

In addition to Miss Ward and Miss Titus the cast of "Scaramouche" includes Ramon Navarro, Alice Terry, Lewis Stone, Edith Allen, Lloyd Ingraham, Julia Swayne Gordon, James Marcus, William Humphrey, Otto Matiesen, Bowditch, "Smoke" Turner, George Siegmann, John George, Nelson McDowell, Yvonne Gardelle, Snitz Edwards, Lois Lee, J. Edwin Brown and others.

ANNA DOUBLES FOR CLOCK

No need for an alarm clock for Anna Q. Nilsson's Hollywood neighbors.

For three months fair Anna has been getting into shape to play a part in "Ponjola," a First National picture directed by Donald Crisp, in which she appears as a young woman masquerading as a man.

Getting into shape means one hour of calesthenic exercises every morning and slaps, bangs and massages at the hands of a professional masseuse.

The "ouches" "ows" and "wows" which Miss Nilsson ejaculates as the masseuse does her stuff are all that suffice to wake up the whole neighborhood.

Incidentally "Anna Q." suggests the slapping treatment for those who would like to lose flesh.

Mike Connolly, popular casting director for the Hearst pictures since their beginning, has opened casting offices for himself to cast for the stage and screen. "The New York Casting Offices" is written across the door at 140 West 44th Street and Mike is the president and is reputed to have some very influential friends back of him.

TOURNEUR WILL FILM BIG EXPOSITION PREMIERE FOR PRESIDENT'S SAKE

"If Mahomet can't come to the ountain, the mountain will go Mahomet."

The most familiar, to Chris- an ears, extract from the oran has been paraphrased by aurice Tourneur, motion pic- re director.

President Harding cannot me to the opening of the Mon- e Doctrine Centennial Exposi- on. So, Mr. Tourneur is going bring the opening to the esident.

Motion pictures of the elabor- e ceremonies which will occur the formal opening of the American Historical Review nd Motion Picture Industrial xposition" will be made under r. Tourneur's direction by rthur L. Todd, chief cinemato- apher of the Tourneur pro- uctions, and presented to the resident, if his approval is ob- ined.

The plan was outlined in a ngthy telegram sent to the hief Executive at Kansas City is week by Mr. Tourneur. It ead: "Understand you will be nable to attend opening cere- honies Monroe Doctrine Cen- nnial Exposition. May I have e honor of bringing the pre- iere of this world event to you ia the motion picture? If this eets with your approval I hall be glad to assign my chief hotographer and personally di- ct the taking of motion pic- ures of this event to be pre- ented to you as a record of hat is believed will prove the ost gigantic undertaking of its ind in the history of California. espectfully, Maurice Tour- eur."

President Harding was ex- ected to formally open the ex- osition, until this Spring, when nternational complications re- ulted in the postponement of is trip West. When the invita- ion was tendered him last sum- ner it was tentatively accepted.

Anticipating President Hard- ng's acceptance, arrangements re already under way to break ll records for speed in develop- ng and printing the film made t the exposition in order that he President may see the creened scenes as soon as pos- ible. Inquiries are being made egarding the itinerary of the Presidential Special train and rrangements will be made to meet it enroute with a projec- ion machine and the Tourneur rint.

A special car will be engaged by Mr. Tourneur to be fitted out as a laboratory and the camera with which the pictures are made will be hurried to it, with the film still in it. The film will be developed and prints made enroute.

PRODUCERS GIVING NEW TALENT CHANCE

That the production to be released the coming season, starting September 1, will disclose more "new faces" than ever before among the players appearing on the screens throughout the country, is the observation of Miss Evelyn Brent, one of the newer "types" of leading ladies now appearing before cameras here.

"A wide-spread movement is evident among producers to introduce 'new faces' among the players appearing in their forthcoming pictures," said Miss Brent.

"Such producers as Marshall Neilan, Maurice Tourneur, Milton Hoffman, production manager of Metro, Victor B. Fisher and others have already come out publicly in favor of the 'new faces' idea and are introducing new players in important parts in pictures now under way. Others are joining the ranks daily and within a very short time many players who have had little opportunity in the past, will be appearing before the camera in leading characterizations.

"Mr. Hoffman of Metro, before a meeting of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers recently, stated that what the screen needs today as much as anything else, are new personalities. He pointed out that the over-use of well known players would harm both the players and the pictures.

"An observation of present studio activities discloses the fact that next season there will be evidenced a greater number of 'new faces' on the screens throughout the country, than during any similiar period in the history of the motion picture—or at least ever since the star system of using popular players started."

PLANT FOR MANUFACTURING FILM-MAKING ACCESSORIES WILL BE FOUNDED HERE

Geldert Ready For 128th

With the return of Cecil De Mille and company from location, work on "The Ten Commandments" is rapidly being completed and the picture will be ready soon for the cutting room. In finishing his work in this production, Clarence H. Geldert will have completed his 127th picture in the last six years.

FILM FOLKS' CAR COLLIDES WITH SHEEP

A narrow escape from severe injuries and perchance death was experienced by several important film artists this week in Prescott, Arizona, when the closed automobile in which they were riding to location ran amuck in a huge flock of sheep.

The film company is located in Prescott making Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man" for Principal Pictures Corporation. Those seated in the unfortunate car were Marguerite De La Motte, leading woman for the company, Mrs. Edward F. Cline, wife of the director making the picture, Mrs. A. L. Bernstein, wife of the production manager, and John Bowers, star of the company.

The occupants were hurrying to Williamson Valley, the scene of their camera work, some thirty miles from Prescott. The driver of the car was pointing out an interesting piece of scenery along the road and did not notice the herd of sheep crossing. The car struck the animals while several hundred were along the roadway and the impact threw the machine from one side of the road to the other, it finally halting on one side in a shallow slope along the road.

Seven of the sheep were killed by the onrushing car and had it not been for the strong grip on the steering wheel by the driver, a complete somersault would have been inevitable. The occupants were badly shaken and received minor bruises. They were given first aid treatment and sent back to Prescott, while director Cline made the best of matters by filming episodes in which they did not appear.

The low valleys of this particular portion of Arizona are a grayish hue which makes it difficult to see the sheep which thrive in large numbers and it is always general warning among the residents of that country to keep your eyes on the road ahead.

That Los Angeles will not only be the production and financial center of motion pictures, but the nucleus of the manufacturing of the accessories that accompany finished film products, is the firm belief of Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg of Principal Pictures Corporation.

According to these film executives, steps are now being taken to create in Los Angeles, a huge manufacturing plant in which will be created and made, all accessories pertaining to film productions made and released by the Principal Pictures Corporation.

New York, Chicago and Cleveland have at the present time the "corner" so to speak on the accessories output for the film world. With Principal Pictures' plans, Los Angeles will jump into the ring and take a big stride forward in this respect as well.

Few people outside the industry realize, according to Sol Lesser, the many "tools" necessary to "put over" a motion picture after it is made. The exhibitors require lithographs, press books, special exploitation mats, cuts, and advertising matter. Novelties in hundreds of different varieties are made up in million quantities by these eastern firms and distributed to the many film exchanges and theatres throughout the world.

According to Messers Lesser and Rosenberg, a large tract of industrial property will be purchased, and upon this site will be erected buildings suitable for manufacture of all accessories necessary for the products of the Principal Pictures Corporation. These will include lithographs, press books, special exploitation advertising, novelties of every description, including bookmarks, dolls, statues, tags, heralds and every conceivable piece of advertising attractive to the theatre owner wanting to exploit pictures on a big basis.

Henry Kolker will shortly return to the United States after completing "I Will Repay," an Ideal Picture.

ACTOR WINS HIGH HONORS IN CONTEST

Creighton Hale, debonair leading man of stage and screen, has not only firmly established himself with the theatre-going public as one of the screen's most versatile and clever leading men, but last Friday evening in the Rose Room of the Ambassador hotel when a number of prominent motion picture stars appeared in the National Dance Tournament to compete for the championship of Southern California, Mr. Hale won high honors for his ability as an exponent of the art of terpsichore.

Mr. Hale made his debut in pictures several years ago, but not until last year had he been given an opportunity to work before the camera at one of the Hollywood studios. Victor Hugo Halperin, having been seriously attracted by the actor's brilliant work as the professor in D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East," and with his work in many other notable film plays, transported him from New York to Hollywood to play the leading role in his picture, "Tea—With a Kick," which is shortly to be shown at Grauman's Million Dollar theatre.

Upon the completion of that picture Mr. Hale was prevailed upon by the management of the Mason Opera House, Los Angeles, to present his play, "Just Suppose," for a week's run. This play was previously presented by him at the Columbia theatre in San Francisco where it scored a tremendous hit and it went over with equal success at the Mason.

Then Mr. Hale was engaged to play the part of "Billy" in the Richard Walton Tully production of "Trilby" and according to all reports his performance is one of the high lights of the pictures. At present he is under contract with Goldwyn where he is portraying the role of "Alick" in the current Victor Seastrom production, "The Master of Man."

Added to Cast

Tom O'Brien, who has just completed work with Jane Murfin and Justin H. McCloskey on "The Sign," has been added to the cast of the Trimble-Murfin Production, "The Phantom Pack," Strongheart's next starring vehicle, and is playing the part of a German heavy in the circus sequence. O'Brien is also being considered by Director Laurence Trimble for the part of "Beauty" Smith in Strongheart's other picture, Jack London's "White Fang," the exteriors for which were taken in Canada while the Trimble company was making "The Phantom Pack" ex-

Dog is Popular Player

Buddy, the trained film canine, has just finished his work in Warner Brothers' latest picture, "The Country Boy," directed by William Beaudine and starring Wesley Barry. According to Henry East, the dog's master, Buddy has now worked in a total of sixty-four pictures and is fast becoming the leader of canine actors.

LA ROCQUE GETS CONTRACT WITH DE MILLE

It was this week announced from the office of Cecil B. De Mille that Rod La Rocque has been signed on a long-term contract by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for Cecil B. De Mille Productions.

Mr. La Rocque was signed recently by Mr. De Mille for a leading role in the modern story of "The Ten Commandments," the Biblical prologue of which is just being completed. Mr. La Rocque's tests proved him so admirably fitted for the roles for which he is intended by Mr. De Mille that he was very shortly given the long-term contract.

Rod La Rocque is considered one of the most promising of the younger leading men of the screen. He was born in Chicago twenty-five years ago. He has been on the stage almost continuously since he was seven years old. He has alternated between the stage and the screen. Previous to his recent return to the Pacific Coast, he had appeared in such Broadway stage successes as "Thy Name Is Woman," and "Nice People."

In the days of Essanay, he was featured in a series of George Ade Fables and played heavies in a number of Bryant Washburn pictures. Recent film successes include "Slim Shoulders," "Notoriety," and "Jazzmania."

Mr. De Mille and Mr. Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players- Lasky Corporation, are said to have great hopes for the future of La Rocque, who is now given an opportunity such as that which at one time led Thomas Meighan and the late Wallace Reid to stardom.

Kipling Classic Soon

Rudyard Kipling's classic short novel "The Light That Failed" is in process of being translated into screen language by F. McGrew Willis, who is preparing the scenario for George Melford's forthcoming production of this popular and dramatic story. While work on this adaptation is progressing rapidly, George Melford is putting the finishing touches on his preceding Paramount picture "Salomy Jane."

Actor is Recovering

Billy Giffin, who was injured recently while working on a set at the Goldwyn studios, suffering a broken jaw and a split wrist, is reported well on the way to recovery and will soon be able to resume his activities before the camera. He is confined to the Pacific Hospital, where many of his friends in the local film colony have visited him.

ALL WARNERS GET TOGETHER IN HOLLYWOOD

For the first time in many months the four Warner Brothers of picture producing fame were gathered together when Abe Warner of the New York office arrived at their West Coast studio in Hollywood this week.

Abe Warner's visit to the studio lasted but a few days as he immediately departed for a business tour of the middle west. He slipped out of Los Angeles as quietly as entering, after four days of concentration with his brothers of the details for the production of eighteen or more classics of the screen, which they are to make this coming season.

This is Abe Warner's second trip to the coast in six months. He has traveled a route of principal cities throughout the country, making personal acquaintances with exhibitors and distributors of the Warner product. On leaving Los Angeles, he headed toward Denver, where he will press the button for the middle west campaign of "Brass" and "Main Street," the two most recent Warner releases, and then into Kansas City and back to New York.

Mr. Warner reports that the entire country is awaiting with open arms the fulfillment of promises of Los Angeles producers for bigger and better pictures and that the prevailing opinion of the theatre men of the country, big and small alike, is that genuine stories and real directors go a long way toward making films successful.

Keith Headliner Signs

Francis A. Ross, formerly of the celebrated vaudeville team of Felix Adler and Francis Ross, has succumbed to the lure of the pictures, and is now being engaged as one of the "Gold Diggers" in the picture of that name being produced by the Warner Brothers at their West Coast studios. Miss Ross was a headliner on the Orpheum and Keith Vaudeville circuits for more than four years. She is portraying the role of Dolly Baxter in the Avery Hopwood story "The Gold Diggers."

RETURNS FROM TWO MONTHS IN ARIZONA

Principal Pictures Corporation's "When A Man's a Man" company returned to Los Angeles this week after having spent the best part of two months in Prescott, Arizona, making exterior episodes for the noted Harold Bell Wright story.

A special car, thick with dust and piled high with props, cameras, and picture equipment, carried the players and their valuable film from the Arizona town.

Among those who stepped from the platform of the car were Marguerite De La Motte, John Bowers, Robert Frazer, June Marlowe, George Hackathorne, John Fox, Jr., Fred Stanton, Charles Mails, Forrest Robinson and a host of others equally popular including Edward F. Cline, the director, and Arthur L. Bernstein, business and production manager for the Principal Pictures Corporation.

"Glad to be home?" The members of the Wright cast looked at each other in silent approval.

"You bet," laughed Miss De La Motte. "We had a wonderful trip and the Prescott folk treated us royally, but there's no place like home, you know."

The next few weeks will be spent by the company making interior episodes. Work will be continued at Principal's Hollywood studios at once.

"When a Man's a Man" is the first of the series of Harold Bell Wright novels to be filmed by Principal Pictures Corporation. Others will follow in line. There are nine volumes in the series, all of which have been purchased by the picture company.

Mae Has Birthday Party

Paul Bern gave a delightful birthday dinner this week at the Montmartre in honor of Mae Musch. Among those present were Mabel Normand, Corinne Griffith, June Mathis, Julanne Johnston, Carmel Myers, Carey Wilson, Walter Morosco, Joseph Jackson, William Haines and Goodman Bradley. Mr. Bern adapted to the screen "The Christian" and "The Master of Man," Hall Caine novels, in both of which Miss Busch plays the leading feminine roles.

Hoot Returns

Edward Sedgwick and his company have returned from the location camp at O'Neill's Ranch, where the outdoor scenes of "The Ramblin' Kid" were filmed, and is now at work on the interiors, at Universal City. The interiors are elaborate. The picture stars Hoot Gibson, with Laura La Plante, W. J. McCully, William Welsh, Carol Holloway and a large cast.

"BAD MAN" IS NOW BEING FILMED ON RANCH

Bang, bang, bang, they're off! Holbrook Blinn, bad man de luxe, has busted over the border and is doing his famous stage role before the camera.

Work on Edwin Carewe's "The Bad Man," which will be released by First National, started yesterday at Roscoe where the initial ranch exteriors were shot."

Though necessarily somewhat different from Emerson Porter Brown's stage play in which Blinn has starred so long so successfully, this celebrated actor has a role even more picturesque and mirth-provoking than the one which has been charming legitimate audiences of New York and Los Angeles.

"The screen adaptation of this play," says Blinn, "will give me an even better chance to interpret the bandit character as I visualize him. The film will permit much more action and detail and will permit a wider range of acting and a stronger plot."

Enid Bennett, who played Maid Marion in "Robin Hood" and who was the feminine lead in Fred Niblo's "Captain Applejack," will play the feminine lead of "The Bad Man" opposite Jack Mulhall, who has the role of Gilbert Jones.

Carewe plans to turn the negative over to First National for distribution in August. The interiors are to be taken at the United Studios.

CRUZ GETS JUVENILE ROLE IN LEE FEATURE

The part of Charlie Hemingway in "You Can't Get Away With It," the first of a series of special productions to be made by Fox under the direction of Roland V. Lee, is being played by Charles Cruz, popular screen juvenile, instead of George Hackathorne, who was recently reported as playing the part. The role referred to is the leading juvenile character in the story and is allowing the actor a fine opportunity to establish himself as one of the most capable artists of his rank.

Prior to his entrance into motion pictures a short two years ago, Cruz appeared in musical comedies and dramatic plays from which he gained wide recognition as a brilliant performer. Among a number of successful pictures in which Cruz has appeared and won the unstinted praise of dramatic critics for his histrionic ability are "Beauty's Worth," "My American Wife," "You Never Can Tell," "Blood and Sand," and others.

A SURPRISE IN STORE FOR FANS OF OWEN MOORE

Whoever had decided Owen Moore was permanently committed to starring in rollicking comedies such as he made so triumphantly for Selznick, have a surprise in store for them, because when they see him in "Thundergate" in which he is now playing the leading role for First National at the United Studios, they will discover him reaching zenith of intensely dramatic artistry—just the opposite to the sort of work he did in such successes as "Reported Missing."

An additional element of surprise will be discovered in the fact that in "Thundergate," Mr. Moore plays three different characters or rather portrays the dramatic feelings of an unusual man in three distinctly different transitions of his carrer as unfolded in this story of the entrancing Orient. Moreover, for the first time he essays the interpretations of a young Chinese character, and, according to reports emanating from those associated with him in the filming of this picture, his performance bids fair to be proclaimed one of the acting sensations of the current year.

Although those who are familiar with Owen Moore's long record for presenting screen characters of great variety do not need any proof of his versatility, those who know him only by his brilliant work as the star of the series of comedies he made during the last three years will no doubt be more than surprised to see him so heavily dramatic as he is in "Thundergate." Especially as a derelict is his work most challenging of seriousness although his interpretations of the character of the young Chinese in the midst of most dazzling Oriental luxury is said to be exceedingly gripping.

CRISP IS WORKING HERE AFTER 3 YEARS' ABSENCE

Donald Crisp, famous director, soldier of fortune and actor, who has spent the last three years in Europe, two, managing the Famous Players-Lasky, London Studio and one year at the Berlin plant of the same company, will direct Sam E. Rork's production of "Ponjola" for First National distribution.

Among the pictures which Crisp directed in Europe was the screen adaptation of "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush." This was made in Scotland, the original locale of the story.

Crisp has been a recognized authority on pictures since the inception of the industry and has been prominently identified with filmdom in many ways. As co-director with David Wark Griffith he helped give to the world its very first big spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." Another of his famous pictures was "The Six Best Cellers."

Crisp has already established offices at the United Studios and will start directing Cynthia Stockley's South African story within the next few days. Among members of the cast already selected are : Anna Q. Nilsson, James Kirkwood and Tully Marshall. Crisp's assistant will be James Ewens, who assisted Director James Young in the filming of "Wandering Daughters," and Richard Walton Tully's screen version of "Trilby."

Ince to Film Fitch Story

"Barbara Fritchie," the story of Civil War days which has been a favorite stage classic with two generations, is to be screened by Thomas H. Ince. Film rights to the play, which was written by Clyde Fitch, have been purchased through the playwright's widow and the estate of Charles Froham, who produced the stage drama. Production work will begin as soon as a cast can be selected.

OLD-TIME GRIFFITH FIND CAST IN "THE BAD MAN"

Teddy Sampson, another member of the old D. W. Griffith school, who has become a screen favorite, has been engaged to play an important part in "The Bad Man," which is to be produced and directed by Edwin Carewe for First National.

Miss Sampson has been cast in the role of "Angela Hardy," a semi-comedy part which will give her an excellent opportunity to demonstrate her talent.

Miss Sampson has recently returned to the coast after an engagement with Famous Players in which she appeared with Elsie Ferguson in "The Outcast." She has been in films for nine years; previous to that she was in musical comedy and on the vaudeville stage.

It was while she was appearing with Gus Edwards in "School Days," that D. W. Griffith was first attracted to Miss Sampson's talent. He advised her to desert the "speakies" for the silver-sheet, and she agreed.

Her first screen part was in "The Broken Bottle," which was produced by the old Reliance-Majestic Company, later the Triangle Company. She played leads and character parts in a number of features produced by this organization. Later she was with Selznick and for a year she was starred in a series of Christie comedies.

Hines Finishes

Johnny Hines has completed the filming of the George M. Cohan play, "Little Johnny Jones," at the Warner Brothers studios under the direction of Arthur Rosson. The story centers around the English Derby at Epsom Downs, England, with Hines as the Yankee jockey scheduled to ride Yankee Doodle. Molly Malone is the girl in the case, and George Webb plays the villain.

"Gigi," Dinky Dean's initial starring vehicle, produced by Z. A. Stegmuller at Universal City, just has been completed and the negative and masterprint taken East where arrangements are being made for distribution.

For perhaps the first time in film history a four-year-old star makes his bow to the picture public in a five-reel costume production adapted from a classic penned by a famous author.

That this picture will take like wild fire is the consensus of opinion of those who have seen it. The production is a lavish one and little Dinky is supported by a remarkable cast consisting of such celebrities as; Virginia Pearson, John Sainpolis, Josef Swickard, Sam De Grasse, Eric Mayne, Mitchell Lewis, Ethel Wales, Frank Bond and Frank Darrow, Sr.

"Gigi," a screen adaptation of Abbie Farwell Brown's famous "John of the Woods," a Houghton Mifflin book now in its sixteenth edition, is the story of an Italian youngster who lived in an Italian principality during the fifteenth century.

The story has and appealing plot and costumes and settings are lavish and rich far beyond those of the average costume production.

The film was directed by Albert Austin, who wrote and directed "My Boy" and who also directed "Trouble."

Chuck Reisner, famous character actor, star and director, who is Dinky's father, assisted in the filming of the youngster's first serious effort toward stardom. Dinky first came into the public eye when he appeared with Charlie Chaplin in "The Pilgrim."

MONEY-MAD INDIANS GIVE PEACEFUL TOWN A THRILL

Residents of Bishop, California had visions of an uprising of Piute Indians last week when 35 braves, in war paint, descended on the peaceful town.

Then, when they headed for the First National Bank, the fears grew to intensity. "The Indians have turned bank robbers," thought the citizens.

But they were all wrong. The Indians were as peaceful as the town. They had come there to cash their salary checks which they had received for playing parts in "The Huntress," a First National picture starring Colleen Moore, now being taken in the Sierras, a few miles from Bishop.

Florence Billings is taking a short vacation following the completion of her contract with T. Hayes Hunter in "Wild Love."

NOTED N. Y. ACTOR WON BY FILM COLONY

Harry Mestayer, one of the most popular leading men of stage and screen, who is well-known to Los Angeles as well as New York audiences, has arrived in Hollywood with a view of launching himself actively in motion pictures.

For ten years an actor and director for Oliver Morosco in Los Angeles, Mr. Mestayer has appeared in support of and directed a great many of the foremost stars of the footlights and silversheet. He has been an actor for the past thirty years, playing heavy leads with Lenore Ulrich, George M. Cohan, Mme. Nazimova, Jack Barrymore, Henry Miller, James K. Hackett, Mrs. Fiske, E. H. Southern, Ruth Chatterton, David Belasco, Charles Frohman and many others.

For two years he was leading man at the Princess Theatre, New York, with Holbrook Blinn.

Mr. Mestayer came to Los Angeles eight years ago as leading man with the original "Fair and Warmer" company and his work in the play brought forth the greatest praise of dramatic critics here.

Although he has now been in Hollywood only a few days he has already received a number of flattering offers from different film producers to play leads and featured roles in forthcoming pictures. His arrival here is considered a great achievement for filmland. Producers in the past strenuously endeavored but without success to obtain the services of the noted actor, for at that time he could not be induced to give up his work on the legitimate stage.

Now that he has announced his intentions of becoming a member of the film colony it is being freely predicted that he will soon achieve the same amount of popularity on the screen that he has enjoyed during his long and successful career before the footlights on Broadway in New York.

Peggy Fools Them

Peggy Cartwright, popular screen juvenile, plays the part of a boy in the new Universal production of "A Lady of Quality," starring Virginia Valli and so perfect is her makeup that even her most intimate friends failed to recognize her the first day she appeared on the set. The youngster has been in pictures four years and has played in support of practically every star of the silversheet. She is an expert horsegirl and has won two cups at Ambassador Horse Shows and one at the Ventura Horse Show.

NEILAN ENDS NEW FILM AND GOES TO GOTHAM

With the completion of the camera work on "The Rendezvous," Marshall Neilan, who has been directing the Russian drama at the Goldwyn studio, left for New York.

Mrs. Neilan (Blanche Sweet) plans to join her husband for a short vacation as soon as she completes the role of Dolores in the Emmett Flynn production, "In The Palace of The King," now being made at the Goldwyn studio.

Although actual camera work is completed on "The Rendezvous," Neilan will be busy for several weeks on the details of the film. He will spend part of his time on the journey East in the preparation of "the cutting community" of the film, so that D. J. Gray, his film editor at Goldwyn's, may begin at once upon this stage of the production. As soon as the film has been cut and assembled, Gray will take it to New York for Neilan's inspection there.

Leeds Baxter, general manager of Neilan's productions, accompanied the director to the metropolis.

REALTY FIRM ENGAGES PICTURE PRESS AGENT

It begins to look as if other lines of business will make inroads on the army of press agents in the employ of various motion picture companies. Ted Le Berthon, formerly press representative for the King Vidor Studios, has been engaged to do the publicity work and to conduct a special advertising campaign for Rainbow Valley, a new subdivision the lots of which are now being offered the public. This tract is called "the throne of the big Tujunga" and is located near Glendale. A. W. Stratling and Company is handling the sales, with headquarters at 100 East Colorado Street, Glendale.

One of the interesting features of this real estate promotion is the plan to give away a bungalow. There is still time to register for this free bungalow, which will be formally presented to some lucky person at Rainbow Valley soon. Registrations are taken at the Rainbow Valley office which is situated at Brand Boulevard and Colorado Street.

Phillippe Wins Prize

Philippe deLacy, five-year-old film starlet and French war orphan, who has won the unstinted praise of photoplay critics for his brilliant performance in "Divorce," now enjoying an extended run at Grauman's Rialto, has attracted no little amount of attention from members and officials of the Y. M. C. A., Los Angeles, for his ability as a swimmer. At a recent aquatic contest staged at the "Y" Philippe won high honors with his exhibition and as a result was presented with a Y. M. C. A. Prize Swimming Award Medal.

CUMMINGS DEFENDS HIS HOLLYWOOD FROM PULPITS

William A. Brady isn't the only producer who can preach. Irving Cummings is treading in the church steps of his one-time "boss" by telling New York congregations what Hollywood really is. Since he has been in Gotham arranging for the distribution of his "Broken Hearts of Broadway," adapted to the screen from the stage play by James Myrle McCurdy, Cummings has been occupying Sundays by talking from the pulpits of New York churches twice on each Sabbath.

He has been explaining to the religiously inclined just what Hollywood is like and what are the true conditions in its studios, his purpose being to combat the propaganda which paints the cinema capital in words with scarlet letters.

Brady, who also has occupied pulpits for the purpose of defending the stage against unkind criticism, starred Cummings in "The Whip," and now the former leading man has risen as the champion of the screen to combat some of the unwarranted attacks that are made upon Hollywood from Eastern pulpits.

BABY STAR LIVES IN OLD HOME OF MANY STARS

If living in a house formerly occupied by several motion picture celebrities could be of any help to one's efforts in achieving success before the camera, then Baby MacCormac would now perhaps be the most popular star in the film world, for the house in which she resides on Lemonyne Street, Los Angeles, has been occupied by such well-known artists as Kathryn Williams, Louise Fazenda, the late Wallace Reid and others.

Judging from the important parts Baby Muriel has been playing in pictures—and she has played in no less than forty successes—it is generally conceded that some producer one of these days is going to place the youngster under contract for a series of pictures, and capitalize on her versatility and her ability to interpret difficult child parts.

In the list of photoplays in which Baby Muriel has appeared are "Poor Men's Wives," "Miracles of the Jungles," The Call of Home," "Penrod," "Borderland," "Pawn Ticket 210," and "A Daughter of Luxury." She recently completed work in Dustin Farnum's latest picture for Fox, "The Man Who Won."

To Adapt Glyn Novel

Grant Carpenter, the scenarist, has been selected by Warner Brothers to do the script of "How to Educate a Wife," the widely read Elinor Glyn novel, recently purchased for screen adaptation, and which will go into production within the next few weeks. The story deals with caveman tactics of a husband bent on getting happy results out of domesticity.

MARY ALDEN GETS CAKE BEARING 70 CANDLES

Mary Alden, who is portraying one of the leading roles in Metro's all-star picturization of "The Eagle's Feather," recently had a birthday.

She also had a birthday cake.

The cake came as a complete surprise and was tendered to the noted character actress by Edward Sloman, the director, immediately after the completion of a highly emotional scene, the cake was rushed onto the set and and for a few moments the serious business of making motion pictures was entirely forgotten.

Just how many birthdays had preceded this one, no one seemed to know, so the cake bravely bore 70 lighted candles.

"No one ever admits that the number of candles on a birthday cake is correct," Mr. Sloman stated in explanation, "so I gave Miss Alden the opportunity of making a truthful denial."

Motion pictures were made of Miss Alden cuting the cake, and she insisted that every member of the technical staff be served first. However, the chocolate pastry was of such generous proportions that James Kirkwood, Elinor Fair, Lester Cuneo, George Siegmann and the rest of the cast came in for their share.

TITLE OF MARY'S NEW FILM CHANGED AGAIN

The name of Mary Pickford's new picture will not be "The Street Singer," but will be "Rosita," originally the working title. This change was made necessary by the fact that the title of "The Street Singer" has been previously used. Many years ago Hal Reid, father of the late Wallie Reid, wrote a play called "The Street Singer," and in the early days of films a picture by the same title was put out by Kalem, all of which makes it impossible for Mary to use this name.

This information was obtained by Dennis F. O'Brien, attorney for the star, after he had won the title contest within the Pickford organization by his suggestion of "The Street Singer."

It was decided to go back to the working title not only because it seemed suitable, but because the film has already been given wide-spread publicity as "Rosita." It will be released through United Artists as a Fall attraction.

Sam E. Allen looks like a permanent fixture on the Mayer-Schulberg lot. After finishing a part with Tom Forman in "Are You a Failure?" he went with Gasiner in "Mother In Law." Now he is cast as Uncle Hughey in "The Virginian," a Tom Forman production.

IE MILLE'S BIBLE SCENES NEARLY FINISHED

The great Biblical revel of the Children of Israel around the Calf of Gold, previous to their denunciation by Moses, is the sequence which has been the principal feature of Cecil B. DeMille's production of "The Ten Commandments" during the past week.

Several hundred Israelites and two hundred dancing girls, trained by Theodore Kosloff, have been appearing in the huge rocky canyon supposed to be in the vicinity of Mt. Sinai, where the Ten Commandments were delivered to Moses. This canyon was designed by Francis McComas, the world's greatest water color painter. Mr McComas is an authority on rocky landscapes and for this reason, in addition to his artistic triumphs, was chosen to design this unusual set, whose rocky sides are 60 feet high. The set is 300 feet long and 160 feet wide.

The principal players in this colorful sequence are Theodore Roberts as "Moses," Estelle Taylor as "Miriam," James Neill as "Aaron," Lawson Butt as "Dathan," and Gino Corrado as "Joshua."

Mr. DeMille is nearing the completion of the Biblical prologue to the main story, evolved by Jeannie MacPherson around the Ten Commandments. Shortly work will begin upon the modern sequence of this Paramount picture, in which are to appear Beatrice Joy, Richard Dix, Nita Naldi, Rod La Rocque and Blythe Chapman. Cullen Tate is assistant-director of the production, while Paul Tribe is Art Director.

JEAN RILEY PRODUCTIONS TO MAKE SIX FEATURES

Announcement was made this week of the forming of the Jean Riley Productions, of which Jean Riley, film actress, is star and head. According to E. G. Walker, production manager, the company plans to produce six pictures of feature length the first year, each of which is to be presented with an all-star cast. Work on the initial subject, the title and details of which have not yet been announced, is scheduled to start within the next three weeks. Robert Gordon and Jean Riley will head the all-star cast for the first picture, and Camille Deslys, sister of Gaby Deslys, will appear in the picture as a dancer. Rod Rynerson is business manager. Temporary quarters of the company are at 6701 Santa Monica Boulevard.

"YESTERDAY'S WIFE" STARTED WITH ALL-STAR CAST

A distinguished cast has been completed for "Yesterday's Wife," the first of the series of special Columbia Pictures which the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation will release as part of its Fall program.

It is announced this week that Lewis Dayton and Philo McCullough have been secured for the leading male roles to play opposite Irene Rich and Eileen Percy.

Joe Brandt, President of C. B. C., who has been at the Company's Coast production centre conferring with the production staff there on the extensive program his organization has mapped out, is especially enthusiastic over the signing of these two players.

Lewis Dayton is one of the most popular leading men on the screen and is known for the fine dignity of his portrayals. His most recent laurels were won in Dorothy Phillips' newest production, as the male lead in "Slander the Woman." He also won distinction for his playing opposite Clara Kimball Young in "Cordelia the Magnificent," and appears as her leading man in "In Old Madrid." He is in the first Famous Players picture to be filmed in Europe, "The Great Day."

Philo McCullough has won notice throughout his career for artistry of his portrayal. In addition to his prominent role in C. B. C.'s "More to be Pitied," he has won notice in Universal's "Trimmed in Scarlet" and "The First Degree;" in F. B. O.'s "The Fourth Musketeer;" Warner's "Heroes of the Street;" Goldwyn's "The Stranger's Banquet," and many other productions.

Actual production is under way, with Edward J. LeSaint directing . Mr. LeSaint did fine work in directing the C. B. C. feature "More to be Pitied," "Only a Shop Girl," and "Temptation," which went over so big this year. With production going so smoothly and fairly definite plans outlined for casts and details on the rest of the C. B. C. program, Joe Brandt is on his way back. He has wired ahead the satisfactory completion of details for which he went to the Coast.

Evelyn Campbell, author of the novel "Yesterday's Wife," from which the picturization is being made, is collaborating with Mr. LeSaint on the continuity and other details of filming for her novel. There is a wealth of screen material in the story, with fine opportunity for contracts of big sets, society atmosphere, and dramatic action.

EDDIE STURGIS GETS BIG ROLE IN "PONJOLA"

Edwin Sturgis, popular screen character man, who was a member of the original Famous Players company, and since then has played in features produced by several of the big companies, has been engaged by Sam E. Rork for a prominent part in "Ponjola," a First National picture, soon to go into production with Donald Crisp directing.

He will enact the role of "Sherry," a good-natured adventurer, a hardened yet lovable character of the Rhodesian gold fields.

Sturgis' career as a film character man covers many years. With Famous Players he supported most of that company's famous stars including Jack Barrymore, Marguerite Clark, Hazel Dawn, Elsie Ferguson, Pauline Frederick and Owen Moore. For four years he was with Fox and later with Goldwyn, supported Geraldine Farrar, Mary Garden, Mae Marsh and others. For two years he was manager of the Owen Moore productions.

The cast of "Ponjola," which is now completed, comprises oue of the greatest array of screen talent ever assembled for one picture, including James Kirkwood, Anna Q. Nilsson, Tully Marshall and Joseph Kilgour.

Zena Keefe has just completed the big special production, "Hand of Destiny," which will shortly be released .

"TIGER ROSE" TO BE FILMED HERE SOON

Millard H. Webb, production manager for Sidney Franklin, is busily engaged with preparations for "Tiger Rose," which is soon to go into production at the Warner Brothers West Coast studios. "Tiger Rose" will be known as a Sidney Franklin production and will be made under his personal supervision. David Belasco, who is coming west to fulfill his contract with the Warner Brothers, will cooperate in the production of this David Belasco play.

Lenore Ulric, who achieved such wonderful success in the stage play, will have the leading role in the picture version. A remarkable cast is being assembled for her support to include Claude Gillingwater, Joseph Dowling, Anders Randolf and Andre de Beranger.

"Tiger Rose" will be released as one of the Warner Brothers screen classics of 1923-24.

To Hold Special Meeting

The Reliable Photoplayers Association will hold a special meeting Tuesday evening, July 3rd, in the Assistant Directors' hall at 5444 Hollywood Boulevard. Following the transaction of important business an entertainment and dance will be given. The Hollywood Players, a similar association, furnishing talent to the different studios, have been invited as guests and will partake in the entertainment.

GREASE-PAINTLESS PICTURE HAS ARRIVED

Greasepaint goes by the board in "Penrod and Sam," which is to have its western premier on Sunday, July 1. This is a picture sans make-up, for William Beaudine, who directed it for J. E. McDonald First National, believes that the fresh young faces of childhood are marred by paints and powders.

"Greasepaint," says Beaudine, "immediately puts kids into a precocious, self-conscious frame of mind." And he ought to know, for he has three youngsters of his own who some day may become screen luminaries.

The popular director, who has made a fresh find for a film future in the attractive young personality of Mary Halter, a 12-year-old Sawtelle girl who played in "Penrod and Sam" and now is appearing with Wesley Barry in "The Printer's Devil" for Warner Brothers, also directed by Beaudine, believes that facial decoration has been carried too far in pictures, especially where juveniles are concerned. The lack of make-up certainly is gracefully missed in "Penrod and Sam" and this seems to bear out his theory that smooth young complexions are nature's best preparation for the camera.

"Artificiality is unerringly picked out by the camera's lens and sometimes mars a picture," says Beaudine, who assisted Marshall Neilan in the making of "Penrod," the earlier Booth Tarkington story adapted to the screen. "When nature does its work well, you can't improve on it," he continued. "The fresh, fair faces of youth need no adornment of paints and powders. And that's why make-up was banished in the filming of 'Penrod and Sam.' It was, of course, required for the older actors and actresses, but there is none of it on the children."

The absence of staginess in the juvenile players is attributed by Beaudine to this elimination of greasepaint, which is expected to be permanently abolished for youngsters in future pictures.

Hughes Prepares New One

Following the success of "Souls For Sale," Rupert Hughes is now busy with preparations for his next Goldwyn production. "Law Against Law," is the tentative title of the new Hughes story, written by the noted author and to be directed by him. The story deals with the divorce question. Many of the author's novels and short stories have been dealt with this increasingly important phase of life, and his rank as an authority on the subject lends a peculiar interest to his first photoplay on the subject.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Rene Plaisetty, well known director who is credited with discovering Leatrice Joy and others of fame, has been signed to supervise the new "Alex the Great" series of two-reel comedies which will soon go into production at the Powers studios.

Henry Lehrman has succeeded Mal St. Clair as the director of the second series of H. C. Witwer's "Fighting Blood" stories. He began work this week on the second of the series called "She Supes To Conquer."

Albert Cooke, chief comic of the "Fighting Blood" company filming the popular H. C. Witwer stories at the Power studios fell heavily the other day while fleeing from man-eating lions in an ancient Roman sequence and sustained a severe cut on the elbow and a sprained knee. After being patched up by the studio physician, however, he was able to continue his work of registering laughs.

Harold Goodwin has been signed by Robertson-Cole to appear in forthcoming F. B. O. productions.

Grace Darmond is playing the leading feminine role in "Alimony," an F. B. O. production under the direction of James W. Horne.

Emory Johnson has begun work on his next F. B. O. attraction "The Mailman." Ralph Lewis is to play the leading role in the production with an all-star cast in support.

James Kirkwood was forced to learn all the intricacies of "riding the brake beams" for his portrayal of a down-and-outer in "The Eagle's Feather," a Metro all-star special, and now maintains that he can appreciate the oft-questioned comfort of pullmans.

No sooner did House Peters finish his role in "Don't Marry for Money" than he speeded over to the Metro studio to portray the leading male role in "Held to Answer," an all-star picturization of Peter Clark MacFarlane's story, which Harold Shaw is directing.

Bela Lugosi has just completed his contract with Fox having played the heavy lead in "The Silent Command" which was directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

Fredric Santley who recently closed with "Up She Goes" is working on the finishing scenes of a special feature, being made in Long Island.

Ben Lyon who is playing one of the leading male roles in Sam Goldwyn's screen version of "Potash and Perlmutter" has returned from Atlantic City where they have been filming some of the exteriors.

Alma Rubens has just completed "Under the Red Robe" for Cosmopolitan in which she will be starred. Miss Ruben has not as yet announced what her future plans will be.

Malcolm McGregor, Metro's young athlete star who is appearing opposite Viola Dana in "The Social Code," has had so many fighting parts in the few years he has been in motion pictures that he marvels at the fact that his knuckles are still unbroken and his nose in the place it was originally intended to be.

The combined weight of James Marcus and George Siegman, both members of the cast of Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche," is 520 pounds. Going up.

Many times has Otto Lederer, creator of the immortal Solomon Levy in "Abie's Irish Rose" been mentioned as a successor to David Warfield, and it is interesting to note in this regard that his greatest ambition is to bring "The Music Master" to the screen.

Otto Matiesen has a film offer under consideration that has aroused the curiosity of all his friends. He will not state just what it is, but has promised a great surprise for the near future. This is somewhat strange behavior on the part of Matiesen and leads us to believe he is due to be starred or something like that. It would be a great thing if they made a picture built around all the characters Matiesen has played on the stage and screen. It would seem like the history of the world in review.

Ralph Cloninger, who recently finished a part in "The Ten Commandments" and is now at work completing the details for the filming of his own productions is contemplating a trip to his former home, Salt Lake City, where he will confer with a number of financiers and business men who are backing his venture. From there he may go to Seattle, San Francisco and other northern points for another series of conferences of similar nature before returning here to begin work. He plans to film all of the exteriors of his productions in Utah, for he believes that there are locations up there that will bring new scenic effects to the screen. Zion Valley has been mentioned as one place.

Elizabeth Rhoades, a charter member of the Reliable Photoplayers Association, has completed her contract with Principal Pictures Corporation and is now considering two very fine offers for work in forthcoming pictures. She has one of the principal roles in "A Man's Man," which was directed by Eddie Cline.

Brandon Tynan has just completed playing the leading role in "Loyal Lives," for Whitman Bennett which will shortly be released, and will open at the Capitol Theatre in New York the week of July 8th.

Mary Alden is now in a position of lofty independence in regard to producers and directors. While on location in Northern California during the filming of "The Eagle's Feather" for Metro, Miss Alden received individual and collective lessons from two score of cowpunchers in the art of flipping flapjacks over a campfire. "Anyone who knows anything at all understands that a good flapjack flipper is always in demand for work in restaurant windows," she said.

"Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's newest Metro production, has a cosmopolitan cast. Ramon Novarro was born in Mexico, John George, Arabia; Harry J. Uyttenhove, Belgium; Lydia Yeamans Titus was born in mid-ocean; Alice Terry, Lewis Stone, Edith Allen and the others are native Americans. Mr. Ingram was born in Dublin.

Mickey McBan, filmland's young swimming champion, who has been training for the series of aquatic exhibitions to be held in Los Angeles in the immediate future, has mastered the intricacies of under-water swimming, and can now go from 50 to 75 feet under the surface. His goal is 125 feet, and he ought to be able to negotiate this after two more weeks' practice. At the present time he is with the Henry Otto unit at the Fox studios which are filming "The Temple of Venus." He plays one of the big parts in this production.

One of the principal roles in "Only a Shop Girl," which will be shown in this city within the next two weeks, is enacted by Josephine Adair, six-year-old film actress. This part affords her an unusual opportunity to display her keen artistry, and it is an odd blending of pathos and humor that she brings to the screen in this picture. Josephine has attained her greatest renown as an interpreter of street urchins. She recently completed one of the six featured roles in Frank Borzage's "Children of Dust" at the United Studios.

"Her Royal Highness." How would that sound on a motion picture lot? If the titles of some of our local film folk who have come from aristocratic families of Europe were used in Hollywood some directors, with a number of these celebrities in the cast, would spend all their time addressing them. Take for instance, Thais Valdemar who recently finished a very interesting part in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" at the Lasky studios. She is a 14-karat Russian princess, and during the reign of the late Czar Nicholas and his father her family was exceedingly powerful in the royal court. The revolution reversed the order of things in Russia and she was forced to flee for her life. Her mother father and husband were slain and she only escaped to this country after numerous hardships and hairbreadth adventures. Now she is one of our most promising screen players and she has doffed her lengthy royal title for her present cute name. Her other pictures include "The Brass Bottle" and "Trilby."

Sara Mullen has just returned from location having played the leading feminine role in J. Hayes Hunter's special, "Wild Love." Miss Mullen will shortly start work on a new production which will keep her busy for the balance of the summer.

Mary McLaren has started work on Murray Garson's next special production in which she is playing the leading feminine role.

Robert North Bradbury is directing a new western picture at Universal City, "The Trail of the Wolf," with Edmund Cobb and Gladys McConnell in the leading roles. Miss McConnell is the comedy leading woman recently "discovered" and this is her first appearance in a western role.

Norman Kerry leaped from Mediaeval Paris to a modern court room at Universal City. Forsaking the brilliant trapping of "Phoebus" in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," he became "Robert Armstrong" in the big all-star cast of "The Acquittal," in which he, Claire Windsor, Richard Travers, Barbara Bedford and a big cast appear.

VELYN BRENT IS ENGAGED BY METRO

Evelyn Brent, now appearing h Monte Blue in "Harbor r" at the Ince studio, has en engaged by Metro to play posite House Peters in the turization of Peter Clark Mc- rlane's novel, "Held to swer," directed by Harold aw.

n order to allow Miss Brent appear in the Metro film, As- iated Authors are rushing the st important scenes for "Har- r Bar" in which Miss Brent rticipates. After working ht and day for the past week, iss Brent is now enabled to rt immediately on the Metro n and conclude her work at e Ince studio when not actu- y appearing before the mera in "Held to Answer."

Miss Brent has the distinction being the first girl who ever fused to act opposite Doug irbanks for the screen. Al- ough signed to a two years' ntract to play leading femi- ne roles opposite Doug, Miss ent recently obtained her re- se from the contract in order allow her to appear in a mber of other productions.

Miss Brent in private life, is e wife of B. P. Fineman, pro- cer, who left for New York is week to arrange for the dis- bution of his forthcoming ries of pictures, the first of hich is completed.

Although a newcomer to west- n producing circles, Miss ent has appeared on the reen since she was fourteen. uring the past few years she s played on the speaking age and in some fifteen film oductions in England.

Shortly after she arrived in ollywood she was selected as e of the thirteen "stars of to- orrow" by the Wampas, the ovie publicity men's associa- on here.

ore Fighting Films

"Fighting Back," the return of The Leather Pushers," the new ize ring series of stories by . C. Witwer, running in Col- er's Weekly, are being made by niversal as the third series of ather pushers. The original st, including Reginald Denny, ayden Stevenson and Elinor ield, that made such a hit in e first two series, also have e leading parts in the newest ix rounds. Harry Pollard is gain directing.

ooper Joins McCarthy

Ashley Cooper, well-known creen character actor, has been hosen by John P. McCarthy to nact the part of Spider McCall n his forthcoming production, The Days of Yesterday." Coop- r's histrionic career covers the egitimate stage and vaudeville s well as the films.

WHEN IT'S FOREIGN, IT'S NOT TO EWENS

James Ewens, assistant to Donald Crisp, who is directing the filming of "Ponjola," which Sam E. Rork will present through First National, seems destined by fate to work with all the distinguished foreign directors in the picture game.

In 1915, at the Ft. Lee, N. J. studio of the old World Film Corporation, he became the first art director of the film industry in the company of Albert Capellani.

Then followed three and a half years as assistant director to every foreign director who was wielding a megaphone in America.

And then they took him over to Europe and on the French setting of Chateau Thierry he went "over the top" and collided with a German bullet travelling in the opposite direction.

That sent him back to America. After his recovery he reentered pictures as an assistant director and though his lot fell with American directors the locale of the pictures was decidedly foreign.

As assistant to Allan Dwan he helped make "Robin Hood," starring Douglas aFirbanks; then came "Omar the Tentmaker," a Richard Walton Tully production for First National, starring Guy Bates Post. And on the heels of that production came his work as assistant to James Young in the directing of Tully's screen version of Du Maurier's "Trilby."

And now if he isn't assistant to Donald Crisp, and the bloomin' story is Cynthia Stockley's tale of South African life.

Nothing foreign is foreign to Jimmie.

JACK WILL START A NEW FILM SOON

The genius of Mary and Jack Pickford combined with that of Marion Jackson's, will be embodied in Jack's next production, which is scheduled to be begun within the next ten days, it was announced this week.

Mary and Jack have collaborated with Marion Jackson, the writer, in producing an original tale of the Kentuckian mountains, to serve as a successor to "Garrison's Finish." The story is of a mountain boy, a typical American youth of the hills, with the settings of a decade or so ago.

Mary and Jack have tinted the scenes of the story, which has not been titled, with the wistful feelings and longings of a young mountaineer. Jack will forget his stiff collar, the tuxedo, and the keen part in his hair in this mountain boy picture. He will be bare-footed again—happy in worn-out rags. He will appear in that role of the American youth, which has endeared him to the hearts of theatre-followers the world over.

George Hill, who recently finished directing "The Daughter of Mother McGinn," a Boston Blackie story by Jack Boyle, has been signed by Jack Pickford to direct his mountain boy production.

"Merry-Go-Round" shipped

With prints of "Merry-Go-Round" shipped to New York ready for distribution early in the fall, Universal is centering its activities on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "A Lady of Quality," two other super-Jewels now under production.

KICKLESS TEA IS NOW POPULAR AT UNITED

They cawn't keep the English out! Upon my word they cawn't! Not even out of a Chinese picture, which was adapted by a writer who was born in Egypt of Greed and Bulgarian parents; directed by a Frenchman and in which Owen Moore, a native of the ould sod, has the leading role.

Which all leads up to the saying that the 'alf awfter four tea habit has been instituted on the United Studio stage where "Thundergate" is being filmed for First National.

Conrad Tritschler, the English scenic artist who designed many of the settings of this elaborate picture of Chinese and American life, is responsible for the introduction of the English institution.

Conrad cawn't get along without his tea, you know, any more than an elephant can get along without his trunk. Every afternoon at exactly half past four he lays his brushes and pallete down long enough to brew himself a pot of Ceylon.

A week ago he invited Director Joe De Grasse to join him in "a cup that cheers." Joe found that the tea acted as a real "pep provoker." If the beverage will put pep into a director, reasoned De Gresse, then it will pep up the cast.

Hence the brief recess every afternoon on the "Thundergate" set while members of the cast and technical forces imbibe tea.

Betty Blythe writes from Berlin that due to climatic conditions existing in Algeria which have been causing severe earthquakes the company has returned to Germany to film exteriors there.

"PROPS" LIGHTNING BRINGS QUICK "RESCUE"

California authorities, and especially those in the vicinity of Hollywood, are quite ready to expect the unexpected from the film folk. It is not unusual for the police or fire departments to answer an alarm sent in by some unitiated layman, but it was the lot of Associated Authors to experience a new joke on the San Pedro Cal., harbor fire boats.

The Associated Authors' "Loving Lies" company were aboard the steam schooner "G. C. Lindauer" several miles out at sea filming some of the thrilling storm stuff called for by the script. Among the many devices and tricks of the film world carried aboard ship as "props" was a huge lightning machine which made a flash that could be seen for miles.

The fire boat seeing these flashes mistook them for signals of distress and steamed full speed ahead to the "Lindauer's" aid. After profuse explanations by Director W. S. Van Dyke and no little chagrin on the part of the sea-going fire-fighters, they stood by and watched several scenes photographed.

"Loving Lies" is Thompson Buchanan's screen version of Peter B. Kyne's sea story, "The Harbor Bar," and will be released by Associated Authors through Allied Producers and Distributors, a subsidiary of United Artists Corporation. The leading roles are portrayed by Monte Blue, Evelyn Brent, Charles Gerrard and Ralph Faulkner.

MUSICAL COMEDY ARTIST GETS BIG SURPRISE AT U

Velma Connor, one of the Connor Sisters of "The Pepper Box Revue," which recently played Los Angeles, visited Universal City with a theatrical manager and gained the surprise of her young life.

The surprise was when she was unexpectedly approached with an offer of screen work. Not having any definite hopes of that on her mind made the quality of the offer more interesting—for she was assigned to play opposite Reginald Denny in the sixth round of the third series of "The Leather Pushers," the two-reelers of the prize ring.

A lead at the first jump—and that wasn't all that was interesting at the start, for her first day's work was a hard journey out on location. The unit under Harry A. Pollard's direction went to Fleming ,near Lake Arrowhead, for exterior scenes in the beautiful scenic spots there.

RIVER OF TEARS DEMANDED

Oh, yes, Mary Alden can cry!

She proved it quite thoroughly during the filming of an important scene for "The Eagle's Feather," a Mero all-star production which Edward Sloman is directing.

But to stand before the cold eye of the camera and emote realistically, while a dozen blase studio employees stare unsympathetically is no easy matter.

Hereafter, Miss Alden threatens to use glycerine or onions.

On this occasion, after she had worked herself up to the emotional pitch necessary to bring ears to her eyes, the film in the camera buckled.

On the second attempt, just when the tears were flowing most copiously, the lights flickered so badly that director Sloman demand another re-take.

On the third trial, the camera ran out of film right in the midst of the weeping.

"All right, I'm game!" the actress responded. "But I'm supposed to be an actress—not a geyser!"

Bowditch "Smoke" Turner, who is Le Chapelier in "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's production for Metro, bears the nickname of "Smoke" because of his work as a blackface comedian on the stage.

WHAT DID BABY SAY?

What did Buster Keaton's baby say?

On the second anniversary of the marriage of the comedian and Natalie Talmadge, all present agreed that the baby said something. But what?

It was the first word the baby ever said, you see.

The Talmadge-Schenck-Keaton clan had gathered in force for appropriate ceremonies for the wedding anniversary which, incidentally, was celebrated on Baby Buster's first birthday anniversary. Baby Buster, on June 2nd, was just one year old.

During his birthday party the baby said something. Natalie self-sacrificingly decided the word was "papa."

Buster heroically said it was "mama." Constance Talmadge said she heard it "mapa.' Norma Talmadge said she thought it was "pama." Joseph Schenck said it sounded like "camera." But Mrs. Talamagde, booed by all present, said it was only "goo."

Although Edna Flugrath and Viola Dana were a well known juvenile dancing team on the stage in New York, these famous sisters appear together on the screen for the first time in "The Girl Who Dared," Viola's new Metro picture.

RIVAL LAWYERS

John Sainpolis and William Humphre have been selected to enact the importan roles of the rival attorneys in "The Socia Code," Rita Weiman's mystery story, whic Oscar Apfel is directing for Metro with Viol Dana as the star.

Mr. Sainpolis, who has just completed on of the leading roles in "Three Wise Fools, holds a niche of his own on the screen, an plays villainous and sympathetic roles wi equal skill. He will be especially recalle for his portrayal of Laurier, the husband i Rex Ingram's production of "The Fou Horsemen," and for his widely divergen characterizations in "Shadows' 'and "Th Hero." In "The Social Code" he will defen Malcolm McGregor, accused of murder, an according to conservative predictions, h will win his case after a difficult struggle.

Mr. Humphrey has been portraying on of the chief characters in "Scarmouche, Rex Ingram's monster production. He wa looked upon by Director Apfel as particu larly fitted for the part of the district atto ney and time has been found to enable hin to appear in both productions. Mr. Humph rey has been idle but a few days since h returned from England several months ago

Speaking of New Faces

The attitudes of some of the producers are still open to severe criticism. There are still some men in the producing business who ought to be out of it. It is undeniable that commercialism transcends everything else in too many quarters. Petty jealousies of petty strife continue to make inroads upon efficiency. Incompetence in high places has not disappeared. But, the day of marked amelioration is here. The advent of many masters of other fields of endeavor is having a noticeable effect already. We know of one man now working assiduously in a dingy office in one of the smaller studios at a very nominal wage who we expect to see in the limelight as one of the true geniuses of the film-making business within a short time. He knows very little about the business now as it is being done and has been done for years, but he knows some things far more valuable and promising than this. He knows how to create and he is vibrant with new ideas. He is highly educated in the fine arts generally and is a cultured man with sane ambitions. Above all, he displays the urge to perform a great service for a great art: the cinema, and, we would wager most anything that he will accomplish his purpose. Yet, if we mentioned his name, no one would even know him and if he explained his present position, most everybody would sneer at him as even a possibility. Just the same, watch for a veritable small army of true geniuses who are about to emerge from the Land of Oblivion. It will all come in response to a Call of the Cinema for new brains, new blood,—a call which is obviously the result of it becoming universally patent that many of the present "head-liners" need replacing.

Expansion is the rule and not the exception in Filmland at present and there is every indication that this present will continue for at least two prosperous years after which it may be even better.

Pathe. The court ruled that the company had no right to discharge the actor under his contract, before the picture was finished even if his scenes had all been taken. This decision is of importance in that it affects the employment of all film actors. The ruling of the court is that it was not the fault of the plaintiff that he was called on to act scenes of their proper sequences in the story. It seems the closing scenes were shot first as frequently happens. When the last scenes were taken Oland was discharged. It took six weeks longer to complete the rest of the picture. Oland sued for six weeks salary.

Earl Carroll, independent producer, is making an attempt to produce on Broadway, a non-Equity show. Louis Mann tried this two years ago without success. It is generally believed that the Carrol move was instigated by those producing managers who are hostile to Equity, who are using the "boy producer" as a cat's paw to discover just what attitude the stage hands and musicians' unions will take on the question. "Vanities of 1923" has been in rehearsal two weeks.

New York City Streets are the scenes of much controversy these days. It's like this. Everything in and around New York has turned pro-Nile or pro-King Tutankhamen, so of course Egyptian words are being juggled from the pulpit, stage and side walks. This of course causes every thinking person to delve into the depths of Egytology reading everything that Encylcopedia Britannica can decipher. Now along comes a lot of thinkers who argue that they are an incarnation of the old king himself. I did however, meet one old actor who compromised, sorta met me half way so to speak, and admitted that he was, after all, only Pharaoh IX. But I promised not to tell anyone.

Rudolph Valentino, in his country-wide tour, never loses an opportunity to say a good word for The Actors' Equity Association. In Atlantic City he said; "This is indeed a strenuous life, doing eighteen weeks of one-night stands, and dancing every night. When I am through with this trip I shall go to Europe for a rest, then come back and fight the picture corporation. There is one organization that I believe in whole heartedly. The A. E. A. is for the down trodden actor."

"Some men are held up as examples. Others for what they've got in their hip pocket." Garry Odell, who has just finished the part of Spike Louis in the Richard Thomas production of "Scarlet Shadows," was heard to make this remark.

Bennie Zeidman is cutting his Principal Pictures release, "Bright Lights of Broadway," featuring Lowell Sherman

Theby and Alan Hale, the "heavies" in Jackie's cast. For the scenes dominated by Robert Brower, as the dying king, grandfather to the Crown Prince—played by Jackie—Schertzinger has written a new Father Song, which will doubtless achieve as great popularity as his "Just An Old Love Song" heard with the presentation of the "Robin Hood" film.

And so on, through the long list of different scenes, Director Schertzinger has contributed these original melodies appropriate for the action and the players throughout the story, which has resulted in far greater feeling in their work. When "Long Live the King" is played in the first-run houses of America, Schertzinger's music will be the accompanying orchestration.

SCREEN KIDDIES ARE SMART.

The great majority of children acting in motion pictures are intellectually above normal.

Notwithstanding the fact that children of the acting profession have the reputation, in other spheres of life, of being impudent and spoilt, it is quite the contrary, says Bertha Wiley Wynne, a teacher assigned by the Los Angeles Board of Education to tutor youngsters working on picture sets.

"I taught in the public schools for many years," says this teacher, "and my work during the last year with the children at the studios has given me a chance to compare the children in public schools and those in the studios."

Miss Wynne, who is tutoring Bruce Guerin, Turner Savage and "Red" Ruben between "shots" of Frank Borzage's latest First National release, temporarily titled "Dust in the Doorway," believes that acting in pictures sharpens the intellect and teaches the children such intensive and instantaneous concentration that they are able to absorb knowledge with remarkable rapidity.

The educational statutes require that the picture children be given three hours instruction daily if there are three or less youngsters of school age on the set. If there are more than three the lew requires four hours of instruction. In both cases the studies must be identical with the texts which the children would have if they were actually attending public school.

Each teacher must have the sanction of board of education and the hours of instruction must be terminated by four o'clock in the afternoon. The teacher receives her pay from the picture company.

Little Frankie Lee, one of the best known children in pictures, and Mary Jane Irving, almost equally as well known, are members of the cast of "Dust in the Doorway." These have their private tutors, who also comply with the state, county and city laws.

Frankie not only has a private teacher but a private school as well. Producer Arthur H. Jacobs permitted Frankie to place a clause in his contract calling for the erection of a private school room adjacent to the picture set. Here he spends every spare moment between scenes in which he is required to appear.

"I believe," says Miss Wynne, "that the discipline maintained on the set has much to do with the brightness of these children. They are accustomed to obeying instantly and their constant association with older people helps to advance their minds.

"It is amazing how quickly a child can leave a scene and delve immediately into his studies without being bothered by the noise of the set, or the orchestra which is usually playing while a scene is enacted.

"It is true that once in a great while a motion picture child is below normal, or is impudent, but that is very much out of the ordinary. The average child in the studios is quick to learn and has almost faultless manners."

and has had his O. K., so will leave to motor South within a few days. Fanny Midgley has gone to her home in Glendale for a few days visit, but will return as she has a couple weeks more work in the picture. The present cast now working includes Hughie Mack, Dale Fuller, Eric Von Ritzau, and four or five local actors who play small parts, besides the leads Zasu Pitts, Gibson Gowland, and Jean Hersholt.

Joseph Jackson, director of publicity at the Goldwyn Studios, and Jack Jungmeyer of the N. E. A. Service, of Los Angeles, came to San Francisco on Friday to spend a few days getting a personal look at the making of "Greed," by Eric Von Stroheim, and the company under his direction.

George Archainbaud was here last week hunting a New England village to be the scene of part of Pricilla Dean's next picture. He found what he wanted down in the neighborhood of Half-Moon Bay, and will return in the near future with a company from Universal to film part of the story here. Cecil De Mille is also coming to San Francisco in a week to do a modern sequence in "The Ten Commandments," and Fred Niblo is coming here with a company from Louis B. Mayer Production, so it really looks these days in the lobby of the Plaza Hotel, which is movie headquarters, like a part of Hollywood.

Mrs. Wallace Reid addressed a gathering of Government medical officials, and patients at Letterman Hospital last Thursday, and by special arrangement the film of "Human Wreckage," still playing at the Century Theatre, was also shown at the hospital, as a great lesson on the effects of dope.

Jack Hoxie and his cowboys have galloped through the Universal western star's feature at Universal City.

Production has closed on "Where Is This West?" a rapid action satirical drama of the "old west." The play was adopted from an original story by George C. Hull of the Universal scenario department and directed by George H. Marshall.

Mary Philbin, the little Chicago beauty who was cast for the role of the little hand-organ girl in "Merry Go Round," directed by Rupert Julian, and in which she is said to have displayed unusual emotional ability, plays the feminine lead opposite Hoxie.

Vol. VI. SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1923 No. 12

From the Editorial Observatory

Speaking of cold facts, it's been pretty hot lately!

Well, now that the Fourth of July is over, you may begin thinking about Christmas once more.

If it is true the world is getting its peace in pieces, it's a cinch it had better get it in full ere long, or else the world is liable to go to pieces.

The popularity of divorce is said to be on the wane. What newspapers does whoever ventures this statement read? Sure can't be any of the Hearst sheets.

It is difficult to understand how the Germans are getting along these days without their beloved Lubitsch, who seems all set to remain in Hollywood the rest of his life.

Most all classes of pictures are returning profits nowadays, which is the best answer to those censors who have done everything in their power to thwart the cinema art in its irresistible progress. One of these fine days censorship will be abolished by popular acclmation.

The Motion Picture Exposition opened auspiciously despite the fact that there were some who regarded it suspiciously. The amount of good it may do in behalf of the industry cannot be measured as yet of course, but here's hoping many mighty long yard-sticks will be required to do that measuring.

Another one of the unsolved mysteries is, what has become of the old-fashioned photoplay fan who used to fill the magazines with ravings over the beauty of the hero's moustache or the heroine's booful blue eyes of "such sweet innocence." And, just think, even Mary Pickford has grown up in her latest starring vehicle, "Rosita."

Here's some good news of benefit to the whole industry—Charlie Chaplin is going to star himself in a new series of comedies of feature length, according to a statement just issued. Charlie may like to direct, but the public likes to see him act instead and the more satisfied the fans are the better it will be for motion pictures in general.

Whenever you are not sure of what kind of an evening you are liable to have, you can always go to a picture show and this is just as good a prescription for the picture people as anyone else. Of all the people who should patronize cinema emporiums, the people who make them should be among the most habitual.

There need be no alarm over the partial shut-down of Universal City. Such curtailment of production activities during the warmer months is a part of that company's annual policy and in September there will be a resumption of the full-blast film-making. Meanwhile the Universal exchanges are loaded to the guards with plenty of new pictures awaiting release and also meanwhile, the scenario and other departments will be kept busy preparing for the fall schedule, which, it is reported, will be unusually extensive.

Men with violent ideas continue to infest the face of the earth, but thank the lucky stars, they are decidedly in the minority and are confined mostly to European countries. The chance to be the greatest benefactor humanity ever had in all history is within reach of that man who can discover some sort of a gland which will convert violent men into mild-mannered ones. The chap who could find a way for perfect distribution of the product so that all human beings needing it would get it, could qualify as the foremost circulation manager in the world.

Prohibition daily becomes the most ridiculous farce in the whole history of the United States. The supply of liquor is increasing amazingly and the army of boot-leggers is gaining more recruits now than at any time. Meanwhile the rest of the world is laughing at us and also meanwhile the one panacea is to legalize the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer. Anyone who needs any convincing on this point should take a run up and down the boulevard any night and see how scornfully some of our best citizens flout the Eighteenth Amendment and how brazenly the rum-runners conduct their illicit business.

One well-informed man who has just returned from a tour of various European countries declares there would be practically no competition in film-making from abroad if American artists, directors and producers would discontinue going over there and helping foreign concerns make their pictures. He says most all European producers crave American cinema genius and most of them show little disposition to be very ambitious with some assistance from sons of Uncle Sam. It's all very interesting, but it is more interesting to contemplate the positive proof that every one who ever goes over comes back in due course of time. As long as this survives as the general rule, Europe will not be able to make any great inroads on America's supremacy as the foremost producer of photoplay entertainment. And, zat's zat for a cinch.

FOR BOOTLEGGING CRABS, HE'S ARRESTED

EUREKA, CALIF, July 4.—One of the strangest cases in the history of California law developed today when James Cruze was arrested for bootlegging crabs.

Cruze is on location at Eureka shooting the famous Harry Leon Wilson story, "Ruggles of Red Gap." The locations for this Paramount Picture are far between; consequently when he finishes work each day he is tired and hungry. He loves crabs — especially the giant crabs caught off Eureka. These crabs were so delicious that he decided to let his friends in on the feast and so several hundred of the sea delicacies were packed for shipment to the Lasky studio in Hollywood.

Right here was where Jimmy Cruze crashed head-on against the most unique law in California. Humboldt County law does not permit crabs being taken across the line. To ship them in large quantities would soon deplete the supply. Mr. Cruze did not know that such a law existed until Acting Police Chief, Frank Cloney, arrested him for bootlegging — bootlegging crabs. It was some little time before Mr. Cruze was able to obtain his release. In the meanwhile production was at a standstill.

Tonight Cruze was conspicuous by his absence in the hotel dining room. He was extremely crabby over the fact that Edward Kerton, Ernest Torrence, Lois Wilson, Fritzi Ridgeway, Charles Ogle and Louise Dresser, featured players in this forthcoming Paramount Picture, continually phoned his room to inquire if they should have some crabs sent up.

The police chief made Cruze eat most of the intended shipment as a lesson that Humboldt County crabs are to stay in Humboldt County.

"OLD SOL WILL SUPPLY MAKE-UP FOR PLAYERS

Consternation reigns amongst candidates for the cast now being chosen for Douglas Fairbanks' forthcoming production, "The Thief of Bagdad," owing to the fact that the parts call for a light brown skin, the color of the natives of the Orient.

It is expected that each member so far chosen will hie to some secluded beach or a very private island and procure a coat of tan which must needs carry further than the face and arms on account of the style of the costumes. A bathing suit cannot be worn as the tan must be an even blend all over.

Realism! Realism! That's the cry of the public, and Douglas Fairbanks is going to give it to them, which is why Raoul Walsh demands this genuine "make-up"

SCREEN COMEDIAN SCORES HIT IN DRAMA

Jumping from work as a comedian to the portrayal of strong emotional roles in dramatic features is a task that is not always successfully accomplished by the average motion picture actor. There have been many who have attempted to make the grade but their lack of expression and emotion have forced them, for the present at least, to abandon all thought of becoming a dramatic actor.

One of the latest artists from the old school of comedy to try his hand at dramatic work is Garry Odell, who made his screen debut with Mack Sennett back in the old Keystone days and who later played the "heavy" for a number of the screen's foremost comedians. Laying aside his comedy wardrobe, false mustaches, et cetra, he undertook to find an engagement with a dramatic company. His first opportunity came in the Richard Thomas production of "Phantom Justice," in which he was given the part of "Spike Louis," a grewsome underworld character, to portray.

As a result of the engagement, Richard Thomas, the director and producer, declares the actor's performance is one of the high lights of the entire production and so impressed is he with his work that he has already engaged the actor for one of the principal roles in his forthcoming picture. Having made such an auspicious start in dramatic pictures it is doubtful if Odell will ever return to comedy roles, unless it is to play the comedy relief in dramatic features.

$7,500,000 WORTH OF TALENT GETS TOGETHER

Over Seven and One-Half Million Dollars worth of theatrical and movie talent celebrated one of the biggest All-Star Nights ever given at the Ambassador Summer Grove last Tuesday evening. Seldom in the history of Los Angeles have so many famous stars danced under one roof, and movie fans from out of town were busy during the evening securing autographs on menus of the hotel.

Among those present were: Lenore Ulrich, Mae Busch, Ruth Chatterton, Lew Cody, Fannie Brice, Tom Mix, Carmel Meyers, Larry Semon, Ray Griffin, Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, Lew Brice, Harold Goodwin, Clara Horton, Mme. Balzac, Sylvia Breamer, Herbert Rawlinson, May McAvoy, Blanche Sweet, Henry Miller, Bessie Love, Alice Lake, Claire Windsor, Earle Williams, John Steele, Billy Dove, Sophie Tucker, Eileen Percy, Bennie Fields, Ford Sterling, Art Hickman, Carlos Sebastian, Julanne Johnson.

Screen Imitations---The Danger

The showman is today in danger of harming himself, and of damaging the industry, by booking pictures of unscrupulous fly-by-night producers who try to cash in on the enterprise and prestige of others. This is the statement made by H. M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, following a study of a phenomenon which is preying, parasite fashion, on the vitals of the motion picture industry.

"The greatest harm is done to those who have big investments," he emphatically says "in the motion picture business and those who at all times cater to the advancement of the industry, by people trying to put over their wares dishonestly. They wait till a celebrity is signed for a big production, or a famous novel procured for the screen. Then they get busy, and flood the market with inferior work produced years ago and now resurrected. They rope in the exhibitor by a "just as good" product, and the lure of a big name.

"An instance of this came to my notice the other day. Now that we have secured the personal services of Belasco to produce his pictures, everybody is trying to pick up and exploit anything with Belasco's name on, even though made long ago. They are injuring the great work we accomplished in bringing Belasco to the motion picture fold. In one western city I recently noticed advertising on first premiere showings of Belasco pictures.

"The producers will try to give the exhibitors the impression that they are getting the real article, Belasco Productions, when, as a matter of truth, all they will be getting is the name of Belasco and nothing else, not even something David Belasco knows anything about. The name happens to be the same, that is all, and it is exploited falsely.

"It was the same when we produced "Why Girls Leave Home," immediately the market was flooded by spurious imitations.

"Everybody who lacks originality tries to imitate. But the exhibitor who takes the imitation is kidding himself. He is putting his good money on the wrong horse. In the first place, he ruins the industry by palming off inferior stuff. In the second place, he antagonizes his patrons, who will be getting old stuff rehashed as new. And when the exhibitor sees the success of the genuine pictures and wants to play them, he will find himself nowhere, for the interest will have been killed by the inferior wares. He won't be able to interest his patrons, nor will they want to risk a second disappointment. In every way it's a bad business, and he loses."

A SON OF ADVENTURE

There is probably not another motion picture director who has led as adventurous a life as has Donald Crisp, who will direct "Ponjola," the Sam E. Rork production for First National release.

Cynthia Stockley, author of "Ponjola," is said to have a wider knowledge of South Africa, the locale of her story, than any other living writer, but Crisp knew the South African veldt long before this writer had eyes on it.

He knows every foot of it almost; he's personally acquainted with the trails and kopjes and he's done a lot of "soldiering" through Rhodesia.

While still a youngster of only sixteen years Donald decided he would look well in the flaming uniform of the Tenth Hussars. So in London he joined the colors and was assigned for service against the Boers in South Africa before he could get his regimentals.

Fighting "Oom Paul" Kruger, Villejoen and De Witt, earned three medals for the adventurer—the last being the D. C. M., or Distinguished conduct medal, at the battle of Tungula Heights.

Having gone through the Boer campaign and the World War in safety Crisp joined the British intelligence department and flew in and out of Russia twice a week for five months and evaded capture by the Bolsheviks each time.

THE WISDOM OF WHISKERS

Whiskers, like whiskey, improve with age! Thunder Face, the full-blooded Mission Indian who appeared in Edwin Carewe's "The Girl of the Golden West," and who is now playing the part of a bad hombre in the present Carewe production, "The Bad Man," attributes his film success to his whiskers.

"It's not their beauty," says Thunder Face, whose English makes one suspicious that he is a Carlisle graduate, "but it's their versatility."

"With their assistance I am a Mexican one, a Hindu, an Arab, Egyptian, a Moor, Saracen or Turk and I've just finished a role as a child of Israel fleeing across the Red Sea.

"If I shave and feel comfortable my artistic career is ruined and if I don't shave my mood disposition will soon be a total loss.

"I'm wearing them for art's sake—and a monetary consideration!"

Eugenia Feiner, who recently completed an engagement at Universal City, opposite Lloyd Hughes in a feature temporarily titled "Grandpap," and who is heralded as one of the most beautiful of the screen's new faces, and who is also being highly praised as the possessor of one of the most charmingly attractive personalities recently discovered... A brilliant future of stardom is predicted for her, because in addition to her natural cinema ability, she is highly talented as a dancer.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 2.—J. Eliason, director for the World Educational Films, and a party of six arrived in San Francisco by motor on Saturday for a stay of several days. Included in the party are Baby Betty, just two years old, one of the youngest stars of the silver-screen, Wampus mascot for the last two years, and a most lively and charming bit of a girl. Also Yale Boss, who was the first kiddie star back in the days of two-reelers, but who grew out of short trousers and off the screen several years ago, to return recently to the movie world as a good-looking young man. He has, by the way, just finished playing with George D. Baker in the Goldwyn production, "The Magic-Skin." Their stop here is part of an extended motor trip through central and northern California, looking for locations for the next picture of the organization, "The Forty-Niner," in which Baby Betty will be starred.

Elmer Dyer, cameraman with the Stenoscopic Productions, has left that organization and returned to Los Angeles on Friday. The next picture of the company will not be started for another month owing to a little uncertainty in regard to their releasing arrangements. Patrica Palmer, who was costarred in their last picture, is also leaving the organization, but Director Walter W. Bell, and Ranger Bill Miller, the leading man, will continue with the company. Joseph Gonyea, signed as assistant director, is for the time being at least, working in the south.

The Golden Gate Productions, with Jack Dewey as production manager, since their move to the Pacific Laboratories at 331 Turk Street, are very busy making advertising, industrial, and commercial films, while they get their capital together, and everything in shape to begin the production of feature pictures, which they hope to do in the very near future.

Harry MacKenzie of the Kenmat Productions returned from New York last week. While there he arranged a release for the first picture made by the company. It will be released in August by Pathe. Its present title is "Tipped Off," but there is a possibility that that may be changed. Mr. MacKenzie has gone to Los Angeles for a few days, and will announce the future production plans of the company on his return.

Barbara Caselton, film star from New York, spent several days in San Francisco last week.

Carl Laemmle has telegraphed to Mayor Rolph that owing to wide-spread objections from San Francisco certain scenes in the feature film, "The Shock," have been cut out. The picture is a story dealing with the San Francisco fire, but so many of the scenes were over-drawn that numerous organizations objected on the grounds that the film in places was "Untruthful and Libelous," on its showing in this city a few weeks ago. Hence the official protest to Mr. Laemmle.

Day by day the cast working in Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed" grows smaller and smaller. Frank Hayes has finished his part, and left for the south by motor last Wednesday. Fanny Midgley also done, and released. Dale Fuller h only to be murdered this week, and th she will be through. Jean Hersholt h finished his work in this part of the pictu and as he does not appear in the sequenc to be made at Colfax, he will go to Los A geles until it is time for his scenes in t very end of the picture, to be shot in t desert at Death Valley. Of course Za Pitts and Gibson Gowland are still hard work, also Hughie Mack, who adds mu to the bulk of the company. If the prese plans work out the company will leave f Colfax to do the mine sequences about t 24th of July.

A most amusing pre-view was given t other night of a picture made at a six day frolic given by the Alameda Sciots at Co tage Baths Beach lately. Harry F. Sheeha well-known to the film world, was supe vising director, and Louis Jacobs directe the actual filming, with Bud Hopper at th camera. Of course it was a comedy and th title, "Yes, We Have No Bananas Today," a fair description of the plot, but som clever work was put over by the cast, all o whom were members of the Alamed Sciots, although several had had professio al experience, and the picture had a laug every minute.

Max Graf, head of the Graf Productions has left New York, enroute for San Fra cisco via Chicago and Los Angeles. On hi return the company will again go into pro duction, with first, a big sea picture, the "The Grain of Dust," as earlier announced

IS THE CHANGING THE SECRET OF A CAREER'S LONGEVITY?

As they come, so do they go—in veritable droves—but, Owen Moore seems destined to go on forever as one of the screen's foremost stars. Ever since the days of earliest infancy so far as the motion picture industry is concerned, Mr. Moore's has been a "biggest name," and today it is generally conceded to be a "bigger biggest name" than at any time. Just now it is being predicted by certain wiseacres of filmland that "Thundergate,' in which he is now appearing at the United States Studios, will serve to even enhance his popularity due to the fact that he is drawing a characterization entirely different from anything he ever attempted before—that of the son of a Chinese lord, although earlier in the story he is a debonair, go-getting American. His performance before the battery of cameras has become quite the talk of the town even before the picture is completed owing to the enthusiastic remarks of those who have watched the production.

For three years Mr. Moore has starred most triumphantly in a series of feature comedy hits under the banner of Selznick, and many had come to regard him as fundamentally a light comedy star, forgetting that for years prior to his entrance into this field, he was the foremost interpreter of romantic drama. Now in "Thundergate" he will be seen in something different again, a heavily dramatic interpretation and one most difficult, too, for he must be convincing as a young Chinese or else the whole effect of the story would be lost.

Is it not logical to presume that the secret of Mr. Moore's ability to be a perpetual star is his talent for doing something radically different constantly?

HOW TIMES HAVE CHANGED SINCE THE DAYS OF DANTON

"Would you be so kind," requested Louis XVI, turning to the huge, rather unkempt man on his right, "as to permit me to borrow a match?"

"Certainly, king, your slightest wish is my greatest pleasure," and forthwith George Jacques Danton produced a small sulphur tipped slip of wood and passed it to the pompous gentleman with the aquiline nose.

"The longer I live the more sure I become that the tobacco we get nowadays is nothing more or less than ground up cabbage leaves." This remark was proffered by Maximilien Robespierre,

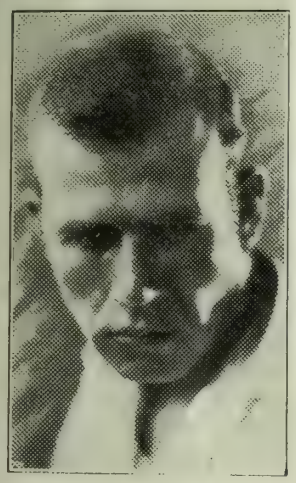
"Well, and that's not all," said Le Chapelier, the president of the National Assembly "Take actors, ball players, ham sandwiches and almost anything else you might mention Everything is on the downgrade except rent and taxes."

At this point the Marquis de La Tour d'Azyr broke into the conversation.

"A lot of things have slowed up, all right," he said, "but there's one thing that's better than ever and that's my yacht

The discussion ended when an assistant director called them on the set where Rex Ingram was directing a scene for "Scaramouche," his Metro picturization of Rafael Sabatini's famous novel. The historical characters mentioned above are portrayed in the screen production by the following artists: Louis XVI, Lorimer Johnston; Danton, George Siegmann; Robespierre, Curt Furberg; Le Chapelier, Bowditch "Smoke" Turner; Marquis d'Azyr, Lewis Stone. Others who have leading roles in "Scaramouche" include Ramon Novarro, Alice Terry, James Marcus, Edith Allen, Lloyd Ingraham, Julia Swayne Gordon, Otto Matieson and William Humphrey.

The Evolution of Economoteligianis



Mike Tellegen

Spiros Economoteligianis was a great violin artist. His countrymen said he was one of the finest musicians Greece had ever brought forth, and he was very popular, for most of his concerts were given for the benefit of the poor children of the land. He used to travel throughout Europe and Asia Minor playing in the big cities—Athens, Cairo, Constantinople, Vienna, Paris, Moscow and Budapest, and always the proceeds of these recitals, aside from his actual living expenses, went to charity, for he played for love of his art alone, not for monetary gain.

In 1891 he came to America, making his home in Chicago, where he played in the big theatres of the inland metropolis. It was not long after that Mike came to increase the number in the family. When he was a little tad he used to take him to the theatre with him, and while he played on the stage Mike used to stand before a mirror backstage and enact little dramas and comedies of his own imagination. Spiros noticed this and said that the boy would be a famous violinist when he grew up for he had the spirit of the true artist within him.

The years passed and Mike grew into a sturdy youth. At last, in 1912, the father told him he was going to take him to Europe to see the great old-world cities, the centers of art and culture. Together they traveled over the same route the father had traveled many years before and again Spiros played before the audiences of gay Vienna and Paris.

After their long trip they came back to Saloniki and they had hardly passed through the city portals when the call to arms was issued and immediately Spiros, not yet of age, joined the Greek forces preparing for the march to the front. Saloniki was the eastern base of the Allies and here they were concentrating all of their crack troops, British, French and Italian as well as Greek, for the big drive at the German rear. Mike's regiment was sent to Dramas in the tobacco country where they intrenched opposite a strong detachment of Turks. On the night of September 12th, 1913, during a fierce skirmish he was shot through the left hand and struck in the face by flying shrapnel. The concussion of the big guns, coupled with the pain of his wounds, made him deathly sick and he dropped to the ground unconscious.

The next day he awoke in the base hospital in Saloniki. They were checking over the wounded and due to the fact he had been stripped of all identification they did not know whether he was a Turk or a Greek. He told them he was an American citizen, and it happened that at the time there was an American refugee boat captain in the place who, after a short conversation with Mike, verified his claim. He said that he was returning to the States with a boatload of Americans, and would be glad to take him back inasmuch as the boy was too seriously wounded to take any further active part in the war. Mike accepted, saying that he would work his way home as cabin boy, and this he did as best he could in his impaired condition.

Upon arriving in New York he took the first train for Chicago, where he recuperated until the following spring when he rejoined the captain who was now plying his boat on the Great Lakes as a government freighter, it having been condemned as too light for further sea duty. It was here that they served their country during the rest of the war, taking a big part in transporting supplies to the east coast. After the armistice was signed Mike, in conjunction with a few friends, formed a vaudeville act and played small time throughout the middle west. This did not satisfy him, however, and he decided to try his luck in the movies at Hollywood.

When he arrived he found his name too cumbersome for screen purposes, and changed it to Mike Economan, only to later change it to Mike Tellegen, which name he is known by today. It was no take-off on another actor by the same name, who is of far greater calibre, but simply an abbreviation of his own cognomen.

It was a long, hard fight before he attracted any kind of attention, but eventually, through his willingness to work hard and his natural ability, he began to get a footing, and today he is rated as one of our most promising heavies and slated for the leading heavy in a series of ten dramatic productions to be made by one of the foremost directors in the industry, and featuring one of the established actors.

To date he has appeared in "The Green Temptation," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." "The Queen of Sheba," and several comedies. Recently he completed a bit with Charles R. Seeling's "The Tango Cavalier," starring George Larkin. While nothing he has done has been of any great importance, he has done his work conscientiously, and has thus achieved recognition.

The little Mike who used to mimic before the mirror backstage did have the spirit of an artist and is going to carry on the traditions founded by his father. One the violinist, the other the actor; both artists.

FOOLING OLD-TIMERS

It isn't often that a person is mistaken for his or herself.

The other day Tony Gaudio, major domo of the Norma Talmadge photographic force, was talking on the United lot with Myer Epstein, a United Studio lieutenant. Up the studio street came a stunning young girl, slender, graceful and radiant.

"Some good-looker," opined Epstein, a connoisseur on feminine allurements.

"Gosh, she looks an awful like Norma Talmadge," sail Tony.

"Say, doesn't she, though. Must be some girl that's coming out to ask if they need a double for Norma. I heard there was a girl in town that looked just like her."

The object of all this speculation drew alongside. She turned upon them a smile that intensified her radiance. The two men gasped. Was she flirting with them! Then she spoke.

"Hello, boys!"

Gaudio and Epstein gasped again. It was Norma Talmadge herself!

A NEEDED BOON

The motion picture industry in Hollywood should take advantage of the discovery of scopolamin, the truth-serum which recently has proven effective in persuading prisoners at the county jail to tell their right names.

This is the belief of Richard Travers, motion picture star, who is at present enacting one of the leading roles in Universal's "The Acquittal."

Mr. Travers suggests the administration of scopolamin to:

Scandal-seeking visitors to Hollywood, who, if they find their quest of the questionable vain, draw upon their imagination for reports of wickedness to carry back to the old home town.

Editors of periodicals who believe that the muck-rake is mightier than the pen.

Oil promoters who know their best chance of striking petroleum is at a gas station.

Big Changes are Predicted for Theatres

A complete change in the management and presentations of motion picture theatres throughout the country, is predicted by Maurice Tourneur, director of M. C. Levee-First National Pictures. The change will establish every theatre in the public's mind by the type of entertainment offered, as evidenced in "legitimate" theatres.

"The time is not far distant when motion picture theatres will be classified as are the 'legitimate' theatres today," said Mr. Tourneur. "Just as theatres are established as burlesque, vaudeville, stock, dramatic or musical comedy houses today, so will motion picture theatres be divided in a definite and distinctive manner, each offering the type of entertainment in which it specializes.

"There is every indication that sooner or later, motion picture theatre owners will adopt distinct policies in the form of particular types of entertainment. In certain districts there will be theatres devoted solely to the presentation of melodrama. On another street there will be a theatre devoted exclusively to the 'high-brow' type of picture which the critics have been clamoring for but which to date have been found poor commercial investments. There are bound to come theatres in which subjects for children will be the policy.

"At present the public goes to a movie theatre with little appreciation of just what it is going to see. With the new order of things, pictures will be made for definite classes rather than attempting to make them productions that will hit the bull's eye for every race, creed, color and age—an impossibility.

"When we make a picture today we must keep in mind that it must be so simple that it will appeal to the seven-year-old child as well as to the college professor. A picture that will have equal entertainment value to the stenographer and the art student. A picture that both the boilermaker and the tired business man will enjoy.

"The producer of burlesque on the stage would not attempt to write his plot for the benefit of the patron of the Little Theatre. Yet, this is what film producers are trying to achieve. This is an age of specialization and classification. I personally would like to make a certain type of picture. Under present conditions this type of picture would not be found commercial. If there were established throughout the country a certain number of theatres showing this form of entertainment exclusively I could concentrate on this one type of play and not attempt to entertain those people who would not enjoy this class of entertainment.

"When the time comes that producers can profitably concentrate on definite forms of film entertainment and not attempt to give satisfaction to the whole world of picture-patrons with one and the same film, great strides in increasing the number of photo-play devotees will be evident, and still greater strides in the progress of the film play as an art will be assured."

The Most Cosmopolitan Army

"Dukes' sons, cooks' sons, sons of millionaires!"

The movie "extra" list gets them all.

From all corners of the world they come, representing every walk in life. And they all have but one desire—to win fame and fortune before the camera.

Cooks' sons are common; sons of millionaires not so common, but now and again Hollywood gets the rarest of them all—a duke's son.

The latest duke's son to buck the "extra" list is the Earl of Glandore, now playing a "bit" part in "Ponjola," a picturization of Cynthia Stockley's famous story of South Africa which Sam E. Rork is producing for First National.

The Earl, or Major Maurice Talbot, as he would rather be addressed, is a "type" in the eyes of the casting director and therefore has little difficulty in getting a job, paying him $5 to $7.50 a day, in pictures of British or Colonial atmosphere.

In "Ponjola," he fills the role of one of the flotsam and jetsam, the broken-down sons of British nobility and wealth, that have flocked to the Rhodesian gold fields.

Playing a nobleman's part is not at all hard for a man who comes of several generations of land gentry and peers.

The Earl's peerage is one of those titles that went out of being with the inception of home rule in Ireland. For generations his family had their ancestral home at Ardford Abbey, County Kerry, Ireland. Then in 1903—the Irish land bill—and much of the family estate was given up.

As the oldest son, and heir to the title the Earl naturally followed the course that is laid out for all oldest sons of the nobility—the army. For twenty years he served with the colors, in England, in India and in the Boer War.

The world war found him on the retires list. He "joined up" the day war was declared and was recommissioned major. With the Royal artillery he again saw active service in France, in Mesopotamia and Palestine.

He was wounded and gassed four times in France and then in Palestine commanding the first British battery to cross the River Jordan, he was wounded for the fifth time, a wound that incapacitated him from further service.

Back to Ireland, the war over, the Earl "put up" for parliament from the Cork district. He was defeated by the Sinn Fein candidate and then on returning home, found that his home, Ardford Abbey had been burned to the ground, possibly by radical nationalists.

As the Earl puts it "Ireland was then no place for a peer and so I decided to come to California, where I might live a quiet life."

And there he is today, in Hollywood, eking out his army pension with a day's work now and again as a movie extra.

Governor John H. Bartlett, first assistant United States Postmaster General, and former chief executive of the state of New Hampshire, headed a notable list of visitors during his official inspection of the Universal City post-office, Governor Bartlett, with his wife and son, P. P. O'Brien, postmaster of Los Angeles, and Thomas G. Patton, personal representative of Will Hays, former postmaster general and now dictator of filmdom, headed the party.

Besides visiting the post-office, the notable visitors were escorted by Julius Bernheim, general manager of the big studios, and William Koenig, assistant general production manager, on a tour of the big lot. They visited the gigantic "Hunchback of Notre Dame" set, where they posed for motion pictures of the group, watched William Desmond and Charlotte Merriam filming scenes from "Sentenced to Soft Labor," and Virginia Valli working in the Hobart Henley production, "A Lady of Quality."

The postal executive went over the Universal City post-office in detail, and listened to the usual plea for "a larger post-office" from General Manager Bernheim and the local postmaster.

From U to You

In the official party were Governor and Mrs. Bartlett, P. P. O'Brien, Calvin Bartlett, Thomas G. Patton, Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Fitzgerald, Lois Gerstle of New York, Julius Bernheim, William Keonig, Charles Van Ronkel and Abe Frank of Los Angeles.

The visit to Universal City is a part of the coast itinerary of the postal executive, who left Washington two months ago on a tour of the nation's postal system.

Wallace Worsley works now, regardless of rain or shine. In directing the spectacular filming of Hugo's "The Hunchcack of Notre Dame," several-thousand-dollar a day overhead were spent on the big unit, and if the weather was bad or anything, production was held up. That meant hours of worried idleness, so far as shooting was concerned.

Now, with Perley Poore Sheehan and Edward T. Lowe, literary guides of the story, he is spending full time and some more with Edward Curtiss of the editorial department, supervising and cutting the film. Lon Chaney, the star, frequently drops in and watches the work. "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," is the first spectacle film cut apace with shooting. It was in twenty-four reels the day the last shot was made.

Claire Adams, one of the most promising of the younger screen actresses, has beeen entrusted with the feminine lead in Herbert Rawlinson's latest starring vehicle at Universal City.

"Upside Down," a comedy drama by H. H. Van Loan, is the title of the Rawlinson production, now being filmed under the direction of William Parke.

Miss Adams recently played the feminine lead in "Legally Dead," a Universal scientific mystery drama featuring Milton Sills. She had hardly finished with her role in that production when she was chosen by William Parks, who directed it, for the lead in Rawlinson's picture, although this is the first announcement.

Robert Ellis is repeating former Universal successes in the leading role opposite Gladys Walton in "The Wild Party" at Universal

FORMER KING VIDOR STUDIO TO BE ENLARGED AT ONCE BY SOL LESSER INTERESTS

Principal Pictures Corporation's studios in Hollywood are to be greatly enlarged immediately. This information comes from Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg of that organization.

The Principal Pictures land consists of some fifteen acres directly adjoining that of the Douglas Fairbanks-Mary Pickford studios. When it was purchased some months since by Lesser and associates, it was known as the King Vidor studio. Vidor made individual productions at the plant prior to its sale.

Among the chief additions that will take form at once, is another huge enclosed stage. It is the plan to equip this new stage with every modern device for picture making. One of the world's largest generators has been installed and complete reorganization of the electrical department is now under way.

Two new buildings will be erected which will house the many artists scheduled to appear in forthcoming Principal Pictures productions. Under the supervision of Norman Manning, the Principal Pictures studios are gradually undergoing a complete and new building schedule. It is estimated that half million dollars will be expended in the immediate future on the plant which is necessary to accommodate the many companies planned for the near future.

Here the Harold Bell Wright series of features will be made. The first "When a Man's a Man" is now in the final production stage with "The Winning of Barbara Worth" scheduled as the second of the Wright series. Harry Langdon, the well known vaudeville comedian is hard at work on the first of a series of twelve feature comedies. Two other units are scheduled to start in the near future.

Sol Lesser is now devoting the major part of his time to the production end of the film game. His time is practically consumed in organizing companies, conferring on scripts, scenarios, and attending to the many details that come under his supervision.

The distribution of Principal Pictures products is in the hands of Irving M. Lesser in the Principal Pictures New York offices. All distribution is made from the eastern end with production activities confined exclusively to Los Angeles and Hollywood.

The production schedule for the coming year in so far as Principal Pictures Corporation is concerned, is a big one. Twelve features are on the new season's schedule in addition to the series of Langdon comedies.

YOUNGEST LEADING LADY SIGNED BY JACK

Lucile Ricksen, 16-year-old leading woman, whose rapid rise to fame has few equals in the motion picture realm, has been signed by Jack Pickford as leading woman for his next picture, it has been announced.

In supporting Jack in his original story of the Kentucky mountains, Miss Ricksen will enact the role of a carefree, barefooted little maiden of the hills. As a typical little girl of the mountains, with curls flowing down her back, the young motion picture star will have the greatest role of her varied career of eight years.

Scores of leading women were interviewed and given screen tests by Jack and his director, George Hill, in an effort to secure a perfect type, which would be symbolic of youthful abandon closed behind the barriers of civilization in the Kentucky mountains. Miss Ricksen was chosen unanimously as the perfect type.

Hollywood's youngest leading woman has had a varied career from the time she played her first bit as a Cupid in a Henry B. Walthall picture back at the Essanay eight years ago. Recently she has had leading roles in two of Marshall Neilan's greatest pictures, "The Strangers' Banquet" and "The Rendezvous."

The young leading woman first began commanding public attention when she played the part of the lovely little girl in the Edgar Jones-Booth Tarkington series at Goldwyn. Then a year or two went by and she began growing up a bit, playing bigger parts in such pictures as Rupert Hughes' "The Old Nest," and "Look Your Best," "The Married Flapper," and "The Girl Who Ran Wild."

COMEDIAN REMEMBERS OLD PALS WITH BIKE

Al. St. John, Fox funster and erstwhile lifeguard at Long Beach, has been elected an honorary member of the Balboa Branch, American Red Cross Volunteer Life Corps.

This honor was conferred upon the stellar comedian recently following the presentation of a specially equipped sea-going bicycle to the Balboa lifeguards by St. John who has not forgotten the by-gone days when he patroled a stretch of beach in search of swimmers in distress.

The bicycle given by Al to the Balboa crew is a model machine with numerous attachments designed to aid in the work of resuscitation. The wheel will be employed in regular service at once.

LUBITSCH TO FILM MONTMARTE STORY

Ernest Lubitsch, who a couple of years ago gained world-wide fame through his motion pictures "Passion" and "Gypsy Blood," and of whose work since that time such examples as "Deception," "One Arabian Night," and "The Love of Pharaoh" were shown on the American screen, is about to start his second American production. It is to be a Warner Brothers screen classic.

Since he came to this country last year, Ernest Lubitsch has directed Mary Pickford in "Rosita," a dramatic Spanish tale of the Napoleonic period, which is not only the first spectacular costume play Miss Pickford ever did, but also shows her in a highly emotional part, greatly varying from many of her former roles, and resembling them only in so far as it is interspersed with much delicate, subtle humor.

For his second American production Ernest Lubitsch has signed a contract with Warner Brothers under which he is to make a modern, continental comedy-drama with a small all-star cast. This picture will be somewhat in the order of "Montmartre," Lubitsch's last European production of the 1860 period with Pola Negri. It presents an intimate love story and plays in the milieu of continental society.

This coming Lubitsch production is arousing much interest among those familiar with the costume pictures of Lubitsch, as it will give the American public its first chance to see a modern photoplay of the celebrated director.

BATTLES FIRE TO SAVE $2,500 AN HOUR

Smoke from the burning sump holes in the vicinity held up production on Jackie Coogans picture "Long Live the King," this week. It is the practice of various companies which receive oil in tank cars, to empty the residue into a sump hole, and this material is burned regularly. Through an unfortunate shift in the wind, the thick black smoke drifted over on the Coogan set, and had the effect of a minor eclipse. Since Jackie was working with about two thousand extras on his big street scene, this occurence was costing the Coogan company at least $2500 an hour.

Director Victor Schertzinger sent for E. A. Biby, studio manager of the Jackie Coogan Productions, but was informed that he had already left for the fire and within fifteen minutes the smoke ceased to roll over the set, which was bathed thenceforth in the justly famous California sunshine. Biby had immediately proceeded to the sump holes, where he organized a volunteer fire department and, assisted by a group of workmen from the Southern Pacific and the Southern California Edison organizations, the fire was immediately checked.

This was the first time in many years that the sump hole fires have interfered with open air shooting of motion pictures, but in order to make sure that this would not occur again, Biby has made arrangements with the two companies mentioned to light their fires at five o'clock in the evening instead of nine in the morning.

Theby in "The Eagle's Feather"

Although Rosemary Theby was engaged in portraying one of the leading roles in support of Jackie Coogan in "Long Live the King" at the Metro studios, arrangements were made for her to also play an important part in "The Eagle's Feather," a Metro all-star special, which is being filmed under the direction of Edward Sloman. Crauford Kent has also been added to the cast of this unusual picture of the west, the complete roster of prominent players including such popular favorites as Mary Alden, James Kirkwood, Elinor Fair, Lester Cuneo, George Siegman, William Orlamond, Charles McHugh and John Elliott.

LATIN COUNTRIES ANXIOUS FOR "BAD MAN"

Edwin Carewe's "The Bad Man," which is now being filmed at the United Studios, will be hailed as the greatest picture America has ever produced, in Mexico, Central America and South America, according to General Manuel Perenz Trevino, Chief of Staff in the army of President Obregon of Mexico.

General Trevino was Carewe's guest at the studio and watched several scenes in which Holbrook Blinn portrays the character of a border "bad man." General Trevino evidenced such an interest in the production that Carewe permitted him to read the film version of the story.

"Undoubtedly," said the General, "this production will be acclaimed the finest picture the Latin-American countries have ever seen. It is a picture that the Mexicans, Central Americans and South Americans will love. They will delight in Mr. Blinns characterization."

Extensive efforts are already being made to exploit "The Bad Man,' through the entire south. In all probability the distribution plan will be as comprehensive in Mexico, Central America and the South American countries as it will be in the United States and Europe.

WARNER BROTHERS SIGN FAMOUS PHOTOGRAPHER

John Ellis, credited with being one of the best-known pictorialists in and out of the industry, has been engaged by the Warner Brothers to photograph the many high-lights in the organization's forthcoming series of eighteen classics of the screen.

Mr. Ellis has the distinction of having photographed all official Washington, in addition to having served a number of years with the Columbia Stock Company, Washington, D. C. During his sojourn in the Capitol city he is said to have taken special photographs of Woodrow Wilson, Champ Clark, scores of prominent senators and representatives and many New York celebrities of the political and theatrical world.

While with the Columbia Stock Company, Mr. Ellis appeared in a number of well-known theatrical plays with such players as Charlotte Walker, Guy Standing, John Mason and Julia Dean. Shortly after leaving the Capitol city, he became identified with Thomas Ince and First National, and is reported to have photographed "Omar the Tentmaker," "Peg o' My Heart," "The Famous Mrs. Fair," "Trilby," and many other screen productions.

ASHTON DEARHOLT WILL HEAD HIS OWN UNIT

Filming of the initial Ashton Dearholt production is scheduled to commence this week under the direction of Jack Hatton.

Dearholt, for the last four years, has served as production manager for the Ben Wilson Productions. He will continue to serve in this capacity as well as to personally supervise the producing of his own features which will be made at the Ben Wilson studios.

The new organization has contracted to film twelve five-reel features of the western variety during a period of one year, and they will be released through the Arrow Releasing Company.

This series of photoplays will serve as a "come-back" for pretty Helene Rosson, who will be remembered as the star in American and Mutual pictures made several years ago at the Santa Barbara studios. Miss Rosson will be starred in the entire series and will be supported by Edmund Cobb, who will interpret the leading male roles.

Wilbur McGaugh, who scored a personal triumph for his characterization in Roy Stewart's "One Eighth Apache,' has been engaged for supporting roles and will also assist in the matter of direction. McGaugh has been affiliated with the Ben Wilson Productions for the last two years, both as an assistant director and character actor.

E. R. Hickson, in charge of the art direction for all pictures filmed at the Wilson studios, will personally supervise the art direction for the Dearholt productions and J. C. Hutchinson, veteran cameraman, has been engaged for the series.

"GOLD DIGGERS" ONE THIRD FINISHED NOW

"The Gold Diggers," David Belasco's noted stage success which is being produced by Warner Brothers, with Hope Hampton in the leading role, will be approximately one-third completed today.

Up to the present Miss Hamp ton has been engaged almost exclusively in interior scenes. There still remains some interior work to be shot. In the near future the exterior scenes, most of them surrounding fashionable streets and beautiful homes will be taken.

From the preliminary view of the "takes" so far, "The Gold Diggers" promises to be one of the outstanding pictures of the year. Miss Hampton is reported to be doing the finest work of her career in this production.

BERNIE IS MEMBER OF THE A. C. C. NOW

Arthur Bernstein, the energetic production manager for Principal Pictures Corporation, arrived home after having spent two months in Prescott, Arizona, with the "When a Mans a Man" Company.

"Bernie," whose smile is sometimes as scarce as rain in August, had a grin from ear to ear as he hopped off the train. The reason for this smile was soon discovered. In respect for the work accomplished by Principal Pictures Corporation in conjunction with the recent Hopi Indian dance celebration staged in Prescott this month, the citizens of that community have elected Bernstein a member of their Chamber of Commerce.

Now when one of the studio attaches wants an "O. K.' on a bill he has to visit Bernie's official secretary and make an appointment with the film executive-civic worker.

BOY SCOUTS IN UNIQUE TRIP SEE MOVIES MADE

A group of fifteen Boy Scouts are today "seeing America first" from the quarter-deck of an auto-truck in what is said to be one of the most novel motor tours ever undertaken by members of this big juvenile organization.

The trip is in charge of Arthur E. White, deputy scout commissioner of Ensign District, Salt Lake City, and the first leg of the journey was from Salt Lake to Hollywood where the boys watched movies in the making at the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios. After watching preliminary work for "The Thief of Bagdad," Douglas Fairbanks entertained the Scouts with an abbreviated field day which finished up with a plunge for them in the star's famous studio pool.

After leaving the studio the Scouts started north. The remainder of the tour will include San Francisco, Portland, Ore., a trip up the Columbia riven, then a look-in on Boise, Idaho, from where they will turn south toward Salt Lake City again. Mr. White said they expected to be gone at least a month.

"Bull" Montana in Special

"Bull" Montana, the screen's original cave-man comedian, suffered bitter disappointment when he was forced to cancel his intended trip to Great Falls, Mont., where he had planned to help Jack Dempsey wind up his training siege.

The cauliflower-eared screen player will enact the sympathetically humorous role of a reformed crook in "Held to Answer," the second of Metro's new series of all-star specials. Although "The Bool" is still under contract to Hunt Stromberg, who stars him in two-reel comedies, he was loaned to Metro especially for this part during the absence of Mr. Stromberg in New York,

DECIDES TO STICK TO ORIGINAL TITLE

"Ashes of Vengeance," the title of the H. B. Somerville novel from which Norma Talmadge's recently completed romance of 16th century France was adapted, will be retained as the name of the film, it was announced by Producer Joseph M. Schenck. This supplants "Purple Pride," to which the title was changed a few weeks ago.

After three months of production had elapsed, Mr. Schenck consented to a change from "Ashes of Vengeance" to the shorter name of "Purple Pride." The strength of the original title, however, asserted itself. From many sources the producer received declarations in praise of "Ashes of Vengeance. With the film well along in the stages of cutting and titling the decision to revert to the book title was made.

"Ashes of Vengeance" is being cut under the supervision of Director Frank Lloyd. It is Lloyd's last production with Norma Talmadge, as the famous director has signed with another organization to make his own production. The picture will be in ten reels, and is portrayed by the greatest array of stars ever assembled in one production, including Conway Tearle, Wallace Beery, Courtenay Foote, Betty Francisco, Andre de Beranger and Josephine Crowell.

TRAVERS FINISHES ONE AND CONTINUES ANOTHER

Richard Travers has completed his role in Marshall Neilan's "The Rendezvous" and now is engaged in enacting one of the leading parts in the Universal-Jewel production of "The Acquittal."

This leaves Travers in what is for him a comparative state of idleness, for when he came to Hollywood recently he undertook the portrayal of the two parts at once.

"The Acquittal" is a photo-dramatization of George M. Cohan's stage success, written by Rita Weiman. The direction of the film version is by Clarence Brown.

Moranti Writing Stories

Milburn Moranti of the Milburn Moranti Comedy Company, and Joe Kane have retired to a corner of their office and put their noses to the grindstone for the purpose of writing stories for future situation comedies. Work will begin as soon as they have completed their stories. Morris Schlank, President of the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., who is distributing the comedies, is out on the road with the first three now.

THIS FAN COULD CAST PICTURE O. K.

Every screen favorite receives an mail. But few of the letters eceived by the movie stars can e considered really construc- ve.

Generally they follow the same end. The writers tell the play- s how they liked such and uch a picture "in which you ere simply grand." When the tters usually close with a re- uest for an autographed photo- raph.

One of Anna Q. Nilsson's fans, n old lady in Kansas City, who as been writing to her since er old Kalem days, writes let- rs that are really worth while.

A few weeks ago Miss Nilsson eceived a letter from this fan elling her how pleased she was read that her favorite actress as to play the leading feminine le in "Ponjola," a screen ver- ion of Cynthia Stockley's fa- ous story, which is to be pro- uced by Sam E. Rork for First ational.

"When I read the book," the orrespondent wrote, "I told my usband that it offered wonder- l material for a motion picture, specially if the part of 'Des- ond' were to be played by you."

Later in the letter she men- oned that she had enjoyed Miss ilsson's acting with James irkwood in "The Heart of a ool" and in "Pink Gods" and losed by saying, "I shall be ery glad to hear that Mr. Kirk- ood is to play 'Druro' in 'Pon- la.'"

By a strange coincidence the an letter was received by Miss ilsson on the same day that irkwood signed a contract to lay that part in the picture.

Which leads Producer Rork to emark that Miss Nilsson's fan ould make a most excellent asting director.

Miss Negri Recovers

All traces of the severe bruise which Pola Negri received in he filming of Herbert Brenon's roduction for Paramount "The Spanish Dancer" in which the olish actress is starring, have isappeared and she has re- umed work. Miss Negri was ccidentally struck in the face y a heavy seventeenth century oot during the making of one f the scenes of this adaptation f the popular novel "Don Cae- ar de Bazan" by Adolphe D'Ennery and P. S. T. Dumanoir which June Mathis and Beulah Marie Dix adapted to the screen. Antonio Moreno is featured in his Paramount Picture with Wallace Beery, Kathlyn Wil- liams, Gareth Hughes and Adolphe Menjou in support. Ed- ward Kipling, Dawn O'Day and Charles A. Stevenson complete the cast.

MABEL NORMAND DIFFERENT IN NEW PRODUCTION

There appears to be a well grounded suspicion in the minds of those identified with the production of Mack Sennett's next feature offering to the classics of the screen, that in "The Extra Girl," Mabel Normand's new starring vehicle, a new Miss Normand will be seen.

Heretofore Miss Normand has adhered pretty closely to the portrayals of light dramatic and comedy roles. She is known the world over as a comedienne and will probably stay in that classification for all time to come. Despite this, however, the irresistible personality of this little screen favorite will force itself still deeper in the affections of her admirers, when "The Extra Girl' 'is given to the screen, owing to the fact that she is demonstrating in this new picture her right to be classed among the foremost emotional actresses of the cinema.

In one of the longest scenes shot of "The Extra Girl," Miss Normand shows a dual character which even her most enthusiastic admirers would doubt she was capable of expressing. For several minutes the Normand we all know so well, lively, gay and mischievous, is before us, but almost at the snapping of a finger her bouyancy gives way to an expression of utter despair, when she hears the words that tell of the financial ruin of her parents, and to which she has been an unsuspecting accomplice.

F. Richard Jones, directing "The Extra Girl," claims for Mack Sennett's little star that "regardless of what the producer, the star, or he himself will essay to do in the future, this present production and Mabel Normand's work in it will remain always as a monument to her inimitable versatility."

NOW WE MAY EXPECT A NEW COMMODORE—BEVAN

When in Rome, do as the Romans do,—that old adage was inspiration for guiding Billy Bevan to another plane of more expensive living than he has been in the habit of following. Billy has purchased a power cruising boat. The next thing he will be doing is to doll his family up in yachting attire, while he dons a commodore's cap, white flannals and sneakers.

During the four weeks he was on location at Balboa Beach with Mack Sennett all-star comedy troupe, Bevan was guest on several private yachts. The life of dressed-up ease, the lolling about on canopy-covered decks and talk about regattas, cruises, etc., so strongly appealed to him that he immediately looked about for a good boat buy. When that was accomplished he made application for membership in one of Newport's exclusive yacht clubs.

Now that he has been admitted to the real class of sportsmen, his friends are wondering if he will remain just plain Billy Bevan, or will he insist on being addressed Mister Bevan.

Graf Returning Here

Max Graf, supervising director of the Graf Productions, after an absence of seven weeks from the film colony, has left New York and is hurrying back to Hollywood where he will immediately begin preparations for his next production, "The Grain of Dust," which he has adapted for the screen. Mildred Harris, featured player in the Graf Productions, is the only artist thus far announced of the cast. Mr. Graf plans shortly to have another unit under operation which will doubtless be located at the Metro Studios.

STAR PROPOSES ACTOR COLONY FOR PLAYERS

A colony of actors living apart from the world, with their own government, dedicated to the stage drama, what Tryone Power, famous stage star, now working in Tod Browning's production of "The Day of Faith" at the Goldwyn studios, is planning.

Although the actor admits that as yet he has not been able to find a suitable location for the temple, his plans for the magnificent grounds and auditorium are complete.

All artists the world over, are to be asked to contribute a subject of their art to beautify the temple and grounds. In the halls and the auditorium, great paintings of eminent artists are to be hung.

The actor inhabitants of the proposed temple are to be given life contracts and their families are to be protected by insurance.

An alternating system of appearance has been arranged so that one week a star will be seen in a minor part and the next he will interpret the leading one.

The temple will be situated close to some large city, yet it must be in a beautiful location preferably, near the seashore.

Decorates Cafe Wall

Carl Miller, whose latest work on the silversheet is registered in Chaplin's "Public Opinion" in which he played male lead, is also immortalized in a most interesting portrait, the work of Julian Harrison, which is now exhibited at Levy's cafe, Hollywood, where the decorations were likewise executed by Mr. Harrison. Much color is flaunted in the portrait where the actor is shown in a glowing dressing gown over evening clothes, while the background is lively in blues and greens.

MARGUERITE LOSES ALL FEAR OF SNAKES

Every actress in motion pictures has a fear of some one thing. Perchance it is a mouse; maybe a lion or other wild animal. And it seems always that during her career before the camera, she will at one time or other be called upon to enact a role which brings her in direct contact with the dreaded object.

Such is—or rather was—the case of dainty Marguerite De La Motte, enacting the leading feminine role in Principal Pictures Corporation's "When a Man's a Man."

Marguerite fears—or rather feared—snakes. Who blames her? And lo and behold, when she started making the popular Harold Bell Wright story, her role called for her to be found fondling a pet reptile. Horrors! Try as she would to have the part changed and try as she would to have a double enact this particular episode.—it all fell upon deaf ears in so far as the director, Eddie Cline, was concerned.

"Aw, don't be scared of an old snake," cried John Bowers in soothing tones to Marguerite, as the actress stood some twenty feet away from the crawling thing.

Finally with the assurance of all that the snake was tired out, toothless and, had he been human, probably bald, the film star proceeded with the most difficult task of her entire screen career. She "did her stuff"—with Mr. Snake.

As she watched the film shown in the projection room, a cold chill swept down her back. "I don't know how I ever did it," she exclaimed. "But I DID and now I'm not afraid of anything. Bring on your wild animals, your mice, lions, bears—even your old snakes. I'm not afraid any more!"

LOSES ACROSS-SEAS RACE WITH STORK

Henry King, who has been directing Lillian Gish in the filming of Francis Marion Crawford's "White Sister" in Italy, has lost a race with the stork.

Mr. King is hurrying home on the "Berengaria" in the hope of being able to beat the bird, but the race has already been won by the bird, as Mrs. King will introduce him to a son when he reaches home this week. Mr. King left with Miss Gish for Italy last November and the picture has just been finished.

Miss Gish will return to her native land on the "Olympic."

Mr. King also lost another race, as Richard Barthelmess, whom he directed in "Tol'able David" and several other pictures, became a father two months prior to Mr. King.

BELCHER WINS SECOND BRENNON ENGAGEMENT

Ernest Belcher, who was selected by Herbert Brennon to stage the ballet scene in Pola Negri's latest production, "The Spanish Dancer," has been called back to the Lasky Studios to stage a second dance number.

Belcher's fame as an originator of spectacular and artistic ballets, had reached Brennon while he was in the east and almost his first move upon arriving in Los Angeles to begin the production was to engage Belcher.

The success of Belcher's efforts in the initial presentation has caused Brennon to recall him to present the second ballet number, which will also be a feature of the production.

Belcher students from the advanced classes will be used exclusively in the presentation.

PRESS AGENT PLEADS GUILTY TO AN ERROR

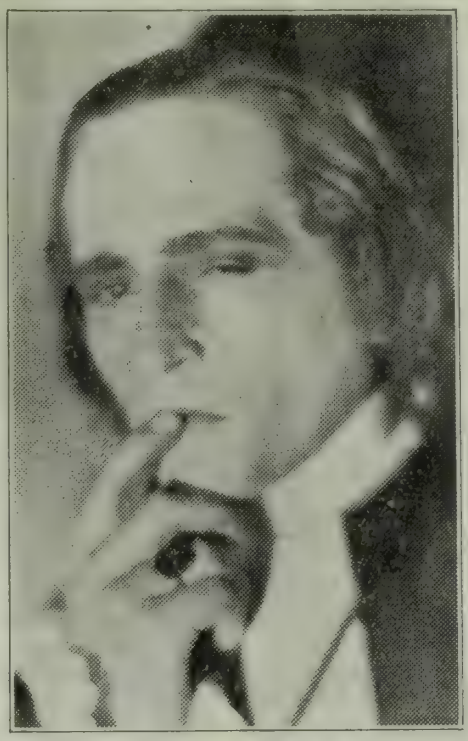
Jay Chapman, Palmer Photoplay Corporation publicity man, wishes to make himself the goat in a matter concerning the inaccuracy of a report sent out on the length of "Judgment of the Storm," the organization's first production, and to apologize to the public and to dramatic editors for an unintentional misrepresentation.

The item stated that nearly 100,000 feet of film had been "shot" for this picture, which would place it in a class with D. W. Griffith's and Von Stroheim's pictures in the matter of film actually taken. As a matter of fact, "Judgment of the Storm" was held down to less than half that, which, considering its completed length and the fact that four or five cameras shot many big outdoor scenes, approaches a record in the opposite direction.

Ince Buys Another

Thomas H. Ince has purchased screen rights for "The Barber of New Orleans," a vividly colorful stage play of a little known period of American history—the period of the Louisiana purchase. Romantic New Orleans is the scene of the play which had a big run for a number of years with William Faversham starring in it. The plot is taken from "The Code of Victor Jallot," a popular novel by Edward Childs Carpenter, who is the author of "The Cinderella Man"; "The Easy Mark"; "The Dragon Fly"; "The Pipes of Pan" and other big stage successes.

Associated Authors have just completed the filming of "Loving Lies," Thompson Buchanan's film adaptation of Peter B. Kyne's sea story, "The Harbor Bar," which features an all-star cast including Monte Blue, Evelyn Brent, Charles Gerrard and Joan Lowell.



An interesting portrait study of Otto Matiesen, noted Danish character actor, as he appears in Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche." He portrays the role of Philippe de Vilmorin, a French clergy scholar who is slain in a duel with the Marquis d'Azyr (Lewis Stone) and those who are equipped to judge say that after this picture has been shown, Matiesen will find his place on the screen with the truly great artists. He has been on the stage practically all his life, and was very popular in Europe as an interpreter of Shakespeare, Ibsen and Washington Irving. He has appeared in several other pictures, and was also seen as Napoleon Bonaparte in "Vanity Fair."

WHEN HIS CAR COULD BE BOUGHT FOR 15 CENTS

Lewis Sargent, who is playing the leading juvenile role in Gladys Walton's latest starring vehicle, "A Wild Party," saw visions of his classy Ford speedster being wrecked a few days ago when the director called upon him to allow Miss Walton to operate the car for scenes in the picture. Knowing that she was used to operating a highly expensive car with a gear shift, Sargent hesitated about letting his car be used by the star for her own safety as well as the safety of the car. However, Miss Walton was confident that she could operate it successfully so he placed it at her service. She started down the road and was to pass the camera at full speed. The first time she tried it she missed hitting another car by less than six inches. Sargent weakened. Then the company decided to film the scene. The star came down the street in the car at break-neck speed, cameras were grinding and as she passed the cameramen and director the car swerved to the left and then to the right, keeling over on two wheels and then righted itself, finally coming to a stop with neither car nor driver injured. "You're a wonderful driver," said Sargent, turning to the star after the scene had been taken, "but anyone could have bought my car for fifteen cents when you started for the second trip down the road."

Wilson Adapts "Three Weeks"

Carey Wilson, associate editor of the Goldwyn studios, will adapt Elinor Glyn's best known novel, "Three Weeks," to the screen. Wilson has written many scenarios for Goldwyn features, both originals and adaptations. Madame Glyn is now at Culver City in daily conference with Wilson. She will personally assist in the production of the picture. The rialto is now teeming with rumors as to who will be cast in the picture, particularly in the role of Paul.

In "Mail Man"

Josephine Adair, who recently finished one of the six featured roles in Frank Borzage's "Children of Dust," is now playing an interesting part in "The Mail Man," which is being made at the R-C studios under the direction of Emory Johnson. This picture stars Ralph Lewis, with whom Josephine also played in "The Third Alarm," and "In the Name of the Law." Josephine is rapidly coming to the fore as one of the most talented of our younger character artists.

ACTOR WRITING BOOK DEFENDING HOLLYWOOD

To combat venomous articles painting Hollywood a modern Gomorrah, James Woods Morrison, popular young leading man, is well under way in the compilation of his personal recollections of the past few years as a motion picture actor for publication under the title, "The Diary of a Leading Man." The book will be distributed all over the civilized world by a well known firm of publishers following the printing of a limited autographed edition which Morrison will present to his associates and friends within the cinema profession.

Morrison, now at Metro in a principal role in "Held to Answer," a screen adaptation of Peter Clark MacFarlane's widely read novel, will tell the world of the real people he met in Hollywood. He recently finished his portrayal of a leading part in "The Unknown Purple" at Goldwyn's.

Di Millo With De Mille

Adonis Di Millo, who recently completed an odd portrayal in Cecil B. De Mille's "The Ten Commandments," is now enacting a part with Jackie Coogan in "Long Live the King," which is being filmed at the Metro studios. He is the footman on Jackie's stagecoach, and has several interesting closeups with the little star.

Judge Henry Neil, known throughout the English-speaking world as Father of Mothers' Pensions, has taken the Foxy Grandpa studio at 1727 Cherokee Ave., Hollywood, formerly occupied by John Schultze, who made the famous Foxy Grandpa newspaper comics of a few years ago. Judge Neil will act the part of Foxy Grandpa in a series of very short movie comics, designed to entertain and inspire children.

Ted Stewart has just returned from a pleasure jaunt to Yosemite.

Earle Close, who specializes in straight juveniles and character juveniles.

SYLVIA AND ENID CROSS PATHS AGAIN

Fate seems to have predestined that the lives and career of Sylvia Breamer, First National picture celebrity, and Enid Bennett leading woman of Edwin Carewe's "The Bad Man," should be interwoven.

A few years ago both of these charming women, natives of Australia, were members of the same legitimate stage company in Sidney .The show was "The Ayle Case," Miss Breamer was leading woman and Miss Bennett the ingenue.

The latter joined the Fred Niblo company, while it was touring the Antipodes and came to America. A year later Miss Breamer followed. In this country they became identified with the legitimate stage and then the picture cameras for both.

In Hollywood they again met and their friendship caused them to reside together in a bungalow nestling in Hollywood's foothills. When Miss Bennet married Director Fred Niblo, Miss Breamer's mother came over from Australia and the two took up their residence together.

Then Miss Breamer signed a contract to appear in First National pictures and was cast in "The Undergate" about the first person she encountered on the United Studios' lot was her friend, Enid, who had been cast in the role of Mrs. Morgan Pell in Edwin Carewe's First National production of "The Bad Man."

MISS DU BREY IS ADDED TO CAST FOR "PONJOLA"

Claire Du Brey, popular screen "vamp," has been added to the cast of "Ponjola," a Sam E. Rork production which is being made for First National, with Donald Crisp directing.

Miss Du Brey, whose mission so far as the movies are concerned—is to lure unsuspecting husbands from their wives, is to play still another "vamp" part in this absorbing story of the African gold fields.

But her vamping in "Ponjola" is a novelty inasmuch as she attempts her wiles on another woman—a girl disguised as a man—a situation which is entirely new to pictures.

Miss Du Brey is to play the part of "Lucia" a frivolous manoeuvring female who picks a target in "Desmond," a "young man" who goes into the gold territory seeking oblivion but who in reality is an English housewoman. This part is to be played by Anna Q. Nilsson.

Bell Henderson, who is at present directing "The Love Edit," has returned to New York from Massachusetts to film the interiors.

HOLLYWOOD GIRL IS RISING TO FILM FAME

Although she has been in pictures less than a year, Margaret Morris, well-known Hollywood girl, who scored a decided hit with her dance creations in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Tempest," "Taming of the Shrew" and other plays presented at the Hollywood Bowl by H. Ellis Reid, is making such rapid strides as an actress that it is the opinion of many who have been focusing their attention on her work that before another year rolls around she will be appearing as a star in her own right.

Born in Minneapolis, Miss Morris received her education at Dana Hall and Stanley Hall, private schools in that city. Her great-great uncle was William Henry Harrison, famous Indian fighter and former United States President. Her great uncle was Benjamin Harrison, who also was a President of the United States, and her father is S. V. Morris, formerly a member of the Minneapolis State Legislature and now one of the largest insurance brokers in the country.

Miss Morris' entrance into motion pictures was preceded by a career with the Shubert Stock Company in her home town and with the California Opera Company, appearing in many important plays produced by those companies. Her debut in pictures was brought about as the result of a visit to the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, where she was introduced to Clifford Robertson, the casting director, who became seriously impressed with her personality and offered her an engagement in "The Great Lover," which Frank Lloyd directed.

After that she appeared in two Robertson-Cole productions directed by Christie Cabanne. Her other engagements include "The Whistle," with William S. Hart, "Her First Elopement," with Wanda Hawley, and "The Forbidden Thing," with Allan Dwan.

WASHINGTON'S DEATH NOTICE AT FILM FAIR

When the Motion Picture Exposition opened July Second at Exposition Park in Los Angeles there was offered for sale by Reverend Neal Dodd, known as "The Pastor of Pictures," an age-yellowed copy of an Irish newspaper containing what virtually amounts to "a death notice in verse" of George Washington.

The name of this paper is the Ulster County Gazette. It was published at Kingston, Ulster County, and was owned by Samuel Freer and Son. The issue bearing the "In Memorium" poem concerning General Washington is dated Saturday, January 4, 1800. It was contributed to Father Dodd for his Little-Church-Around-the-Corner bazaar by Edward Knoblock, famous play and photoplaywright who is assisting Douglas Fairbanks in the preparation of his new film, "The Thief of Bagdad." Knoblock purchased the Ulster Gazette about twenty years ago in a little shop in Brighton, England. It was part of his elaborate collection of interesting and unusual publications.

Carmel is a demi-vamp

She's a demi-vamp—if you please. Carmel Myers has coined this new phrase for the relief of all young girls with big brown eyes and raven tresses. For these young damsels daren't roll their eyes or they are called vamps. According to the fair Carmel, the muchly over used word, vamp, should only be applied to those who deliberately cultivate the art of luring, while the girl who unconsciously captivates and combines her attacks on the heart with gentleness, is a demi- vamp. Miss Myers is now playing a provocative role in Balzac's story, "The Magic Skin," at the Goldwyn studios.

NAGEL WILL PLAY LEAD IN "THE MASTER OF MAN"

Conrad Nagel will play the name part in Victor Seastrom's production of "The Master of Man," according to this week's announcement from the Goldwyn studios.

Nagel, one of the most popular of the younger leading men, is ideally suited to the role of the man judge, or deemster. It will be his second part since being placed under long-term contract to the Goldwyn company. He has just finished the leading role in Marshall Neilan's big story of present-day Russia, adapted from Madelaine Ruthven's story, "The Rendezvous."

The cast of "The Master of Man," which is Mr. Seastrom's first American-made picture, includes Mae Busch, Patsy Ruth Miller, Creighton Hale, DeWitt C. Jennings, Evelyn Selbie, Winter Hall, Aileen Pringle and Mark Fenton.

The part for which Mr. Nagel has been cast is the one from which Joseph Schildkraut withdrew after preliminary tests which demonstrated that he is physically unsuited to the role.

Orlamond in "Magic Skin"

William Orlamond, the well known character actor who has just completed a role in "The Eternal Three," has been engaged to play the part of a French nobleman in "The Magic Skin," the Balzac story which Achievement Films, Inc., is making at the Goldwyn studios under the direction of George D. Baker.

As Champrose, Orlamond plays opposite the colorful Carmel Myers.

Jane Thomas is at present in Gloversville, New York, taking scenes for a new Arrow production, in which she plays the leading role.

WARNERS PLAN A WORLD PREMIERE HERE

"Where the North Begins," most recent Warner Brothers screen classic to be completed, is to have its world premiere at the State Theatre in Los Angeles July 28.

This will mark the first Warner picture to have its initial showing outside of New York City and for its presentation in Los Angeles one of the biggest exploitation campaigns of the year has been promised. Showing of the picture on the West Coast is the result of a plea by Harry Rapf, its producer, who is of the opinion that the finished product should first be marketed nearby the place it is made.

"Where the North Begins" was directed by Chester M. Franklin, who is now directing Norma Talmadge. It is a story of the frozen north featuring a wild wolf-dog who takes to himself a master, and in his own way portrays the hero role of the play. The picture was made under the working titles of "Wolf Fangs" and "The White Silence." It is said to be the most costly dog production ever attempted and has for its star the internationally known police dog, Rin-Tin-Tin.

Following the Los Angeles showing, the picture is to play the Warfield Theatre in San Francisco, largest of the chain of West Coast theatres, and then into the New York houses.

A finished print of "Where the North Begins" was shipped to the Warners' home offices in New York this week by Mr. Rapf.

BAGGOTT TAKES FIRST VACATION IN 3 YEARS

After three years of hard work without a vacation at Universal City, King Baggot is enjoying a brief outing at Catalina, taking his first lessons in piscatorial art under the able tutelage of Dustin Farnum, Hal Roach, Zane Grey and other noted disciples of Isaac Walton.

A part of the ambitious vacation program laid out by Baggot includes the landing of a tuna that will tip the scales at more than 100 pounds.

Baggot recently concluded filming "Whose Baby are You?" a Universal-Jewel special production starring Baby Peggy. Upon his return he will start cutting the thirty reels shot down to feature length.

Andrew Leigh, formerly juvenile leading man with the Maddocks-Park Players and who has played the leading role of the stage version of "Smiling Through" and "Friendly Enemies" has just finished an engagement with Henry Otto in the "Temple of Venus" for Fox.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Walter Miller has been engaged by Ray Physico to play the leading male role in his forthcoming production, which will be made in Florida.

Ann Luther has just finished her contract with Fox, having played the lead in their forthcoming production, "The Governor's Lady."

Jack O'Brien, who played one of the principal parts in "Under the Red Robe," will shortly work on a new production.

Cyril Chadwick's waxed mustache is an important part of his trade. Mr. Chadwick, now doing some "heavy" work in "The Social Code," Viola Dana's newest Metro picture, which Oscar Apfel is directing, says he could not manage to appear half as villainous without it.

Lorimer Johnston, who appears as King Louis XVI of France in Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche," built a motion picture studio in Johannesburg, Transvaal, South Africa during the winter of 1915 and 1916, following which he proceeded to make 16 feature productions there.

"The Social Code," Viola Dana's newest starring picture for Metro, is one of the few in which Malcolm McGregor has appeared in which he has not been the bloody but unbowed participant of from one to a dozen fistic battles.

Director Oscar Apfel consulted a city directory to find 200 names to list on a club callboard for use in "The Social Code," Viola Dana's newest Metro picture. It seemed a simple task to write offhand 200 typical names, but Mr. Apfel gave up after he had put down less than 80. "Try it yourself if you think it's easy," he challenged.

Rex Ingram will film the scenes showing the fall of the Bastile in "Scaramouche," his monster Metro production, on July 14, the day on which that historic event actually took place, according to present plans. He "shot" the first scenes of the production on March 17. The only connection the latter date has with the story is that Mr. Ingram was born in Dublin and he believes in four-leaf clovers.

Viola Dana and Malcolm McGregor, principal players in "The Social Code," which Oscar Apfel is directing for Metro, both have Ford "coops." On several occasions Miss Dana has mistaken Mr. McGregor's machine for her own, and vice versa, as Julius Caesar might have said. They were alike even to the dents in the right rear fenders. But the confusion is ended, for Miss Dana's flivver now has a caved-in radiator and a limping headlight as a result of meeting with a small truck.

Arthur Mallette, who has the role of a surgeon in "The Eagle's Feather," a Metro special which Edward Sloman is directing, bears a remarkable resemblance to the late John D. Murphy, famous Chicago specialist.

Thomas H. Ince is transforming the "lot" of his studios at Culver City into a bit of the old Southland preparatory to the filming of "Barbara Fritchie." The studio administration building is copied, architecturally from the home of George Washington at Mt. Vernon and when the sets for the new picture of Civil War days are completed, Ince will have a complete Colonial mansion at his disposal.

Lloyd Ingraham, the noted director, has been signed by Associated Authors, Inc., to direct their third production; Elmer Harris' screen version of Frank R. Adam's Cosmopolitan story, "The Love Hater." Matt Moore, of the celebrated actor-family, will essay the leading male role.

Emmett King, well known character actor, has been added to the cast for Tod Browning's production of "The Day of Faith" being produced at the Goldwyn studios.

Jere Austin has just completed "The Alibi," a special feature in which he will be starred.

Maurice (Lefty) Flynn was forced to abandon his proposed trip to New York as his services are much in demand by the coast producers.

Elinor Fair has just completed her third picture under the Universal banner. She is under a five-year contract.

Alma Rubens, having finished her contract with Cosmopolitan, is considering taking a flying trip to Paris for some new Fall gowns.

Following his remarkable performance in "Success" and "Loyal Lives," Brandon Tynan has been engaged by Murray W. Garsson for a series of special features.

Marie R. Burke, who made such a hit in "The Heart Raiders," has received an offer from England to play the part of a Grand Duchess in a big special production. Miss Burke will shortly announce her future plans.

Jane Novak has portrayed a young mother role for the third time in succession in her latest starring vehicle, "The Lullaby." She was a young mother in "Thelma," also in "Divorce." Fred Esmelton portrays the role of her father.

Fred Esmelton has been selected by Chester Bennett to play one of the principal roles, that of the police judge, in "The Lullaby," starring Jane Novak.

Here's a new one. Ralph Lewis' collie dog got a bad case of Klieg eyes while working with his master, the star in "The Mailman," and work on the picture was held up two days while the Thespian canine was recovering from the inflamed eyes.

Finis Fox has selected Harry Dunkinson to play the important role of the police inspector in his personally directed production, "Bag and Baggage," now being filmed at the Hollywood Studios, Inc., and featuring Gloria Grey, heralded as Finis Fox's latest film find.

Fred Kelsey is playing the role of the Chief of Police in Finis Fox's picture, "Bag and Baggage," now being produced at the Hollywood Studios, Inc., and supporting Gloria Grey.

Al St. John, Fox stellar comedian, starts work on a new comedy this week, for which he prepared the scenario while vacationing in the wilds of Central California. Ben Stoloff will assist in the direction.

"Bill" Beaudine, "the boy director, started this week on his third Wesley Barry special production for Warner Brothers. Beaudine's "Penrod and Sam" is now being released by First National.

Oscar Apfel is finishing "The Social Code," starring Viola Dana, for Metro. The production, an adaptation of Rita Weiman's "To Whom It May Concern" is Apfel's first west coast production since his return from Europe.

Allen Holubar will soon begin actual filming of his initial picture for Metro. He is to make a series of specials to be known as Allen Holubar Productions for Metro release.

Dorothy Phillips is enjoying a long-needed vacation at her home in the Hollywood foothills. The star's plans for the future will be announced in the near future, it is said.

Lois Scott, has just finished in "One Dark Knight," at the Grand Studio, featuring Joe Rock, and has been cast in an African picture featuring Snowy Baker, a Phil Goldstone production ,and will leave this week for location—no, not Africa, Chatsworth.

Little Elizabeth Ann Keever has scored another bulls-eye in the role of the flower girl in the Christie Comedy, "Morning Blues," directed by H. Beaudine, which has just been finished.

Georgie Hickman, who just finished with "Present Arms," a Century Comedy featuring Buddy Messinger and directed by Al Herman, has been cast in the new Constance Talmadge vehicle, at the United, and is leaving for location at Truckee. Figuring Georgie's present speed and adding a few years to his present sixteen gives an answer which will make the other youngsters look well to their laurels.

Universal is looking forward to Virginia Valli's initial starring vehicle, "A Lady of Quality," now in its final stages of production, as one of the biggest successes in their output for the 1923-24 season, with the exception, of course, of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." A strong cast is appearing in support of Miss Valli, among whom are Coy Watson, Jr., ten-year-old film starlet, and Peggy Cartwright, eight-year-old artist, who are two of the most popular youngsters in the film field.

Reggie Morelli, having completed his work as Robert Lincoln in "The Life of Abraham Lincoln," which is being produced by the Rockett Film Company, has been engaged by Cecil B. deMille to play an important part in his current production of "The Ten Commandments." Meanwhile, he is negotiating with a group of Italian bankers in Los Angeles who are planning to shortly launch a producing company and present him as their featured player.

Following the completion of his current production, "Good Men and Bad," starring "Big Boy" Williams, Charles R. Seeling will present his star in a special feature picture before starting work on a new series of westerns with him. Williams is under contract with Seeling for the next several years and it is the plan of the producer to give him every possible chance to become one of the most popular stars of western pictures.

NOTHER STAR OF "LEGIT" LURED TO SCREEN

Following a long and successful career on the legitimate age in Sydney, Australia, avid A. Dunbar has decided at motion pictures in their esent state of progressiveness fer an actor a greater opportnity than work before the otlights and therefore has derted the stage to become a ember of the Hollywood film lony.

In Cecil B. deMille's production, "The Ten Commandments," which the actor plays four fferent characterizations, his ork was of such quality that irector deMille gave him his rsonal check for a large sum. this picture Dunbar portrays e role of a high priest, the ptain of chariots, a slave and Israelite, which allows him fine opportunity to demonrate his ability as a character tist and his knowledge of ake-up.

Dunbar comes from a noted eatrical family. His sister, ate Dunbar, who has been ith the Coliseum theatre in ondon, England, for the past veral years, has achieved the eatest success as a mezzo prano. Alice Dunbar, his nt, was formerly leading oman in dramatic stock at the ovent Garden theatre in Paris. is father, the late David A. unbar, was a noted artist of ngland and many of his paintgs are draped in the New ork Academy of Arts and in e Academy of Arts in Chelsea, ngland.

While acting as the leading venile player with the Duller ock Company in Sydney, Dunr was offered an engagement William West, director for itagraph, to appear in pictures ing produced by the company Shepherd's Bush, England. e accepted the offer and for ur years played leading roles ith the company in feature picres. He then returned to the age in Sydney only to later nd that motion picture work eld a stronger appeal to him so e came to Hollywood where it predicted he will soon be ving some of the best known tists a close race for stellar nors in the photoplay world.

lynn Film Soon

WHEREIN A LITTLE GIRL MAKES GOOD HER THREAT

Ten years ago, a little girl pupil at Ursuline Academy, New York, used to point to Los Angeles on the school map and tell her fellow pupils that some day she was going to that city and be a famous movie star.

Perhaps in the length and breath of these United States thousands of other little girls have done the same thing. Some of them, no doubt, have gone to the "city of picture" but few of them have realized the extent of their desires—that is, to become a star.

Ruth Clifford, however, was one of the exceptions.

This talented young player, who has just been engaged to play a prominent role in "Ponjola," which Sam E. Rork is producing for First National, got her first taste of movie acting, while still a pupil at Ursuline Academy.

The Edison studios were quite close to the school. One day a casting director came to the school and asked for permission to give small parts to some of the scholars in a religious play. Ruth was one of the children who was picked for a part—the part of an angel.

That was the begining of her movie career. A few years later found her in Los Angeles and like the rest of them she had to go through the course of all potential stars, that is ,playing atmospheric and "bit" parts.

For five years she played small parts in Universal pictures and then won stardom in "The Kentucky Cinderella," "Mother O'Mine," and other features produced by that company. She played featured roles in "The Desire of the Moth," "The Beast of Berlin," and "Polly Put the Kettle On" and then going to New York she was featured in a serial "The Invisible Ray," which was produced by the Frohman Company.

In Porto Rico she was starred in a Ralph Ince production "Tropical Love," and since returning to Los Angeles, a year ago, she has played star and leading roles in nine pictures. Among the most important ones were: "The Dangerous Age," a John M. Stahl—First National picture; "The Face on the Barroom Floor," and "Truxton King," Fox specials; "Daughters of the Rich," a Schulberg prodution and "Mothers-in-law," and "April Showers," two pictures not yet released.

Her latest role before playing the part of Gay Liscannon in "Ponjola" was as "Ann Rutledge" Abraham Lincoln's first sweetheart in a picture now in production, "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln."

THIS COMPOSITE PICTURE TO RULE SCREEN CHOICE

Fifty noted physicians and surgeons from all parts of the United States visited the Goldwyn studios, and were photographed individually, on a uniform scale, from which a composite picture can be made and used as a guide for selection of "city doctor" types from now on.

The visit grew out of a conversation of Marshall Neilan, picture producer, with several members of the American Proctologic Society, now convening in Los Angeles, in which the surgeons criticised the way their profession had been represented on the screen. Mr. Neilan is engaged on a production in which a surgeon is the leading character.

The medical men and their wives were greeted by Hobart Bosworth, Claire Windsor, Raymond Griffith, Bessie Love, and other members of Mr. Neilan's cast, and photographed in motion pictures while doing various scenes with the professional actors and actresses, under the direction of Mr. Neilan.

We have a new candidate for presidency. A son was born to Mr. Edwin L. Hollywood, the director, on Sunday, June 17th. The parents have not yet decided whether the son shall become president of the United States or a director, but all odds seem to favor the directorship.

HORNER SIGNS 2 STARS FOR COMING PICTURES

Robert J. Horner Productions signed Geo. Cheesbro to play the lead in the serial, "A Voice from the Air," written by Theo. Wharton, author of "Exploits of Elaine" and "Eagle's Talons," just released by Universal. Miss Frances Arnold will support Mr. Cheesbro in this serial which is twenty episodes in length.

In addition to this serial there is now in preparation a stellar attraction featuring Marjorie Daw, to be released through a national distributor. The title of this vehicle will be "In Spite of All," replete with heart interest.

Other pictures in the making are "The Flame of the Sahara" and "The Midnight Limited" and it is expected that the entire four units will be operating before the middle of July.

This will make Bob Horner Productions one of the biggest independent producing units in the film colony.

Doug, Jr. Preparing

Preparations on the story to serve as the initial starring vehicle for Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., who recently arrived in California to make his debut before the camera are being rushed to conclusion at Paramount's West Coast Studio. Joseph Henabery will direct the thirteen-year-old star as soon as the scenario is ready.

COMEDIENNE GETS CONTRACT WITH METRO

Gale Henry, one of the screen's best known comediennes, has been signed by Metro to play the part of "Sally," the housekeeper, in "Held to Answer," which is being directed by Harold Shaw with an all-star cast.

This contract was brought about largely through the exquisite performance which Miss Henry has given in a number of Metro productions, one of which is "Quincy Adams Sawyer," a picture that brought the comedienne the unanimous praise of photoplay critics.

Hiss Henry is the oldest and yet she is the youngest actress of her type in pictures. She made her debut in pictures thirteen years ago, or when she was only 17 years old, and has since never engaged in any other profession. For some time she was starred by Universal in the old Joker comedies and when she reached the pinnacle of popularity she decided to produce her own pictures. The next three years were given over to work as star and head of her own company, and during this time she produced a total of 138 two reel comedies, a record that has never since been beaten in the comedy field.

She then cast her services with producers of feature length pictures

FILM DOGS IN BATTLE ROYAL ON STUDIO SET

Whether it was because of jealousy or just a family quarrel, "Props," the Great Dane owned by the Warner Brothers studio, and "Buddy," Henry East's trained film canine, who is appearing in support of Wesley Barry in "The Country Boy," started a battle royal on one of the company's stages in Hollywood a few days ago, which as far as excitement is concerned, puts all battles in the fistic arena in the shade.

"Buddy," who is a lightweight, and "Props," a welterweight, had apparently always been on the best of terms until the other day when it is thought "Props" imagined "Buddy" was trying to steal his popularity with the company and decided to take him down a peg.

For the first few rounds "Buddy" managed to hold his own, but when "Props" delivered a few fierce uppercuts about the little scrapper's head, he was finally forced to take the count. "Buddy" suffered a bad cut on his neck and "Props" was given a few bruises to nurse but both have now recovered and, having seen the folly of their quarrel, they are now better friends than ever.

WAGING LEGAL WAR OVER THEIR NAMES

What's in a name? A great deal according to two screen beauties who are taking the matter of their movies names to the courts. And strangely converse are the opinions of these two actresses as to what kind of an appellation is the best for a young lady who is trying to win fame in the flicker world.

Genevieve Berte, screen leading woman, has just petitioned the court for permission to change her name to Peggy O'Day, stating that this name will be more advantageous to her in her film work.

Last week Derelys Perdue also of the films, entered suit against the Film Booking Offices alleging that they wanted her to chance her name to Ann Perdue, and that this would do damage to her screen prestige because of its plainness.

Miss Berte differs with Miss Perdue in the matter of plain names and gives forth the opinion that a simple, everyday appellation is something to be desired by a motion picture aspirant.

"The very reason I am asking for permission to change my name from Genevieve Berte to Peggy O'Day is because I think my own name too fancy, while the latter is so simple that once it is heard it will easily be remembered. Most of our leading screen favorites have plain names and if anything this has helped them in their climb to the top. The simpler the name the better."

The former Miss Berte is already using the name Peggy O'Day in her motion picture work and besides utilizing it in "The Fighting Skipper," a serial which she has just completed, has also been featured by that name in "The Storm Girl," "They're Off" and "Thundering Hoofs." It is to establish a legal right to the name that she has applied to the court.

Melford to Start

Production work on "The Light That Failed," the George Melford production for Paramont of Kipling's famous novel, will start within a few days with a location trip to Catalina Island. A particularly notable cast has been assembled by the producer for this picture. F. McGrew Willis adapted the story and Ralph Block has been entrusted with the production editor's duties on this Paramount Picture.

Irving Cummings, now in New York, is seriously considering filming Jane Porter's "Thaddeus of Warsaw" as a mighty spectacle drama upon his return to Hollywood shortly.

ANNA Q. GETS $9,500 FOR ONE HAIR-CUT

If you were a beautiful young woman——

If your wealth of curly blonde hair was the envy of every feminine eye——

And if you were called upon to name a price to have your hair cut off——

How much would you demand?

Anna Q. Nilsson, famed motion picture actress, asked $9,500.

And that price was paid to fair Anna by Sam E. Rork, producer of "Ponjola," a First National picture.

In this picturization of Cynthia Stockley's famous story of South African life, Miss Nilsson enacts the role of a young woman who masquerades as a man.

The hair was cut off that she could convincingly portray the part.

La Rocque Settled

For some years to come Rod La Rocque, popular young screen leading man will appear exclusively in Paramount Pictures. Cecil B. De Mille announced recently that he had signed the young actor to a long term contract with the Paramount organization to appear in De Mille productions. La Rocque is at present one of the featured members of the cast of the Cecil B. De Mille production of "The Ten Commandments" by Jeanie Macpherson, in which Theodore Roberts, Leatrice Joy, Richard Dix, Nita Naldi, Charles de Roche, Estelle Taylor, Julia Faye, James Neill and Edythe Chapman are also featured.

Clara to Visit Here

Clara Beranger, scenario wrtier for William De Mille production for Paramount, will leave New York City about July 23 for her regular semi-annual visit to Los Angeles and Paramounts West Coast Studio. She will confer with Mr. De Mille on the cutting and editing of "Spring Magic," the Edward Knoblock success "The Faun," which she adapted, featuring Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt, supported by Charles de Roche, Robert Agnew and Mary Astor. Conferences will also be held regarding the next William De Mille production following "Spring Magic.'

Al Assisting Rockett

Al Davis, veteran assistant director, is assisting Phil Rosen in the direction of "The Life of Abraham Lincoln," which is being made at the Mayer studios by the Rockett Film Company. Davis is an assistant from the old D. W. Griffith school and has assisted in the direction of many of the screen's most successful pictures.

King Baggott is busily engaged in editing his most recent Jewel production, "Whose Baby Are You?" starring Baby Peggy.

Dorothy Chase as she appears in Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche." Miss Chase was formerly a publicity writer and since changing her profession to that of acting a few months ago, she has made unusual headway, showing brilliant talent such as has brought her much recognition from producers.

Mickey and Venus

Mickey McBan is finishing his part in "The Temple of Venus" at the Fox studios. This is being filmed under Henry Otto's direction. The little starlet is training for the swimming meet to be held in Los Angeles soon, and between his studio work and his appointments at the aquatic tank is quite a busy young man. He plays one of the important roles in Chautard's "Daytime Wives," which is scheduled for early release, and all in all it seems that he is destined for a steady stream of engagements for many months to come, judging from the popularity he has attained with the directors and producers.

Finishes "Love Trap"

Sidney Franklin, father of Jewish characterization, has just finished another of those soul-stirring parts in Ben Wilson's "The Love Trap," featuring The Washburns. So pleased was Oliver Morosco with Franklin's splendid portrayal of Solomon Levy in "Abie's Irish Rose" in which vehicle he starred for 17 weeks at the Morosco Theatre, he was taken to San Francisco to open the play there.

Meighan Due Here

Thomas Meighan is expected to arrive at Paramount's West Coast Studio within the next fortnight to begin work on George Ade's story, tentatively titled "All Must Marry." Alfred E. Green, who will produce this Paramount Picture, is already on the West Coast. There as a possibility that George Ade will accompany the star to California to personally follow the production work on this story.

Eulalia Jensen is winding up her work in "The Magic Skin," at Goldwyn, under George D. Baker. The popular featured player eagerly anticipates a vacation at its conclusion in the near future.

YOUNG ARTIST I OWNER OF RARE BOOKS

Perhaps one of the choices and most valuable collections books in the local film colony i that owned by Charles Cruz, rising young film actor, who ha just finished a long engagemen in Fred Niblo's current picture "Captain Applejack."

Young Cruz hails from Wich ita, Kans., from a family o wealth and position. He is graduate of Washington Univer sity, where he studied to becom an attorney. For several year prior to his entrance into motio pictures he had a hobby for col lecting books, gathering a vol ume here and there until toda his collection is of such import ance as to be listed in the refer ence files of public libraries i many of the largest cities in the country.

Many volumes were purchase from private libraries where they have been kept for a grea many years. The authors o them have now passed practical ly into oblivion, thus making their works ancient and highly valuable. Of the later and more prominent writers his collection includes the works of such men as Balzac, Fielding, Thackeray Dickens, Mark Twain and others whose names are well-known in the literary world.

Scarcely a day passes but what he receives inquiries from different parts of the country about his books. On many occasions he has been offered an attractive price for volumes in his collection, but he refused then and still refuses to part with any books that are almost impossible to duplicate at the present time.

Young Cruz made his debut in pictures two years ago when he appeared with Bebe Daniels in "You Never Can Tell," which Chester Franklin directed. After that he was engaged by Robert Vignola to appear in support of Marion Davies in "Beauty's Worth." He was then featured in J. P. Mill's production "Black Gold," directed by Milburn Moranti. Since then he has appeared in such well-known pictures as "Blood and Sand," "My American Wife," "Rose of the Sea," and others.

Young Cruz has a strong determination to reach the top rung on the ladder of film success and he is already well on the way to his goal. The characterizations he has drawn in pictures have won favorable mention by dramatic critics and photoplay audiences. He is deeply interested in American boy roles and hopes to excel in the portrayal of this type of role.

City. In "The Dangerous Little Demon" and other Universal pictures Ellis gave exceptional performances and is generally rated as a dependable artist.

"The Wild Party," an original story written especially for Miss Walton by Marion Orth, is being directed by Herbert Blache, with Jack Sullivan assisting him. Freeman Wood, Lewis Sargeant, Esther Ralston and Dorothy Valerga.

Others in the "Upside Down" cast are Claire Anderson, Margaret Campbell, William Irving, Frank Farrington and Herbert Fortier.

Some aeroplane views of Universal City, producing center of the Universal Pictures corporation and other companies, recently taken from a plane piloted by Al Wilson, reveal the colorful studio city as a kaleidescopic jumble of Arabian Nights wonders spreading in wild profusion over six hundred acres of varied land. The views were taken by John Bunny of the Universal art title department and have a decidedly "Caligarian" aspect. Giant sets twisting in grotesque shapes and outline make the pictures interesting and give one a new "slant" on the Laemmle film city.

Filming of "Whose Baby Are You?" Baby Peggy's first Universal-Jewel production, has been completed at Universal City.

The tiny screen actress has been lifted from the ranks of "comedy kiddies" and has been made a featured star of big production. Her next Universal feature will be "Editha's Burglar."

A rocky Arizona range, not far from Phoenix, is the locale of Hoot Gibson's new picture "The Ramblin' Kid," being filmed by Universal under the direction of Edward Sedgwick. Carrying a complete camp, tents, portable power plant, portable laboratory and every other adjunct to a studio, the company left Universal City for the desert location for an extended stay to film the outdoor and riding scenes.

Besides Gibson a notable cast accompanied the camp to the Arizona location. Among those appearing in the new picture are William Welsh, W. J. McCully, Charles K. French, Harold Goodwin, G. Raymond Nye, Laura La Plante, Carol Holloway, George King and John Judd.

A carload of horses were taken to Arizona with the cowboys to appear in the riding scene, the camp including an entire Universal City unit.

Mickey McBan

That publicity is a vital factor in motion picture progress is evidenced in the rapid strides Mickey McBan has made within the past few months. This four-year old player is champion swimmer over all comers in his class on the Pacific Coast, and the world's youngest member of the Amateur Athletic Union. He has appeared in thirty-nine GOOD pictures and works continuously. He has real publicity value and that he may be properly publicized I am devoting my time and efforts to him exclusively insofar as boy actors are concerned. I know Mickey McBan will make good.

BRINGS POPULARITY TO BEACH RESORT

In the usual underground and mysterious manner that so many pieces of news gathers and travels, word got around that Balboa Beach was being patronized daily by a group of beautiful young ladies in the most attractive bathing attire ever seen in those parts. This rumor resulted in fishing trips and motor parties being postponed in favor of beach parties, much to the displeasure of Elmer Del Lord, the Mack Sennett director on location at the well known resort.

Del Lord claims the crowd of visitors have become so great that he finds it difficult to get the best work out of his troupe of bathing beauties, who have become the hit of the town. These girls under the direction of the Sennett director have been on location for two weeks, shooting exteriors for the new water comedy for Pathe release.

Attracted by the natural beauty and charm of the group of Mack Sennett mermaids who have been on location at Balboa Beach for the past week, shooting scenes for a forthcoming water comedy for Pathe release, Jack Ward, factory representative and coast manager for the Miller Rubber Company in Akron, Ohio, suggested that he be permitted to equip the troupe with bathing belts, hats and caps, also shoes. Mr. Ward claims they are the prettiest girls he ever saw and far more attractive than those he could ever expect to engage as models for the displaying of his rubber goods.

Such expression and commercial offer is but another recommendation for the ability of the Comedy King to choose from the thousands of aspirants, those young ladies whose beauty appeals.

Filming of "Men in the Raw," Jack Hoxie's latest starring vehicle for Universal, has been completed, and Jack's cowboys are now decorating the top rail of a corral fence at Universal City, waiting for his next production.

The Hoxie picture is a screen version of the popular novel of the Montana cattle country by W. Bert Foster. It was directed by George E. Marshall, who directed Hoxie in his two previous western dramas for Universal, "Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande" and "Where is this West?"

Vol. VI. SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1923 No. 13

In Plain Editorial Words

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle is making a big hit as a vaudeville star back east. It looks like a hit which might make possible his hitting on the screen once more. He is certainly demonstrating that the general public likes him about as much as ever.

The motion picture exposition is proving more successful than most people anticipated. There is no doubt but what it will benefit the industry considerably. But, if there is another similar affair given next year, it is certain it can be made more beneficial by simply profiting by what has been learned in this first attempt.

Hollywood again has its symphony under the stars. Emil Oberhoffer opened his summer season in the Bowl most auspiciously and it seems a foregone conclusion the film colony is going to support the better music he offers most generously. It would do a lot of good if all the muck-rakers who dote on defaming the local film industry could see how picture people flock to the Bowl to hear the symphony concerts.

Freedom from the sieze of censorship," is what the modern motion picture needs most. It is to be hoped some method can be discovered for arousing the public of the whole country to the menace and farce of most censorship. Public clamor is often very effective in bringing justice and the screen of today does need justice.

When President Harding visits Los Angeles next month and proceeds to officially inspect local motion picture studios, it would be a fine idea to impress upon him just how dependent this vast industry is upon helpful treatment from the federal government. Prior to the World War the screen got little recognition from official Washington and even now it is being overlooked in many ways.

There is much to be grateful for in the present situation as it obtains among motion picture exhibitors. Most of them are showing aptitude in the matter of learning on a sure scientific basis just about what their picture-going patrons want and in turn they are letting the producers know with the result that features are being made more and more to order. This is the one real way to avoid making films which fail because they do not measure up with popular demands and it is to be hoped it will become the universal custom for the creators of the film fare to thus work along such safe lines.

According to recent numbers of the trade papers, all of the releasing concerns are better supplied with new pictures than at any time since the cessation of the World War and those who have been fortunate enough to see pre-views of many of the features agree the quality is away above the average. In fact, there is every indication of the better-pictures movement having its greatest momentum right among the majority of the producers, although there are a few picture-makers seemingly with more ability as blunder-makers. In time the process of natural elimination will remedy all situations this latter class cause. So, once again, there is no occasion for pessimism.

It begins to look as if the real start in the making of honest-to-goodness super-production is just being made. 'Tis whispered by those with inside information that Douglas Fairbanks' "The Thief of Bagdad" will actually dwarf "Robin Hood" in all comparisons, including the size of the production. Meanwhile Rex Ingram is completing "Scaramouche," which will prove one of the biggest pictures ever exhibited. Then Jackie Coogan is also completing one of the record-breakers in point of extraordinary qualities and Eric Von Stroheim's "Greed" is bound to be so big as to beggar description. Besides, it is rumored Mary Pickford is seriously considering the making of at least one film which will rival any of them and Charlie Chaplin seems to be well along with plans to star himself in one of those awe-inspiring masterpieces of cinema extravaganza. It is logical to expect much in the way of truly big photoplays from this time on and don't be surprised if someone at present unknown steps forward with still another one.

If there ever was a time when motion pictures producers in general should concentrate on filming original stories written expressly for the screen and meeting all the requirements the average best-seller misses so pathetically, that time is right now—this minute, and, for all the minutes of the next year. There are a thousand good reasons for this, but it certainly suffices to mention only one of them, to-wit: the public demands it! This thing of being unable to recognize the stories on the screen as having anything to do with the published book has long since started to pall on audiences. And yet it is unavoidable to inject "picture values" into the scenario even though it does alter the whole idea of the work from which the adaptation was made. Many of the books purchased at fancy prices do not contain enough picture material to make two reels of action film. It is being proven that the mere use of a famous title is not worth all producers pay for it. There is much delusion about exploitation values of a popular title alone. Meanwhile every original from the brain of the competent writer who knows and understands the scope and limitations of the camera is invariably replete with picture "stuff" only and consequently better cinema art results from them. It is safe to conjecture that if the fans were given a chance to vote on this question, the original story built for photoplay purposes exclusively would win by a tremendous majority. Those producers who still doubt this might do well to try taking a vote on it. It would pay to spend many dollars on this, ascertaining the facts in a vital proposition. It might avert the decline so inevitable if no real enduring screen literature is not created soon.

SOME CURRENT PICTURE HIGH-LIGHTS

A unique and speedy mixture of American pep and English dignity, with Jack Holt as the star and Sigrid Holmquist, the beautiful Swedish actress and Paramount's newest screen find, as leading woman, is the diagnosis of "A Gentleman of Leisure," the feature attraction at Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre this week.

Some daring and artistic feats on the ice are presented by Elsie and Paulsen, said to be the champion ice skaters, and who have just completed an engagement of two seasons at the New York Hippodrome.

Another of the H. C. Witwer "Fighting Blood" comedies, Jimmy Osborne the youthful Los Angeles soloist, and two special novelty features arranged by Sid Grauman are also on the program. Herman Heller conducts the Metropolitan Orchestra and Henry Murtagh plays a second edition of his organ novelty, "Mental Telepathy."

One of the most famous of the long list of novels by Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon" and others depicting American life is "The Man Next Door" which comes in picture form to Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre Monday, July 16.

The story deals with life on a Wyoming ranch and amid society in the city. The contrast in background and environment offered by these two distinctly different locations, gave Director Victor Schertzinger the broadest scope for elaborate production, the sets showing the mansion in the city being most lavish in architecture and furnishings. Alice Calhoun, the star, has opportunity to prove her versatility first as a tom-boy and western girl in the early scenes of the picture, changing to a belle of society when her father becomes a millionaire and moves to the city.

The brilliant cast further includes James Morrison, David Torrence, Adele Farrington, Bruce Boteler and Frank Sheridan.

The music surrounding the feature is especially interesting with Grauman's Symphony Orchestra, Maurice Lawrence conducting, rendering in four concerts daily, a fantasy from Wagner's "Tannhauser" and Edward House at the Wurlitzer playing the popular ballad "Carolina Mammy."

Mrs. Wallace Reid's production, "Human Wreckage," at Grauman's Rialto, takes its place as the greatest moral play ever conceived. The story itself is constructed, not for the purpose of reproducing the life of any individual but rather planned to put over forcefully as many salient truths as could be logically included in the film without injuring its value as entertainment.

It does offer entertainment, not a light, frothy sort of momentary relaxation, but it has the power to tell of interesting things in a forceful manner. After all, people are most entertained when they see a picture from from which they gather new information.

Mrs. Wallace Reid in the leading role, gives a marvelous performance the dominant note of sincerity permeating every scene, while James Kirkwood's characterization is among the finest this splendid actor has given the screen literature. Bessie Love, George Hackathorne, and Harry Northup are other prominent members of the cast.

"LICHEY" OPENS PUBLICITY OFFICE

"Purveyors of Publicity To Their Majesties the Kings and Queens of Movieland" is the way the Howard Lichtenstein Company announces the opening of their new offices in Hollywood. Old boy "Lichey" himself will be in personal charge of this new bureau and he has surrounded himself with a staff of competent newspaper writers who will be able to turn out original copy about the movie stars that should make exceptionally fine reading matter.

For the past number of years Lichtenstein has been manager of publicity and exploitation for the William Fox Corporation throughout the central states and he knows personally more motion picture and city editors than a score of press agents put together. Under the byname of "Lichey" he writes exclusive copy for a number of regional trade papers and in addition his articles are syndicated throughout the country by one of the best daily newspaper syndicates in existence.

Years ago when many of the present film celebrities were playing in stock along the local rialto, Lichtenstein was a press agent—names like Frank Lloyd, then a leading man; Gale Henry, then a musical comedy comedienne; Francis White, then a soubrette; Blossom Seeley, then a prima donna, and many others too numerous to mention. Mr. Lichtenstein sponsored Carmel Myers and made her God Mother of the Fortieth Division at Camp Kearny during the World War. Later he became a member of the Stars and Stripes, the official newspaper of the A. E. F. in France, joining the Selznick Pictures Corporation upon his discharge from the army, and later the Fox Film Corporation as an exploitation and publicity representative.

"Lichey" will be glad to see all of his old friends at his new office in the Conlon Building.

Now Comes Microscopical Pictures

A deal was closed in picture circles this week that promises to bring Los Angeles to the attention of every institution of education in the world and, in the opinion of the principals to the deal, will open up a new era in educational methods.

The Principal Pictures Corporation, through its president, Sol Lesser, has closed with the Louis H. Tolhurst laboratory forces whereby the entire equipment and microscopical processes, invented and developed over a period of eight years by the scientist will be taken over for the production of "non-theatrical" a swell as theatrical pictures for world-wide distribution and for co-operation in educational advancement with institutions of learning everywhere.

Moving pictures of microscopical life have long evaded the screen and eluded scientist. A multitude of problems involving the science of optics, the lighting of the tiny living objects without killing them in the heat of the light-rays, and the adjustment of picture cameras with microscopical apparatus were but a few of the baffling problems that have at last been solved, and the first picture reveals the fact, according to Sol Lesser, that a new and marvelous door has been opened in the world of education leading into a hitherto untouched field of picture exploitation—the world that is uncovered and opened by the microscope.

Efforts will be made, according to Mr. Lesser, to interest leading educators in the preparation of material for screening. Already Professors Bennett M. Allen and Lee Miller, of the Department of Biology of the University of California, Southern Branch, and Ernest C. Moore, Director, have approved in the highest terms the authentic results of Tolhurst's applied science and have volunteered their enthusiastic services to further the cause of visualized instruction as it has been developed by Tolhurst.

"This promises to bring to Los Angeles," says Sol Lesser, "not only added prestige as a center of picture making, but as a center of education second to no city in the world."

The first motion picture to be completed under the perfected processes developed by Mr. Tolhurst, is one on the Bee. It might be termed a screen version of Maeterlinck's great and popular volume, "The Life of the Bee," though it is not liable to excite the scientific doubts with which the mystical Belgium sometimes shrouded his subject. This picture has been made in two versions, one for regular motion picture presentation, and appealing to the popular mind to awaken curiosity and wonder at the amazing miracles met on every hand in a study of the bee. The other version is more scientific in treatment and is designed for classes in biology in high schools and colleges.

A second production is now being made by Mr. Tolhurst in which the spider is the hero and still another is under way dealing with the ant.

"It is up to the screen," says Mr. Lesser, "to make good its educational boasts. It is not functioning as the great blessing we believe it is to mankind if it seeks no other purpose than that of entertainment, important as that is. I believe with every ounce of my being that we are about to give to the world the most important thing that has been developed in connection with the picture industry since moving pictures became a fact. Instruction is carried to the behoder in the terms of exciting, thrilling and sometimes sensational entertainment. Life in its origins is seen stirring in the larvae of the bee; instincts almost majestic in the self-sacrifice they imply are revealed magnified. The world of life is disclosed in a drop of water; the ant hill becomes a citadel in which move mighty hosts; the footprints of a germ-laden fly are disclosed in all their potential menace to human life; the marvels of the circulation of the blood are uncovered infinitely magnified; the range of the world's enlightenment and vision is infinitely extended and the hidden processes of nature brought to light decorously and majestically. In my poinion it is of tremendous importance that this perfected process of motion microsccpic pictures will bring to the civilized world perfectly understandable images of life in its smallest forms. The sting of the bee, for instance, in operation, is magnified on the screen millions of times its size. Various problems that have vexed scientists concerning insect life are solved by the possibility of magnifying the images to such size as to permit a thorough study of their anatomy.

"Since nothing under the microscope is ever loathsome or ugly, the pictures carry an extraordinary fascination. Even the spider assumes the stature and role of a hero—when he destroys man's enemy, the fly.

"Our Bee picture is all ready for exhibition and will soon be in the classrooms of several of the larger eastern institutions of learning, while the theatrical version will soon be released to the theatres of this country and Europe," says Mr. Lesser.

Philo McCullough in Villainous Pose

Philo Progresses

Philo McCullough, who is one of the photoplay stars of yesterday and today—one who seems to have about doubled his popularity in the last year—has just finished a leading role in "Yesterday's Wife," which bids fair to be one of the picture sensations of the coming autumn season. For several years Mr. McCullough has divided his time between being one of the most brilliant villains of the screen and one of the most popular of leading men. Some of the producers consider him a good bet as a director, too, and he has had his fling at commanding things cinema from behind the megaphone, having been responsible directorially for several screen hits. According to advance reports, the versatile Philo has given one of the most notable performances of his long career as Taffy in Richard Walton Tully's production of "Trilby." Another high-light in his recent achievements has been scored in the Palmer play, "Judgment of the Storm." He also played the villain in the Finis Fox production of "The Man Between."

HOW (NOT) TO GET INTO PICTURES

"How can I get into pictures?"

Here's the burning question that is fired at the stars in fifty per cent of their mail from fans.

Helene Chadwick, popular film star, is not one of those who offers "inside tips" on how to break in. She does, however, offer some suggestions on how NOT to attempt to become a movie star. Here are a few:

Do not say you are an expert swimmer, rider or marksman.

The Pacific beaches have more swimmers than will ever be used in pictures for eighty-six years—even if they were all undersea pictures.

There are more riders waiting for Walter Cameron to put them to work than Bill Hart could use if he made sixteen pictures a week.

As to marksmen—Los Angeles has its quota. See local papers.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 9th.—The "Ruggles of Red Gap" company, with James Cruze directing, and a long roster of well-known names, arrived in San Francisco from Eureka on the morning of the Fourth, spent the day, and went on to Los Angeles that night. They certainly didn't seem to have found location work in Eureka a bed of roses, for Jimmie Cruze himself was hobbling round with an injured knee, and the members of the cast and crew were all dirty, tired and unshaved, and very glad of the comforts of the Plaza Hotel.

J. N. Gawane, director of locations with the Joseph M. Schenck Productions, and his wife, spent last week in San Francisco on a little holiday trip and vacation.

Max Graf, head of the Graf Productions, returned last Saturday from an extended business trip to the East. He will begin work at once on preparations for the actual shooting of the company's next picture, which will be a big sea story, with an all-star cast, and the title is "Half-Dollar Bill."

Madge Bellamy spent the week-end in San Francisco to make personal appearances with the opening at the Tivoli Theatre of "The Soul of the Beast," the big circus picture in which she was starred. Oscar, the elephant in person, was also promised to the public, but for some reason he wasn't present.

Richard Tucker, well-known leading man of both the stage and the silent drama, arrived in town last Thursday to play with Marjorie Rambeau, star of the New York stage, during one of her rare trips to the coast. Miss Rambeau and her all-star company will open at the Capitol Theatre on July 15th in "The Goldfish," her great Broadway success of lost season, to be followed by the trial of a new play, "The Valley of Content," which if it comes up to the expectations, will be her next season's vehicle in New York. Mr. Tucker has just finished playing a most important part in the Fox production of "Cameo Kirby."

Wayne Mack, big, good-natured production manager with the Pallas Film Corporation, is very ill at the Holland Hotel with a general nervous break-down.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, popular both on the screen and stage, were in town for a week making personal appearances at the Warfield Theatre with their picture, "Modern Marriage." They are using an idea that although it is not absolutely new has at least been so seldom seen as to be pretty much of a novelty. In the midst of the picture just before one of the big scenes, the lights fade out, and in place of the picture the living actors appear, and play out the scene to its climax. Three other actors are also employed, and the bit of a play within a picture is meeting with a warm reception.

Jack Holt was among the week-end guests at the St. Francis.

The production of "Greed" under the direction of Eric Von Stroheim, is making most satisfactory progress. Dale Fuller was duly murdered last week, and the "remains," and the cameras, got a wild ride to the Emergency Hospital in an ambulance, but for a person who has so recently had her throat cut Dale seems pretty lively, and expects to finish, and return to the Sout the very near future. Jean Hersholt's pected departure has been delayed on count of the necessity of one or two takes.

Charles Ruggles completed his very cessful six weeks' engagement at the cazar last Saturday. On account of a g popular demand, the last week, he gave the second time in the run, the new, amusing comedy, "The Nervous Wre which he expects to use as a starring v cle on Broadway next winter.

Lawrence Grant, long a screen favo and Roland Bottomly came to San Franci last week to be here several weeks as m bers of Marjorie Rambeau's company at Capitol Theatre.

Allen Connor, for three years a juve with the Lasky stock company, and bef that an assistant cameraman and direc but with little stage experience, has recognition for himself by the very beaut performance he is giving in Margaret glin's production here of "The Woman No Importance." In spite of lack of exp ence on the spoken stage he is playin difficult role in the Wilde play, and play it so well, that Miss Anglin regards him a great find.

The Duncan Sisters opened on Sun night before a delighted audience at the cazar Theatre in "Topsy and Eva," a mu al version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It very gay, and a very modern "Uncle To Cabin," however, with no blood-hounds, no ice for Eliza to cross, but with so good songs, and on the whole very amus

HERE'S A VOTE FOR THE CREATIVE WRITER

The writer, who creates stories for the screen, has a great advocate and champion in Chester Bennett, well-known director and producer.

Bennett contends that the writer who writes directly for the motion picture screen and keeps its possibilities always in mind, will give the director better material to work with than the literary light who disposes of the motion picture rights to his fiction stories after they have been published in book or magazine form.

"The literary man must be more or less a descriptive writer," states Bennett, "while the writer for the screen has to dwell only on plot building and characterization of the individual players." He continued, "Some of the greatest of the screen successes have been made from the efforts of original stories for the screen. D. W. Griffith's great picture, 'Hearts of the World,' was the work of a practically unknown screen writer. Some of De Mille's most artistic pictures are the original work of authors who write only for the silver sheet."

Bennett continued, "My little screen play, 'Divorce,' starring Jane Novak, which is having quite a record run throughout the country, was an original screen story by a practical motion picture author."

"The picture I am now making," added Bennett, "'The Lullaby,' also starring Miss Novak ,is the creative work of an author who writes only for the screen."

"Give the screen writer a chance" is Bennett's slogan.

Enter: Ye Merrie Laugh-Spotter

the great onward and upward trend of on pictures a new type of genius has evolved. It is that of the "laugh-spot- Although he, or she, deals solely in y for the screen, the job is a harrowing For the laugh-spotter must detect laughs in comedy, melodrama, news s and what-not, tabulate these laughs on the basis of the tabulation, a final sion is made as to whether the picture orth while.

here are three degrees of laugh-spotters: (1 the spotter who sits in the cold, dark my projection room and solemnly re- s pictures with laughs in them; (2) the ter in the motion picture exchange who reports from Spotter No. 1, makes his tabulations on the laughs and trans- his findings to the sales force. (3) spotter who sits in the theatres and ob- es the laughs in the audience.

some cases, as those of First National the Ince Studios, the laugh-spotters are ials of the company. Therefore, their are not in danger, but they are sub- ed to criticism if they fail in any part of r work. Ince himself, for instance, is of the laugh-spotters for his studios; eral Manager Richard A. Rowland and retary-Treasurer H. O. Schwalbe act as h-spotters for First National. Mack nett is a laugh-spotter for himself, and liam Fox is the most serious-looking h-spotter in the industry, ably abetted V. R. Sheehan.

"Crowding laughs into a picture is the most serious work in the world," says R. A. Rowland. "It is so difficult that, even after a picture has been completed, it takes an expert to tabulate the laughs. The man who directed the picture might believe he had failed utterly and then find that the public goes into an uproar over it."

When "The Hottentot," a screen adaptation of William Collier's play was filmed, at Culver City, the knowing ones said it would fall flat. They declared the situations in it would not appeal to the public. A private showing took place, at which one hundred persons and two laugh-spotters were present. Mr. Ince was one of these spotters. Three hundred laughs were recorded. The report seemed incredible. Next the picture was shown in Chicago. The spotters that attended the opening performance there reported 450 laughs! Mr. Ince declared that during the steeplechase race scene he had lost much of the effect because the audience became "too hilarious."

This one incident emphasized the value of the laugh-spotter. If the word of the pessimistic ones had been taken after the filming of the picture it might have been made over at great expense and the laugh-provoking scenes in it lost.

"Laughter," says H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer of First National, "is closely related to tears. Violent laughter is a form of hysteria and so is violent grief. The man who laughs hilariously at anything has lost complete control of his emotions. The man who smiles inwardly is an expert on humor, because he retains self-control and while enjoying himself is able to observe the effect on others. That type of man makes the ideal laugh-spotter."

This statement is borne out in the case of Charlie Chaplin and Harold Lloyd. Chaplin is always serious in his action and when he does smile it seems forced. Lloyd smiles as if he had to do it.

The laugh-spotters scored a triumph in the case of "Bell Boy 13," which was shown at the New York Strand with fair success and afterward swept the entire country. When the first prints of this comedy were brought to New York the laugh-spotters said it would prove an excellent box office attraction—that is, it would draw crowds and be talked about. After the Strand showing the laugh-spotters were told their reports had been too optimistic. But three weeks later, as reports on the picture began coming in from various parts of the country, the laugh-spotters found that they had been completely vindicated.

Anyone who desires to study the art of laugh-spotting is advised to attend a movie show determined not to smile but to observe the smiles, chuckles and laughs from others —to count them and then form an opinion as to the laugh-drawing power of the picture if it is a comedy, and the "comedy relief" in it if it is a melodrama.

Re-Visiting a Studio

By DONALD H. CLARKE

ictor Seastrom, the Swedish director had ju begun to make his first American pic- tu , "The Master of Man," from Sir Hall C he's story of the same name. He came o he set in his shirt sleeves. No cap with vi r shading the back of the neck, adorned h head; no megaphone decorated his m th; no puttees encircled his legs. He g down to business immediately. A visi- t , who had not been in a studio for sev- e years, remarked that the distinguished f igner looked very little like a director. "Where are his megaphone, and his cap a his puttees " the visitor inquired.

nd thus was called to the mind of those w o hadn't noticed the change, so gradual h it been, that directors nowadays have g n up dressing for the part. An immedi- a canvass of the Goldwyn studio revealed t Charles Brabin, then engaged on Elinor G n's "Six Days," was the only director w o was wearing a cap, and he was wearing it n the ordinary way, instead of reversed. N ne of the directors were clad any differ- e ly from the other studio officials. Any o of them might have stepped in front of t camera and portrayed the role of mod- e business man without change of cos- t ne.

The visitor of the day also noticed some- t ng else that puzzled him. Lambert Hill- y , directing "The Spoilers" called "Going!" i tead of "Camera!" when, after necessary r hearsals he ordered the cameraman to be- g d grinding.

Hillyer was glad to explain that.

"We noticed that actors were likely to be- c ne self-conscious when they heard the w rd 'Camera! which informed them that t e picture was being made," he said. "In fact, some of them were so affected that they forgot the action in which they had just been rehearsed. So, some of us adopted the word 'Going!' I've found that is is a much better signal than the old one. Perhaps some psychologist can explain why, although it starts the cameraman cranking just as well ,it doesn't bother the players so much."

Stuart Paton, popular director, who may lose his eyesight as a result of being hit by a silver dollar tossed into the ring at the Hollywood Legion Stadium after a boxing contest.

At about this juncture a hoarse voice called "Griffith! Griffith!"

"That's the radio call boy," was explained to the curious visitor. "It sounds like Tod Browning calling for Raymond Griffith right now. The radio call boy consists of five loud speakers operated from the executive offices. It covers the sixty acres occupied by the studio in a moment.

"There's another point that would not be noticed even in a visit of several days," the informant continued. "That is the unit system of making pictures. The director here has full charge of his production, so that it really is a one-man work, stamped with the director's full individuality. The old system of conferences, with the old criticism that it aroused that 'too many cooks spoil the broth' has gone into the discard along with other traditions of the movies."

After this particular visitor had finished a day of sightseeing, and had remarked among other things, upon the big, office-like discipline with which the studio was run, he was asked what had impressed him most.

"Well," was the reply, after a moment's thought, "what impressed me most here and in the other studios wasn't any one of the changes in styles of dressing, or of doing things, it was the contagious spirit of comraderie and enthusiasm that seems to animate every one engaged in this fascinating industry.

"And, of course, I never saw so many pretty girls in one place at one time in my life before. And I don't expect to again until I make a return trip."

INCE BUNGALOW IS FILM EXHIBIT FEATURE

One of the most interesting exhibits of the Motion Picture Exhibit which opened here this week is the Thomas H. Ince bungalow. Furnished in colonial style in keeping with the architecture of the studios at Culver City, the walls of the bungalow are hung with pictures of old Inceville where some of the most famous productions of the industry were made and also with pictures of "Ince-Made Picture Stars" and "Ince-Made Directors."

Included in the gallery, which numbers some of the most famous names of the industry, are: W. S. Hart, Dorothy Dalton, Sessue Hayakawa, Tsuru Aoki, Enid Bennett, Enid Markey, Bessie Barriscale, Howard Hickman, Charles Ray, Frank Keenan, Clara Horton, Madge Bellamy, Douglas MacLean, Doris May, Lloyd Hughes, Louise Glaum, Sylvia Breamer, George Beeban, H. B. Warner, Robert McKim, Mildred Harris, Bessie Love, Olive Thomas, Billie Burke, Gladys George and William Desmond. All of these stars made their first "big" pictures with Thomas H. Ince and were started by him on the road to stardom.

Included in the list of directors who got their initial training under Mr. Ince are John Griffith Wray, Rowland Lee, Frank Borzage, Del Andrews, Lambert Hillyer, Jerome Storm, Fred Niblo, Reginald Barker, Walter Edwards. All of these men are known nationally today as leading directors of the picture world.

FITZMAURICE GETS FILM UNDER WAY IN ROME

Filming of "The Eternal City," Samuel Goldwyn's first George Fitzmaurice-First National production, is under way in Rome, Italy, according to cables from Mr. Fitzmaurice.

The company arrived at the Italian capital June 14th and within four days were organized and on the fifth day began "shooting."

Ouida Bergere, responsible for the screen continuity for Sir Hall Caine's famous story, is completing her work at Arnold Bennett's Italian villa near Rome.

The entire cast, including Barbara La Marr, Richard Bennett, Lionel Barrymore, Montague Love and Bert Lytell, are now located at the Grand Hotel, Rome. The technical staff, consisting of four laboratory experts, two cameramen and a boss carpenter, arrived last week via Naples.

First National's European offices are co-operating with Mr. Goldwyn's Italian staff.

BEAUTY CONTEST WINNER SIGNS 5-YEAR CONTRACT

Two months after entering moving pictures by the beauty contest route, Muriel Reynolds has signed a contract for five years with Director Fred Caldwell. She will be farmed out while not employed in Caldwell productions. Miss Reynolds has just completed a very clever part, a comedy characterization with Henry Lehrman at Robertson Cole's. She will be remembered as Cinderella in the play of that name lately at the Hollywood Bowl and the Philharmonic Auditorium.

Mr. Caldwell chose her from five hundred aspirants in a beauty contest a few short months ago.

MONTAGUE GLASS HIT IS NOW A PHOTOPLAY

Samuel Goldwyn's screen production of Montague Glass' classic, "Potash and Perlmutter," was this week completed under the direction of Clarence Badger at the Fort Lee studios.

In addition to Barney Bernard, Alexander Carr and Vera Gordon, the roster of players includes Martha Mansfield, Hope Sutherland, Ben Lyons, Lee Kohlmar, Eduard Durand, De Sacia Mooers and Jerry Devine.

Twenty-four beautiful models wearing next "winter's advance" fashions, were supplied by Mme. Frances and Anna Tappe. Other novelty effects were secured by Mr. Goldwyn.

"Potash and Perlmutter" will be an early September release through Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Ricketts in Lee's Cast

Thomas Ricketts has been added to the cast of Rowland V. Lee's production for Fox, "You Can't Get Away With It," a Gouverneur Morris story. This veteran actor, who incidentally was one of the first directors of motion pictures, has the part of an elderly gallant. He has in the photoplay, a notion of winning one of the beauties in the notions. Mr. Rickett's characterization of J. A. Lamb in Mr. Lee's recently released picturization of "Alice Adams" was considered memorable by the critics.

A. A. Signs 'Em Fast

Madge Bellamy has been signed by Associated Authors to handle the leading feminine role in Elmer Harris' screen version of Frank R. Adams' Cosmopolitan story, "The Love Hater," production commencing this week. Kathleen Clifford, who portrayed the role of Queen Berengaria in "Richard the Lion Hearted," the Frank Woods production for Associated Authors, has also been engaged for this picture. Lloyd Ingraham is directing under the personal supervision of Elmer Harris.

FORMER EDITOR OF "THE DIAL" NOW IN MOVIES

Michael Dark, formerly editor of "The Dial," the liberal periodical issued in New York, is to be seen, on the screen in Rowland V. Lee's production for Fox, "You Can't Get Away With It." Mr. Dark or rather Mr. Johnson for Michael Dark is a literary alias, came to California some time ago for his health which had suffered from the stress of editorial duties. He could neither bear the tedium of complete idleness nor risk for a time engaging in the strain of writing, and so undertook acting as an occupation so novel to him as to be refreshing.

SHRIEK-ESS FINISHES "PRINTER'S DEVIL"

Kathryn McGuire, who is co-featured with Ben Turpin in "The Shriek of Araby," has just finished her latest engagement as leading woman in Warner Brothers' production of "The Printer's Devil," with Wesley Parry and Harry Meyers. Although a small town girl herself, the pictures in which Miss McGuire has played have always been laid in big cities, except for the one in which she is now appearing and the one she has just finished. "The Crossroads of New York," "The Silent Call," "The Bronze Woman," "The Flame of Life," "Playing with Fire"—these are some of the dramatic productions in which Kathryn McGuire has played since she left the Sennett lot. Miss McGuire is, incidentally, one of The Wampas Stars of Tomorrow, 1922 Edition, and recently won first prize in a national beauty contest conducted by a group of eastern fan magazines in which she was the only winning motion picture player.

Burns Supports "Wes"

Edward Burns of "East is West" fame has been engaged for a leading role in Wesley Barry's latest starring picture, temporarily titled "The Country Kid." Burns will be remembered for his stellar work in several recent screen successes. "The Country Kid" is being produced by the Warner Bros. at their West Coast studios under the direction of William Beaudine. It is an original story by Julien Josephson of the Warners' scenario staff.

Eddie Phillips, well-known juvenile, whose last picture was Jane Murfin's "The Sign," is working nights and sleeping days. The reason is that when William Randolph Hearst was in Hollywood, he saw "The Daughter of Mother McGinn" and decided to add considerable to this Cosmopolitan feature. As several of the principals were tied up in other pictures, it was necessary to do the work nights. Paul Powell is directing the added scenes in "Mother McGinn."

ULVER CITY STUDIO OPENS; TO OPERATE ON LEASING BASIS TO INDEPENDENTS

The motion picture industry general and independent pro- cers in particular will be in- rested in the announcement ade this week of the opening the Culver City studio in lver City, which, according to lph DeLacy, a well-known d popular figure in the motion cture world who has assumed e management of the plant, ll be operated strictly on a sing basis and cater exclu- vely to the independent pro- cer.

Ideally located on Venice ulevard with the Thomas H. ce, Goldwyn and Hal Roach udios almost within a stone's row from it, the studio is mpletely equipped and offers ery facility for the successful d economical filming of pic- res. It has light and airy essing rooms, beautiful execu- e offices, still room, projec- n room, direct current light- g and, in fact, everything sential for the production of e highest quality films.

Mr. DeLacy is one of the old- t technical directors in the otion picture business, having en associated with D. W. riffith during the production of ntolerance," "The Clansman" d his other immortal photo- ays and who for the past three ars was technical director for e Fine Arts studios in Holly- ood.

In taking over the Culver City udio he aims to give indepen- nt producers the benefit of s knowledge in the construc- on of sets and to otherwise co- erate with them in every way ssible. The policy of the udio is to give the producer me-like quarters with maxi- um service at minimum cost d those acquainted with Mr. eLacy are certain that he will ake the greatest success with is new venture.

The studio is located at 6529 enice boulevard and beginning onday Mr. DeLacy will be on and at the studio to welcome roducers who would care to in- pect the plant.

Camera work will soon be tarted on "My Mamie Rose," niversal-Jewel, in which Mary hilbin is to have the principal ole. Lenore J. Coffee is com- leting the adaption of the wen Wister novel to terms of he screen.

DEXTER IS SIGNED FOR "FLAMING YOUTH"

Elliott Dexter, screen favorite who has appeared as lead in some of the most noteworthy films of the last year, including the Cecil De Mille production "Adam's Rib," is to play a prominent role in "Flaming Youth," a First National picture, directed by John Francis Dillion, which goes into production next week.

"Flaming Youth," is an adaptation of Warner Fabian's widely read novel of the same title, which caused a sensation when published two years ago on account of the manner in which it treated life as lived among a certain class of wealthy, pleasure-seeking Americans.

The play centers about the loves and lives of a modern mother and her three daughters. Dexter enacts the dramatic role of "Dr. Bobs," the one man who is the confidante of the mother and the three girls and, as a member of their household, plays a prominent part in shaping the destiny of the three unconventional sisters.

The part is ideally suited to Dexter, whose career both on the stage and before the motion picture camera has been an extensive one.

"Flaming Youth," is to be interpreted to the screen by a brilliant all-star cast. The other screen celebrities who have already been announced to play in this highly dramatic picture, are Colleen Moore, who will enact the leading role and Milton Sills, who will be seen in the principal male part.

Stars Give Party

On the completion of her work in Elinor Glyn's "Six Days" which Charles Brabin directed at the Goldwyn studios, Corinne Griffith was given a party at the Ambassador by Bessie Love and Carmel Myers. Guests present included Mae Busch, Blanche Sweet, Katherine and Marjorie Bennett, June Mathis, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Niblo, Walter Morosco, Raymond Griffith, Herbert Howe and Kenneth Hawks.

FANS GET CHANCE TO "SHOOT" HUGHES

Movie fans who go in for snapshots of movie stars were given an opportunity to try their kodaks on Lloyd Hughes, popular leading man in Mary Pickford's "Tess of the Storm Country" today.

At the Motion Picture Exposition in front of the Owl Drug Store exhibit, Lloyd Hughes put on his make-up and posed for amateur photographers. For the best amateur snapshot of Mr. Hughes, the Owl Drug Store awarded a handsome kodak. Other prizes were awarded for the next best snapshots.

Promptly at two o'clock Mr. Hughes appeared and placed himself at the disposal of amateur photographers. The contest was free. All were invited to bring their cameras and try their skill on the handsome face of the young leading man.

Mr. Hughes' appearance opposite Mary Pickford in "Tess" made him one of the most popular leading men in films. He has just completed his engagement opposite Colleen Moore in First National's "The Huntress."

WARNERS BUILD ODD HUT FOR PICTURE EXPOSITION

A simple hut constructed with logs from California redwoods and prettily dressed in an atmosphere of the open north represents Warner Brothers studios at the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition being held in Los Angeles this month.

The Warner exhibit is entirely different than those offered by other studios, inasmuch as simplicity marks the beauty of the display. The hut used is a reproduction of the one built for the recently completed "Where The North Begins," which is to have its world's premiere showing in Los Angeles just before the exposition closes.

Rin-tin-tin, world famous police dog who is starred in this picture of the north is the only living being exhibited by the Warners at the exposition. He proudly parades the little hut every day and night to the pleasure of interested spectators. As a special offering the Warners have arranged with Lee Duncan, owner of the dog, for Rin-tin-tin to attempt to break his high jump record of eleven feet.

BEN WILSON HAS PLAN FOR BIG PICTURES

The future production plans of Ben Wilson, who is engaged in making a series of special features for release by Grand-Asher, contemplate some of the most elaborate settings and effects obtainable for screen offerings, without entering into a program of wasteful extravagance. In a word, while there will be no effort to hold down the pictures to their detriment, everything concerned will be carefully watched to eliminate waste and to get the most possible out of everything employed. Thus, to create a number of important interior scenes for some of his productions, Mr. Wilson bought outright the interior fittings of the old Botsford mansion in Los Angeles, consisting of wonderful panneling, grille-work, doors, windows, etc. These can be used in a number of ways and will be far more effective than anything that could be built to order. Some of the fittings will be seen in "Other Men's Daughters," his third production just starting at the Berwilla studio.

"I am inevitably favorable to wholesome, human interest stories," says Mr. Wilson, "and all of my pictures will be of the sort that appeals to the great majority of picture-goers. I am not striving for outre or bizarre effects. I want naturalness and humanness above all else."

Bryant Washburn and Mabel Forrest are featured in the first three pictures; "Mine to Keep," "The Love Trap and Other Men's Daughters." Cast of latter pictures are not yet chosen.

In a short time the production by Mr. Wilson for Grand-Asher of the first of Bille Rhodes' special features will be started. It is from an original story by Adam Hull Shirk and is called "Leave it to Gerry." Miss Rhodes will be surrounded by a competent cast and her role is one in which her proclivities for lively action, almost Tomboyish in character, will have full play.

Lillian Leighton Home

Lillian Leighton, interpreter of that most most famous of western heroines, Ma Pettingill, has returned from Eureka, where she has been locationing with the "Ruggles of Red Gap" company for two weeks. Ma will continue her way to the film public at the Lasky plant under the supervision of Director James Cruze.

MRS. JACK PICKFORD REFUSES STAGE OFFERS

Strange as are the adventures recorded on the screen of today, Director Donald Crisp, who is making "Ponjola," which will be presented by Producer Sam E. Rork through First National, has experienced a few real thrills that will compare most favorably with anything ever caught by a camera.

Crisp has been managing a big American studio in England during the last two years and quite incidentally he knew the ins and outs of Scotland Yard. When the British Intelligence Department desired to get some first-hand information regarding conditions in Russia, Crisp was assigned for extremely dangerous espionage work which carried him into the nest of Bolshevism.

Twice a week for more than five months he flew across the German border into Russia. And twice each week an airplane crossed in the darkness, picked him up and whirled him back to a spot where he could communicate with London.

"Moscow," says Crisp, "being the show place of Russia, does not indicate the decaying influences of the red terror. But Petrograd and points in the north are almost a nightmare. Dirt and disease everywhere; danger on every side and nothing strong enough to attempt to stem the tide of terror which the Bolsheviks have introduced."

Crisp won three medals in the South African war against the Boers, one being the coveted Distinguished Conduct Medal, which he earned at the battle of Tulgula Heights.

His wide knowledge of South Africa will be invaluable in the filming of Cynthia Stockley's story of that locale.

Completes Continuity

Bradley King has completed the scenario of "Anna Christie," Pauline Lord's latest hit, which had such a tremendous run in New York and is now playing with the original cast to packed houses in London. John Griffith Wray, who directed Mrs. Wallace Reid in "Human Wreckage," has been selected by Thomas H. Ince to make this picture, which is now being cast. It is expected that actual shooting will start within a week or ten days.

The prop room at Grand-Studio is rapidly becoming one of the most complete in Hollywood. The immense amount of so-called trick props used in comedies adds constantly to the supply and a glance behind the scenes of the plant is like looking at the back stage of a big extravaganza of the good old "Black Crook" type.

WHEN IGNORANCE AND SUPERSTITION CLASH

The conflict between ignorance and superstition on the one hand and modernism on the other—a conflict which has been in full force in China for many generations—forms the background for "Thundergate," described as a thrilling drama of Chinese and American life and which is now being filmed at the United Studios under the direction of Joseph De Grasse.

The story of "Thundergate" is based on the striking resemblance of an American, to the son of a Chinese lord, the head of forces using every means to hinder the erection of modern bridges by a construction firm which the American represents. Through circumstances the young American is forced to masquerade as the son of the Chinese lord and discovers in this way ,not only that some of his American associates were in the pay of the reactionaries, but also that the girl to whom he is engaged to marry was plotting his downfall.

Owen Moore, debonair and dashing as ever, enacts this central and most important role and around him the whole plot revolves. It is the first time he has essayed a Chinese characterization and according to statements issued by those who have seen his work, he is a veritable revelation in the episodes in which he does his masquerading. In fact, it is predicted this characterization will go down in cinema history as one of its greatest achievements. In some of the scenes wherein he is reduced to the lowly and unenviable station of a derelict, it is said his artistry is at its zenith of power.

Inasmuch as Mr. Moore has been starring in light comedy features for the last three years and has established himself as one of the greatest straight comedians the screen ever had, it will be difficult for many to believe that in "Thundergate" his work is entirely dramatic, just the reverse from anything he has done in recent years. Of course originally he was the foremost exponent of romantic drama on the screen—back in the earliest days of motion pictures—but many people of this day have forgotten that. It is freely predicted they will be reminded of this popular star's exceptional versatility when they see him in the principal role in "Thundergate," which First National promises as one of its foremost releases in the early fall.

LEGION STADIUM IS IMPROVED

Last Friday night Roy Marshall, manager of the Hollywood Legion Stadium, announced that the Legion Post was going to show its appreciation of the large attendance at the regular Friday night boxing shows in a "concrete manner."

To the writer, who witnessed the activities around the stadium, the boys are most certainly making good on Roy's statement.

The entire reserved section of the stadium has been excavated to make the grade of seats four times what it was when there was only the dirt floor to rest pedals on. The whole floor has been concreted, each row of seats being on a step. The aisles are inclined, making it easy for entrance and exit. Each seat has been staggered and raised that every one will have an unobstructed view of every foot of the floor of the ring. This should be good news to all of the Hollywood fans, as the shows have become so popular that one has great trouble securing seats closer than the tenth row unless they have a season reservation. The bleacher seats, which have always been good, are bettered by the changes. This should be good news for the gallery gods.

Another improvement, which, while probably not as noticeable as some others, will add greatly to the enjoyment of the shows is the installment of ventilators. A system has been installed which will completely change the air in the stadium every ten minutes. This will be particularly appreciated by the ladies who attend the shows in such great numbers.

Roy Marshall announces that the main event for the opening show, July 20th, will be Bobbie Harper and Sailor Ashmore. The semi-windup will be a return match between Jimmy Hackley and "K. O." Kelly. Hackley won from Kelly on their last appearance and this was the first bout which Kelly ever lost. Incidentally Kelly has promised to reverse the decision.

Joe Medina has also asked for an opportunity to make good for the decision he lost to Lewis. This request has been granted and these two good boys will be in the fifth bout on the occasion of the re-opening show.

June Celebrates Birthday

They say it takes a busy man to write a letter. So it takes a busy woman, perhaps, to have a birthday. Even if June Mathis, Goldwyn Editorial Director, had been tempted to ignore the one she just had, it was not allowed to pass unnoticed by members of her staff, who gave her a luncheon party in the studio commissary. Present were Carey Wilson, Katherine Kavanaugh, Tom Miranda, Harriet and Mildred Morris, Maron Frances Lee and Vivian Newcomb, to say nothing of creamed chicken, American Beauties, bonbons and bon mots.

CRISP, WAR HERO, PUTS THRILLS IN "PONJOLA"

Marilyn Miller Pickford, wife of Jack Pickford, who is spending a vacation with her husband in Hollywood, has turned down several offers to appear in vaudeville and special acts while away from Broadway, it has been learned. Marilyn, before departing for the coast, signed a new three-year contract to star in another Zeigfeld show. When she reached the coast she was swamped with offers to appear in vaudeville and special shows.

The Orpheum Circuit was one of the first to make an attractive proposal for her services but she refused "because I want to have a real vacation." Sid Grauman, theatre magnate of Los Angeles and Hollywood, has been the most recent to offer an attractive engagement. Yesterday, Mrs. Pickford refused an offer of $5,000 to play at Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre in Los Angeles for one week.

The story is better told in the two telegrams which follow:

The telegram from Sid Grauman to Mrs. Jack Pickford:

"Understand you are going to spend a few weeks' vacation in Los Angeles. Would you consider play one week's engagement at Grauman's Metropolitan? Agree to pay you $500 for said one week and would only want six to eight minutes at each performance your engagement to open at your option within next three weeks. Would consider it great favor if you will wire me at once if you can see your way clear to accept. Sid Grauman."

Mrs. Pickford's telegram, sent yesterday to Sid Grauman:

"I want to thank you for your kind offer but wish to decline as I am having my first real vacation since 'Sally' opened in New York three years ago. I want to be with Jack while he makes his picture and will leave with him on location in a few days. Thanking you very much indeed for your lovely offer and with best wishes for your continued success. Marilynn Miller Pickford."

Jack left the middle of last week on location for his new picture, tentatively titled, "Valley of the Wolf," which George Hill is directing.

Production work has started on George Melford's production of "The Light That Failed," Rudyard Kipling's classic, with Jacqueline Logan, Percy Marmont, Sigrid Holmquist, David Torrence, Luke Cosgrove and Mabel Van Buren featured in the cast. F. McGrew Willis adapted the story to the screen and Ralph Block has been named as production editor for this Paramount Picture. The initial scenes of the story were filmed at Catalina Island.

NCE BUYS RIGHTS TO HISTORICAL NOVEL

Following the announcement at Thomas H. Ince will pro-ce "Anna Christie" and "Bar-ra Freitchie," for First Na-nal release, now comes word at he had purchased the motion ture rights to "The Barber New Orleans," which had a ccessful run as a stage play th William Faversham as the r, and which was adapted m the popular novel, "The de of Victor Jallot," by Ed-rd Childs Carpenter. Mr. rpenter is the author of "The nderella Man," "The Easy rk," "The Dragon Fly," "The pes of Pan," and other big ge successes.

Mr. Ince has purchased the tion picture rights to "The rber of New Orleans," which ll also be a First National pic-re, in line with his policy of tting out screen productions th big dramatic moments in em, written by playrights of ven merit. Mr. Carpenter, o is President of the American matists' Society, has never t cut out a play that has failed public approval.

"The Barber of New Orleans" als with a period in American story when the Louisiana Pur-ase was made, and the scene laid in the Crescent City. All the picturesque atmosphere of ivalry and loyalty to high als is brought out in the story. e hero, Victor Jallot, is Admirable Crichton—barber, ncing master, duelist, surgeon, n of letters, musician beloved ke by women and men.

One of the biggest scenes in e play is the formal ratifica-n of the Louisiana Purchase. is took place at New Orleans d consisted of the raising of e American flag and the lower-g of the French colors.

In novel form "The Barber of w Orleans" had a tremendous le, running through two edi-ns. Mr. Carpenter, in discuss-g the story, said the idea of it me to him from letters which re written in New Orleans at e time of the Louisiana Pur-ase. From a historical point view the narrative is accurate every detail, Mr. Carpenter ving been aided in the pre-ration of his material by John ach McMaster,

"In those days there was no ore picturesque spot in the orld than New Orleans," said r. Carpenter. "The people were gh-spirited, courteous, hospit-le, generous to the degree of ving their all to aid friends in stress. Their customs were aint, mediaeval. The barbers that time were men of much portance. Besides performing nsorial tasks, they were men miliar with surgery and were ale fellows, well met,' who new all the gossip of their com-unity."

TO REDUCE FOOTAGE IN FEATURE FILMS

That all future productions bearing his name will be somewhere within the five and six reel footage, and will never exceed this number, is the statement made by Harry Rapf, in charge of a production unit for Warner Brothers. The departure in policy follows an exchange of correspondence with hundreds of exhibitors and deep study of the situation. It is also the result of the continuous controversy that has been in the foreground of discussion apropos short versus long features.

"I intend to reduce the footage, and thus fall in line with the demand of the exhibitors," Mr. Rapf says. "From querying them, I have come to the conclusion that they demand pictures within these limits, and do not take to the seven, eight and nine reel features.

"It is quite difficult to tell a story in such a short number of reels, but it done must be in the exhibitors interest, and I shall work to this end. As the best means to further this, I shall spend a lot of time with the scenario writer eliminating the superfluous, and shaping the continuity so that when the picture is cut it will not hurt the continuity. This means that a great deal of very hard work and time will be needed before the picture is shot."

Mr. Rapf is earnest in assuring the exhibitors of his intention to provide them the same high-class product they have had in the past. While improving on each picture, he means to keep in mind the footage which he considers an important factor in entertainment.

His latest production, "Brass," adapted from Charles G. Norris' novel of marriage and divorce, has been receiving favorable comment from many exhibitors. Sidney Franklin directed it, and Monte Blue and Marie Prevost co-starred in it.

McRAE RETURNING HERE FROM THE ORIENT

Henry McRae, American motion picture producer, and member of his camera expedition into the Orient, have sailed from the Far East, after several months in quest of out-of-the-beaten-path scenes.

News of the beginning of the return to Hollywood of this party was cabled this week to Mr. McRae's representatives here by Dal Clawson, chief of the producer's camera staff upon the expedition. The wire was sent from Bangkok, Siam.

In the course of the McRae exploration of the Orient the party journeyed through Japan, China, South India and Siam. From the reports from McRae from time to time the amount of footage taken during the sojourn in the Orient is close to a half-million feet, and from remarks by the head of the unit, the objective of the unusual has been fully attained.

Dix is Realistic

Richard Dix believes in realism. In C. B. DeMille's "Ten Commandments," Dix plays a carpenter. He purchased a new jumper and went into the Lasky carpenter shop with it on to trade for a used one. The trade was easily made and as Dix left the shop he spilled some nails from the pocket of his old jumper. "Pick 'em up," shouted the foreman of the shop as Dix kept on going. So back came Dix and "picked 'em up." So good was his make-up that the boss carpenter thought Dix one of his hired hands.

CARPENTER FALLS AND HAS TO BE EXTRICATED

While working this week in the Fox Studios above one of the giant hollow pillars which are seen in the big department store setting for Rowland V. Lee's production, "You Can't Get Away With It," one of the studio carpenters missed his footing and plunged twenty feet down in the great tube.

The crash of the fall, which was broken by braces on the interior of the pillar and several unprintable remarks uttered by the carpenter during the descent, brought assistance in the form of a block and tackle.

He was hoisted back to safety unhurt except for a few scratches.

Dan Keefe, Mr. Lee's assistant, was disposed not to regard the incident as singular.

"When we strike the set," he said to the director, "I'll bet we find a lot of 'em down in those posts." The diameter of the pillars is about that of a hogshead.

The recent decision of the Warner Bros. to hold the world premieres of all future Warner classics of the screen in Los Angeles has resulted in a change of positions for members of the studio publicity department. Charles E. Kurtzman leaves the post of studio publicity director to become manager of exploitation of the finished product. Harold B. Wallis, assistant, will relieve his fellow p. a. of the studio duties and will be given support in his new capacity by another member of the Warner's eastern staff who is due here soon.

TAKE FIRST SHOTS ON DOUG'S NEW PICTURE

Approximately one year and three months since the time he started "Robin Hood," Douglas Fairbanks began work on his new picture production, "The Thief of Bagdad," which is well under way today. The first shots were taken with a small group of people on the glistening set that will dominate architecturally as did the feudal castle in "Robin Hood."

No definite time has been scheduled for the completion of the feature, because many important considerations of magical photography are involved which may cause unforseen delays. That the picture will be ready for showing before the close of the year is undoubted.

It took Doug about four months to produce "Robin Hood." Consequently nearly a year has elapsed during which he has made preparations for his new picture. For a time he was seriously contemplating doing a pirate story, but later abandoned this when Edward Knoblock offered the suggestion of the legendary theme.

"The Thief of Bagdad" will undoubtedly be one of the most enchantingly artistic and entertaining pictures ever made. It will disclose all the latest advances in photography, and perhaps many unsuspected innovations. It promises to revive the mood of fantasy on the screen.

The leading roles in the picture besides that of Fairbanks are played by Julanne Johnston, Sadakichi Hartmann, Brandon Hurst, Charles Belcher, Schnitz Edwards and others. Raoul Walsh is directing, and Arthur Edeson is in charge of the photography.

BLANCHE SWEET ENDS NEW GOLDWYN FEATURE

Blanche Sweet, who for the past month has been portraying the leading role in Goldwyn's "In the Palace of the King," has concluded this characterization. This marks Miss Sweet's first appearance in a costume part for some years and is said to present her at her best in the colorful character of the quaint old Spanish Princess.

Miss Sweet, since her return to the screen, has been besieged with contracts by producers. She is at present holding off all engagements until the production plans of "Tess of the D'Ubervilles" are completed. She is to portray the part of "Tess" under the direction of her husband, Marshall Neilan. Another producer is anxious to have her star in an adaptation of a famous stage play. If it is possible to postpone "Tess," she will start work in this film immediately.

COLLEGIANS VANQUISHING BRAINLESS FLAPPER

The day of the brainless flapper in the movies is past.

With brains plus good looks at a premium, college girls are now gaining a foothold in the world of photoplays.

One of the newest college recruits to distinguish herself is Adelaide Heilbron, whose success offers strong encouragement for scores of college girls who aspire to be future scenario and continuity writers for the screen.

Adelaide Heilbron is a Seattle girl and lived in that city practically all of her life. Her father is a well known newspaper editor. Following preparation at private schools, Miss Heilbron went to Smith College, where she edited the college paper and won honors in English subjects.

Her first experience in motion pictures was when she went to New York as a member of the titling staff of Famous Players. She made a careful study of the technique of photoplay construction with a view to becoming a continuity writer, and having shown marked ability in titling and editing pictures, she was engaged to go west with Edwin Carewe to write the continuity for "Mighty Lak' a Rose." The capable manner in which she handled this story led to her being chosen to prepare the continuity for "The Girl of the Golden West," which has proven to be one of the most successful pictures of the screen.

Miss Heilbron recently signed a contract to write continuities for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and is now at the United Studios, Hollywood, preparing the screen version of "The Swamp Angel," a romantic story by Richard Connell.

This picture is to be made by First National within the next few weeks.

MISS VALLI FINISHES IN "LADY OF QUALITY"

After twelve strenuous weeks of work, Virginia Valli has completed her starring role in "A Lady of Quality," the Universal-Jewel Special which Hobart Henley directed, and she is now preparing to leave for Chicago, her home city, for a brief rest.

During the taking of the picture Miss Valli lost some pounds of weight, owing, she says, to the "stays" and other sartorial implements of torture which milady of olden days affected for the purpose of having her gowns fit in practically silhouette style. With some twenty of these close fitting "moulds," the majority made of velvet and similar materials, comprising her wardrobe, Miss Valli had everything but a cool time working under glaring suns on location.

The star will leave for Chicago accompanied by the parents of her husband, Demarest Lamson, within a few days, and upon returning is promised a choice of several plays for her next production. The visit marks her first trip East in two years.

"Phantom Pack" Finished

Director Laurence Trimble has completed the final scenes for Strongheart's next starring vehicle, temporarily titled "The Phantom Pack," and will begin cutting it at once. The greater part of this picture was taken in Canada, at Banff and Lake Louise, and those who have seen the rushes declare Trimble has the greatest dog race scenes ever photographed as a punch in this new picture. It is an original story by Trimble and Jane Murfin. Trimble plans to take a few days vacation and then start work on the interiors for Jack London's "White Fang," which will be Strongheart's next picture after "The Pack."

"TIGER ROSE" COMPANY WILL GO TO YOSEMITE

For the filming of "Tiger Rose" which is soon to go into production for the Warner Brothers under the direction of Sidney Franklin, it will be necessary to send a fleet of motor trucks to Northern California, a trip of six or seven hundred miles.

Besides the necessary provisions, camping equipment, etc., a portable generator of sufficient capacity to provide lights on "location" will make the trip.

The location site selected is 150 miles north of Yosemite Valley and is accessible only by a road as rough and rugged as the country itself. Director Franklin himself selected the site after a week of exploration on horseback. It is promised that the picture will be a masterpiece for scenic plendor and natural beauty.

Lenore Ulric will head a notable cast which includes Theodore Von Eltz, Claude Gillingwater, Joseph Dowling, Forrest Stanley and Sam De Grasse.

Nita Naldi Arrives

Nita Naldi recently arrived at Paramount's West Coast studio from New York to begin work in one of the featured roles in Cecil B. De Mille's elaborate production of "The Ten Commandments," by Jeanie Macpherson. Miss Naldi will share honors with Theodore Roberts, Leatrice Joy, Richard Dix, Charles de Roche, Estelle Taylor, Rod LaRocque, Julia Faye, James Neill and Edythe Chapman in this Paramount Picture. Paul Iribe is the art director of this production and Bert Glennon is in charge of the photography assisted by Edward S. Curtis, J. P. Marley, Frederick Westerbert, Archie Stout and Donald Biddle Keyes.

Melford Starts

"THE HUNTRESS" NOW BEING EDITED

Production was completed this week on "The Huntress," a First National picture, starring Colleen Moore. The film is now in the hands of the editors.

"The Huntress," which is a film version of Hulbert Footner's famous story of the same title, was directed by Lynn Reynolds. It is a comedy drama of the west, but unusual inasmuch as it is a "western" without a cowboy, pinto pony, or mounted policeman.

Six weeks was consumed in the making of this brilliant comedy of the great outdoors. Its exterior scenes were taken in one of the most picturesque spots of the California high Sierras, in the "Switzerland of America" amid the lakes and peaks of the Mammoth Lake district.

"The Huntress" promises to be one of the most sprightly screen comedy dramas ever filmed with the west as a background. It tells a simple story, yet plausible, dramatic and highly entertaining.

Its story centers about a vivacious white girl, who is brought up as an Indian and then, when learning that she is white, sets out to win a husband by kidnaping a youth from the city. Colleen Moore portrayed the role of the Indian girl and Lloyd Hughes the part of the city boy.

Other members of the brilliant cast are Russell Simpson, Walter Long, Wilfred Lucas, Charles E. Anderson and Wilfred North.

HOLUBAR WILL GLOBE TROT FOR A YEAR

"The Wandering Jew" will have nothing on Allen Holubar, well known producer, during the coming year, during which he is under contract to make four big special productions for Metro.

Each one of the plays selected calls for a trip far from Hollywood. His first feature will take him on location to Dixieland, his second to a South Sea isle, his third to Alaska and his fourth to South America.

Holubar is determined to make each of the stories on the original locations described by the author, and in most instances he will save money by making the trips, because it will be less expensive than building the "sets" that would be required at the Metro studios.

Mayne With Melford

Eric Mayne, who is just concluding an engagement in support of Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl," under Richard F. Jones' direction, has been engaged by George Melford to play a leading role in "The Light That Failed," which will be filmed at the Lasky studios here.

Who's Who and What's What in Filmland This Week

Constance Talmadge is shooting an average of fifteen scenes a day on her new comedy-drama, "The Dangerous Maid," at the United Studios.

Director Frank Lloyd is working day and night in the cutting room on Norma Talmadge's greatest picture, "Ashes of Vengeance."

C. Gardner Sullivan, head of the Joseph M. Schenck scenario department, has returned from New York after looking for new story material.

Frances Marion is adapting "Dust of Desire," Norma Talmadge's new photoplay, which will be started within a month. She will co-direct the production with Chester Franklin.

Conway Tearle, who played opposite Norma Talmadge in "Ashes of Vengeance," has donned another 17th century uniform as leading man for Constance Talmadge in "The Dangerous Maid," which Victor Heerman is directing.

Charles Gerrard, who is playing the part of Sir Peter Dare in Constance Talmadge's latest comedy-drama, "The Dangerous Maid," was imported from New York for the part.

Tod Browning, Goldwyn director, is the only man making motion pictures that does not say "hit-'em" when he calls for the lights to be put on. Instead, the director, who is now making "The Day of Faith," by Arthur Somers Roche, says: "Light your lanterns."

Running a circus as a sideline was but a part of the activities of Frederic Herzog, when portraying the owner of the vodka joint in Marshall Neilan's "The Rendezvous." He had wooden soldiers, dancing girls, and everything.

Jean Del Val has just completed his contract with Famous having played one of the leading roles in "Zaza," starring Gloria Swanson.

Ruth Renick, who is at present on the coast, will return to New York in the fall to star in a series of special productions.

Templar Saxe has just completed "The Squall," which was made here.

Following the completion of "The Love Bandit," Victor Sutherland will be starred by Chas. Blaney in a series of pictures.

E. H. Griffith is at present cutting and editing his big cosmopolitan special, "Unseeing Eyes," which starred Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen.

Fred Cavens, noted fencing master, has just completed a long engagement under Frank Lloyd, in "Ashes of Vengeance," a Schenck Production, starring Norma Talmadge, and has been re-engaged as fencing master by the same company for their next production, "The Dangerous Maid," starring Constance Talmadge.

Tote Du Crow has just finished playing Sun Mun, the Chinese interpreter, in "The Lord of Thundergate," which is being filmed at the United Studios under the direction of Joseph De Grasse.

Edwin Carewe, producer of "The Bad Man," with Holbrook Blinn in the name role, has selected Enid Bennett, who portrayed the role of Maid Marian in "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," for the part of "Mrs. Morgan Pell," in the film version of Porter Emerson Browne's famous border comedy.

Eugenie Besserer, who portrays a Russian peasant in Marshall Neilan's "The Rendezvous," has been in theatricals since childhood. One of her early parts was the characterization of Oliver Twist.

A man with twenty dogs—Emmett Corrigan, who plays an important part in Marshall Neilan's Russian drama, "The Rendezvous." Mr. Corrigan has a kennel of police dogs back in New Jersey, but their number was too great to ship west.

Cleo Madison has started on a new picture contract which will keep her busy here for the entire summer. Miss Madison recently completed "The Man From Ten Strike."

Alyce Mills has been engaged to play one of the leading feminine roles in support of Constance Binney in "Clipped Wings," a C. C. Burr production, which is being made in Glendale.

Wm. N. Bailey of "Polly Preferred" has been engaged by C. C. Burr to play the leading male role in "Clipped Wings," opposite Constance Binney.

Johnny Hines has been re-engaged for an indefinite period by the Warner Brothers. Hines recently completed the starring role in "Little Johnny Jones," a picturization of George M. Cohan's play of the same name. The name of Hines' next picture has not been announced.

Charles Rosher, chief cinematographer for Mary Pickford, has been secured by the Warner Brothers as chief cameraman for David Belasco's "Tiger Rose," starring Lenore Ulric under the direction of Sidney Franklin.

Little Dorothy Seay has just finished work in Fox's "You Can't Get Away With Everything," directed by Roland Lee.

After a brief vacation from the stage and screen Otto Ledérer returns to the fold as a guest at Grauman's Concert at the Million Dollar Theater this Sunday in a new routine of characterizations with music, including his own conception of Shylock and the Italian immigrant in "The Merchant of Venice."

Max Mogi has been engaged by the Jack White Productions to play the part of a Hindu in one of their Mermaid Comedies, starring Lige Conley and which Hughie Fay is directing.

Creighton Hale is in the list of popular actors whose life is one picture after another. Mr. Hale has been occupied the past five weeks in delineating a young law student in the Hall Caine story, "Master of Man," which Victor Seastrom is directing for Goldwyn. It's one of those sympathetic roles to which he is especially adapted and which he will complete in about four weeks.

One of Ralph Lewis' first screen portrayals under the direction of D. W. Griffith thirteen years ago was that of a United States mail carrier in the old Biograph one-reel drama, "The Mystery Letter." He is now starring as one of Uncle Sam's finest in "The Mailman."

It takes Jane Novak three hours every morning to make up for her role of the imprisoned mother in Chester Bennett's production of "The Lullaby," in which she plays the starring role. So perfect is her make-up that hardly anyone on the studio stage is able to recognize in the wan and ugly prison woman the charming Chester Bennett star. Many of her greatest dramatic scenes are with Fred Esmelton who plays the role of the Judge.

Edward J. Montagne, noted free lance scenarist and playwright, who adapted to the screen such productions as "Rupert of Hentzau" and "The Common Law," has been engaged by First National to do a film version of the novel, "The Swamp Angel." The piece will be used as a vehicle for Colleen Moore and an all-star cast.

Director Archainbaud of the Universal forces and a compan of players have left for Catalin where important scenes will b made for "The Storm Daughter well-known story which ha been adapted to the screen b Edward J. Montagne.

When Lenore J. Coffee, autho of "Havoc," "Daytime Wives and other photoplays first too up literature as a professio she gave considerable time the study of foreign language After several years she finall mastered French and Germa Now she is writing for the sile drama and doesn't know wha to do with them.

Tyrone Power has complete "The Day of Faith" and wi make two more features befor returning to New York.

Wm. N. Bailey, who is at pre ent playing the leading male rol opposite Constance Binney i C. C. Burr's "Clipped Wings, will be starred in a series o special features upon the compl tion of his present contract.

She will be attire in a most attractive Souther outfit and will give a readin entitled, "The New Bonnet," the close of which she will giv away one hundred autographe photos of herself.

ESTS NOVEL FILM CONTEST AT GLENDALE

When "Judgment of the Storm," the first screen production of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, is released this fall, public criticism of the picture will be invited and stimulated by national and local contests offering prizes totalling thousands of dollars for the best short, constructive criticisms of the picture.

The first public criticism contest on a motion picture preview ever held was given at Glendale, California, with "Judgment of the Storm," for the purpose of getting helpful suggestions for the final editing and polishing of this picture. Glendale is a favorite testing ground for big productions, "The Covered Wagon" and many others having been previewed there.

The Palmer Corporation's test criticism contest, offering prizes totalling only fifty dollars, so quickly packed the large theatre in which "Judgment of the Storm" was shown that it was necessary to turn away the crowds twenty minutes before curtain-time. According to Roy L. Manker, president of the Palmer Corporation ,the contest also demonstrated the ability of the "fans" to contribute materially to the entertainment they patronize.

"We were given many very helpful suggestions which will assist us on the final work with 'Judgment of the Storm,'" declares Mr. Manker. "Moreover, the critical attitude engendered by the contest, against which we had been warned, did not prevent the audience from receiving our picture with much enthusiasm and apparent enjoyment. I do not believe that invited theatre patrons to give opinions will ever affect their enjoyment of screen entertainment."

STUDIO ITEMS OF INTEREST

Gale Henry, who recently finished in "Man from Ten Strike," at the Ince Studios, with Guy Bates Post, has been cast in one of her inimitable character roles in "Held to Answer," under the direction of Harold Shaw at Metro.

Madolin Scott, a comparative new arrival in the Hollywood film colony, has been given favorable mention for her portrayals of dancing, ingenue and character roles at the Fox Studio, New York.

Helen Ferguson has completed her role in "The Unknown Purple" under the direction of Leland West, a Carlos Production at Goldwyn. In addition to Miss Ferguson in the all-star cast are Henry B. Walthall, Alice Lake, Stuart Holmes and Ethel Grey Terry.

IS GAME AND MODEST OVER SMALL START

Bob Reel McKee is just a regular fellow who, upon leaving college two years ago, where he made a name for himself in athletics, has tried his hand at everything from pick and shovel to motor-cycle racing. He is a daring and clever driver, as well as being his own mechanic, and last summer crossed the continent alone in a small car of his own manufacture, having several hair-raising experiences.

He has just joined the new Hollywood Athletic Club, where he expects to take up his residence upon its completion.

While claiming no signal success an an actor, he has in the past year put over several good bits, and recently completed an engagement with the Phil Goldstone production, "What Women Want."

THIS PROVES YOU NEVER CAN TELL

When Lynwood Crystal Rapp, the rising child artist, returned to Hollywood to resume her picture work after a vaudeville tour, it was widely heralded that her rare beauty would win for her a place of stellar prominence within a very short time. The interesting part of it is, something else besides beauty has come to the foreground to keep her very busy. That something else is talent—she is proving herself so capable artistically that she is kept busy continually and is generally booked ahead.

There is no exaggeration whatever in the statement that little Miss Rapp is one of the most beautiful children that ever lived and she certainly has few rivals on the screen. In her next few forthcoming releases it is said she will demonstrate that her personal charms, however, are secondary to her dramatic ability, all of which goes to prove once more that it is ever difficult to accurately judge in advance wherein the secret of a success lies in reality.

This young lady made her first deep impression on the screen as a protege of Mary Pickford, and just now, according to reports from various studios, she is more than living up to the expectations of her distinguished benefactress.

Only recently it was announced that negotiations were under way for a starring project for petite Miss Rapp, and ere long a definite announcement of her future bigger plans will be made. Meanwhile she is working most every day playing important parts in important pictures.

Vola Vale has returned from location at Catalina, where she took the heavy, vampire lead, in "Alimony," a F. B. O. production directed by Jas. W. Horne.

TWO-REEL COMEDY COSTS AMATEUR ONLY $300

The cheapest two-reel picture production of a comic or dramatic nature has just been produced. It was made in Oakland, California, by a man whose only contact with or knowledge of motion pictures before was an extension course in screen play writing with the Palmer Photoplay Corporation. The man is Mr. H. H. Glasier, and in himself he constituted his entire staff, from story writer to sales agent and from camera boy to directing producer.

Mr. Glasier brought his two-reel comedy to Hollywood, and arrangements are being made to secure its release through regular channels. The cost of his production, including some film wasted in learning to operate his camera, was $300. The actual camera work took fourteen days. The cast, consisting of seven principals and twenty-two "extras" was composed of local talent who had never acted for the camera before.

This film is considered a unique achievement in professional film circles. Mr. Glasier attributes his accomplishment and the surprising degree of success he attained to the painstaking system he used in charting camera angles, "locations," and light conditions at various hours of the day. He knew nothing of photography, even as a snapshot amateur, until he began his production preparations. Then he not only "shot" but developed his own film. He spent a month training his amateur actors, while experimenting with his camera, and perfecting his plans.

Carmel Myers will not play in "Ponjola," as had been previously announced. Miss Myers has had to cancel her engagement for the Cynthia Stockley story since she will not finish her work in "The Magic Skin,"

EUGENIA FEINER GETS LARGE OFFER

According to an announcement made this week, Eugenia Feiner, who recently completed enacting an important role in support of Lloyd Hughes in "At the Foot of the Hill" at Universal, will probably play the leading feminine part in the initial feature picture to be made by the Delbert E. Davenport Productions. W. E. Burnham, general manager of this company, is so favorably impressed with the dramatic talent and beauty of this young actress that he is enthusiastic in predicting very early stardom for Miss Feiner.

"I predict now she will be among those chosen by the Wampas as the stars of tomorrow at their next choosing session," Mr. Burnham says. "I believe Miss Feiner is one of the most promising of all the recent new faces the screen has acquired."

Miss Feiner hails from St. Louis, where she achieved fame as a singer and dancer. She had been a society leader of prominence before she embraced a professional career. Her's is one of the pioneer and most influential families in the Missouri metropolis, but she has abandoned all social aspirations in favor of making her mark as a motion picture artist and she has made a very propitious start toward her goal, according to those who have been watching her histrionic work.

Paul Bern to Adapt

Paul Bern has picked another scenario plum with his engagement to prepare the continuity for Ernst Lubitsch's new production to be made for Warner Brothers. The story is as yet unnamed and the original idea was taken by Lubitsch from an old play. Bern recently adapted to the screen Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man," which Victor Seastrom is now directing at the Goldwyn studio.

Lorraine Eason, who enacted the role of "Echo," about whom the story revolves in "The Temple of Venice," has returned from a three weeks location at Santa Cruz Island.

Edna Mae Cooper has finished her part in "The Ten Commandments," and is now cast in "Bag and Baggage" at the Hollywood Studio, under the direction of Finis Fox.

The popular Kosik sisters, Beth and Marguerite, will appear in the Pilgrimage Play at the Bowl. Beth now has a prominent part in the "Covered Wagon" prologue and Marguerite is with Jackie Coogan in "Long Live the King."

Storm Daughter" especially for Miss Dean. Lee McCarey will assist Archainbaud.

Owen Gorine, recently brought from Europe by the Universal Pictures corporation, will have a principal role in support of Priscilla Dean in "The Storm Daughter." Leete Renick Brown's original story which will enter production at Universal City very shortly.

The story is a sea story, most of its characters "rough-cut." George Archainbaud, director of "The Power of a Lie," and other Universal successes, will direct this as a Universal-Jewel special.

Norman Kerry, handsome leading man of Universal's two, big completed spectacles, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "Merry-Go-Round," failed to report on the set a few days ago for his work in the leading masculine role of "The Acquittal,' all-star Universal-Jewel special. A message from his house said that he had been sent to a sanitarium under a doctor's care for one of the most unusual injuries ever suffered by an actor.

While doing a strong dramatic scene he gestured a little too violently with his right hand and instead of merely striking a table lightly, he struck the corner of a metal cigar box with some force. The result apparently was nothing more than a deep cut on his finger—but is developed into something similar to blood poison. It became so serious that he was ordered to rest.

Now, however, he is well again and will return to work at once.

Clarence L. Brown is directing the filming of Rita Weiman's stage play with Kerry, Claire Windsor, Barbara Bedford, Frederick Vroom, Harry Mestayer and others of note in the principal roles.

Jules Furthman made the adaptation.

Colonel Gordon McGee, research expert at Universal City at present associated with the Hobart Henley unit making Virginia Valli's starring vehicle, "A Lady of Quality," is a world adventurer with friends and relatives all over the face of the globe. He has served in several wars and seen many lands in the course of his military career.

Recently a nephew of his, three years older than himself, was appointed Premier of Ontario after a consistent political rise in Parliament. His name is Howard Ferguson.

LEADING ROLE IN SCREEN PLAYS NOT ALWAYS MOST IMPORTANT

"The leading role in screen plays is not always the most important one!" That is the startling statement of Ruby Miller, famous English actress who has recently arrived in this country after a tour of Australia and the Orient with her own company.

"I mean the day of the wish-washy, blushing ingenue who never seems to know what it is all about is past.

"Who was the outstanding player in 'The Covered Wagon?' Neither the hero nor the heroine, but the character played in a most interesting fashion by Ernest Torrence. Here was a work which eclipsed both that of the leading players. By force of personality he commanded every scene in which he appeared.

"'Blood and Sand' proved to be the stepping stone for Nita Naldi, who played a 'vamp' role. The leading feminine player in the production is hardly remembered. Not that it is the fault of the actress, but it merely proves that the role which required more acting ability than good looks is usually more important to the success of the picture than the leading feminine player.

"The Famous Players-Lasky organization announce on their production program for the forthcoming six months only two feminine stars, Gloria Swanson and Pola Negri. Here is food for thought.

"There was so much red blood spilt during the war that everybody lost patience with the wailing heroine, who is making idiotic fuss over no trouble at all. It was only her innocence and ignorance that got her into the predicament.

How Not to Get Into Pictures

rector never send him your usual form letter which starts: "I've just seen your latest picture. Your acting is wonderful."

Do not get a letter of introduction from your local theatre owner. Letters of introduction are what keep studios in a state of panic.

Do not send in snapshots taken by a Brownie B camera. Picnic pictures seldom do you justice.

Do not come to Hollywood unless you are financially able to wait for your opportunity. Engagements at the beginning are few and far between.

Never try to get into a studio by saying you are a newspaper writer, if you are not. The publicity department will soon get your number.

HOW DO THEY GET THEIR GAGS?

No, dear friend, it isn't a fight! It is simply a number of gag men, directors and others engaged thinking up gags and stunts for a comedy.

See that gentleman over there with the mustache and tousled hair? That is Dick Smith, one of the champion gag men of the world. He is helping in the general work of thinking up funny situations and routines for Grand-Asher comedies. Just now he's getting gradually gray over ways and means of making up new laugh ideas for Monty Banks.

Note his demeanor! He is agitated. He rumples his hair. He talks so rapidly his words get twisted. But he has more originality to the square inch than nine out of ten—yes, ninety out of a hundred—men.

He gets paid for thinking funny things—not doing them. Odd, isn't it?

Crowds in circus days used to get their ideas for gags from varied sources and take a whole hibernating season in winter quarters to developing next season's stunts.

A gag man in a comedy studio has to get his gags and develop them in a day or a week or sometimes a few hours.

Everybody helps, it is true. The director and the star and sometimes others, sit in on the scenario. They all try to think of the same situation at once. How can it be made funniest? It is very odd to note the different conceptions emanating from different people. And they are not a bit bashful about telling one another when they don't care for a thing.

"That's out! Too old," or perhaps, "That isn't funny. Would you laugh at it if some one else sprang it on you?"

By the same token they are equally strong in praise.

"That's a wonderful idea, Bill. By George, why wasn't I smart enough to think of it myself. It just goes to show—two heads are better'n one."

So they evolve the situations that later will make the public hold its sides and burst multitudinous buttons from its collective vest. Herman Raymaker, director for Grand, invariably assumes some absurd pose when thinking up a routine. Probably he will be out on the studio lawn on a clear day, with his pedal extremities in the fountain and his head resting serenely on a rock. Archie Mayo sits by the water cooler in the studio "lobby," probably to keep his temperature down in case he hits a gag that is too funny! Harry Edwards, also director, reposes with his feet on the desk in his office, shut away from the world and looks exactly like the chief mourner at a funeral. That's when he is at his funniest. Arvid Gillstrom, directing also, probably gets in his car and goes out where he can hit her up to thirty-five and thinks out a line of stuff. The other night he wrote almost an entire comedy on the back of blank checks while waiting for dinner at a cafe. Reggie Morris doesn't disclose any especial peculiarities but probably he has them. Charles Lamont, being young and enthusiastic beyond most directors, gets ideas from everywhere but largely from his own past eventful life—he was born and reared in a circus.

The comedy stars, such as Monty Banks, Sid Smith and Joe Rock, all have ideas of their own and frequently put them across. There's never any jealousy. If the stenographer or the janitor get an idea they go and tell a director, star, or gag man. The latter, if the idea is good, will give full credit. "So and so told me this gag and I think it's a dandy."

Josephine Adair

The most promising child actress on the screen today is Josephine Adair, whose versatility is well known. She has appeared in a number of excellent pictures and her portrayals have been very wide in range; everything from light comedy to drama of the most serious type. Those who are responsible for her progress realize what a big part adequate publicity—GOOD PUBLICITY—plays in modern motion picture production, and have enlisted the aid of this agency in building a strong and lasting foundation for her career. She is the only child actress I will publicize and in co-operation with the public press I hope to make her universally known. The success of Josephine Adair is assured.

The Editor Comments and Opines

If Henry Ford does run for president, it would be just like his opponent to win in a walk, scorning all Ford.s

Warner Brothers have called a meeting of state right buyers in New York. To find out why they don't buy more?

Mrs. Wallace Reid has been received with open arms back east, which proves the "dope" on it being wise to slam the dope evil.

When intrigue comes in, efficiency passes out. Hence it is imperative that all forms of intrigue be eliminated from the motion picture industry. There is room for us all in our field providing no quarter is monopolized by intrigue.

Motion pictures by radio! What a thrill this possibility conjures up in the mind! Yet radio movies are well on the way to perfection, and, incidentally man's inventive genius becomes more uncanny than ever. Scarcely anything is impossible any more unless it is Prohibition.

The abolition of blue laws is urged by a Kansas City preacher. He'll probably be fired from his job for being so unpardonably fair-minded, but he has performed a praise-worthy service for humanity just the same. So, he should worry over minds that are narrow.

Politics will be at white heat in another year and it is being freely admitted that political cliques plan on using the screen more extensively than ever for spell-binding. Here's hoping they don't move moving pictures too far into the political arena so infested with dangerous pitfalls.

Neighborhood theatres in most large American cities are doing so much more business than was expected that a movement to increase seating capacities has become quite general. This is one more reason why the pessimists should pipe down and 'fess up that conditions are not so hopeless after all.

Will Hays has taken the initiative in raising $100,000 to donate to the Y. W. C. A., to increase its facilities in Hollywood for taking care of the large number of screen-struck girls who swarm into this film center from all parts of the world, only to be disillusioned and made to suffer from sheer financial want. | This is real charity, but it would be even more charitable to conduct a propaganda campaign which would prevent most of these girls from invading filmland in vain in the first place.

Great Britain has been contemplating the placing of an embargo on American motion pictures, but that nation's Parliament finally saw the folly of the move and shelved the idea. The claim has been set up that American pictures had a tendency to destroy the English film-making industry. The tendency probably still obtains, but it is because of the superiority of American cinema achievements and John Bull cannot afford to take the position of refusing to let merit prevail. Meanwhile it is up to Uncle Sam's photoplay-producers to continue to excel.

Music has become as closely allied with the movies as possible in a mighty short space of time, but now the musical score bids fair to be an integral part of most every photoplay, the new idea being to compose it beforehand so it may be played during the taking of the various scenes of the picture, thus to inspire the players more. It is easy to understand wherein this practice will aid in making the action of the story move forward with a smoothness and more harmonious tempo, an end much to be desired. Verily the composer's niche in film-building is bound to be important.

All kinds of predictions are being made concerning the future of motion pictures. Forsooth this seems to be the prize era for cinema prophesies. The interesting part of it is, the vast majority of these predictions are ultra-optimistic, most everybody expressing implicit faith in the prospects for unprecedented expansions in this business. According to announcements made thus early, the forthcoming fall will be the banner time for film production activities in the Hollywood and Culver City districts. And the inevitable lull coincident with summer is not much of a lull this year either. Hence it is unmistakably patent that there is ample reason for all their optimistic predictions—they are based on something more than mere exploitation buncombe.

Leading exhibitors are again discussing the proposition of increasing theatre admission fees. Just what necessity there is for any advance in ticket prices at this time is not clear. Certainly it would be all wrong to make the movies less democratic and accessible by raising the prices beyond the means of the great masses of people from whom most of the support is drawn. Any higher rates as a general industry policy now would tend to check the growth of the universal popularity of moving pictures and since the trend towards new zeniths of patronage is so pronounced throughout the country at present, it would surely be suicidal to make it seem that mercenary motives are transcending all things else among those responsible for cinema entertainment. If the margin of profit is a little too slight, why not be content if such contentment will be instrumental in promoting the size of the patronage?

STARS BREAK GROUND FOR NEW MOVIE THEATRE

Film stars and city officials mingled together this week at Santa Monica, California, when ground was broken for one of the new beach theatres at Santa Monica.

The new theatre will be one of the finest on the West Coast chain and will have a seating capacity in the neighborhood of 2,000. Every modern convenience will be installed in the new playhouse.

The ground breaking ceremonies consumed the better part of a morning and were attended by many stars of Principal Pictures Corporation as well as the majority of civic officials of the popular beach resort.

Marguerite de la Motte, dainty star of Principal Pictures Corporation, turned the first shovel of dirt while other film players looked on in admiration as the youthful star plowed the shovel into the earth.

Among those who attended the ceremonies were John Bowers, George Hackathorne, Fred Stanton, Mayor Berkley of Santa Monica, George Cleveland of the West Coast Theatres chain, A. L. Gore, Adolph Ramish, Sol Lesser and other West Coast officials.

Work will be speeded on the new theatre and it is expected this new home of the silent drama will be the show place of all the beach resorts of the Pacific coast.

BEAR TAKES A RIDE ON BIG FERRIS WHEEL

"Prunes," the baby Bruin once the mascot of the battleship California, dishonorably discharged from the navy because of his ill advised raid on the Admiral's suite, may join the aviation forces if his tendency to "go up in the air" can be taken as an indication of his ambition in life.

Recent visitors to Selig Zoo Park were greeted by a strange sight when "Prunes," the pet bear of Col. Wm. N. Selig's famous animal collection, decided that he would like to go up in the air via the Ferris wheel route.

It was while the sporty carnivors were meandering about the park that he discovered the giant wheel in motion and the joy that the occupants of the swinging baskets were accruing from the strange ride intrigued the fancy of the wily "Prunes."

Waiting until the device came to a stop, the colonel's pet hopped into one of the inviting baskets and before he was discovered the wheel was revolving at a rapid rate. Spectators watched "Prunes" with great interest as he hung on to the safety bar and snorted with merriment. It was a great new game for his ursine majesty and now he insists on his daily visit to cloudland on the giant Ferris wheel.

WARNERS SIGN JOHNNY HINES FOR MORE FILMS

Johnny Hines has been signed indefinite period and will be by the Warner Brothers for an featured in a number of forthcoming Warner classics, according to an announcement by Harry M. Warner. Hines recently completed his first picture for the Warners, "Little Johnny Jones," an adaptation of George M. Cohan's stage play, which has been completed under the direction of Arthur Rosson.

The Warner Brothers originally secured Hines to star only in "Little Johnny Jones," but his stellar work in this picture convinced the Warners that he was truly one of the screen's greatest comedians and they accordingly engaged him for a series of pictures.

In "Little Johnny Jones," Hines is said to do the best work of his career. He portrays the role of an American jockey in Europe bent on winning the English derby. Considerable romance and intrigue is woven into the story which is interpreted by a supporting cast including Windham Standing, Molly Malone, Margaret Seddon, Herbert Prior, George Webb and Mervyn Leroy. The story was adapted for the screen by Raymond Schrock.

"LICHEY" FINDS IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

"It sure pays to Advertise," proclaimed Howard Lichtenstein of the Howard Lichtenstein Company, "because, my first announcement regarding the opening of my new office attracted unlimited attention, and the past week I have received many visits from stars and directors who have requested me to handle their publicity and their personal representation."

The Lichtenstein offices are only a week old, and it just goes to prove what can be accomplished by that type of chap who believes in getting out and going after material.

The motion picture actor will find within the staff of the Lichtenstein organization, competent commercial artists, newspaper writers, and individuals capable of handling every part of their activities, looking after their personal representation as well as helping them to exploit them and bringing them to the attention of the motion picture producer, exhibitor and fan.

Christie Gets Busy

Al Christie has taken off his coat and gone to work on some new pictures, having been home from Europe a week and rested up while other new comedies are planned to come under the directing hands of Scott Sidney and Harold Beaudine. The latter staged Christie's opening release for the new fall season which will be "Navy Blues" starring Dorothy Devore.

Living Doubles of Historical Figures Appear in "Scaramouche"

Rex Ingram has accomplished something of an uncanny nature in the filming of his new monster production for Metro of "Scaramouche," Rafael Sabatini's great novel of the French Revolution. He has brought to life Louis XVI, the ill-fated monarch, Danton, Robespierre and other famous historical characters in a manner that has amazed close students of French history who have seen the picture in the making.

The historical figures in "Scaramouche" are not painted, animated manikins. Mr. Ingram does not believe in the extensive use of the artifices of makeup which made the task of finding the right people doubly hard. He spent months in search of some of the screen artists who play historical roles in this picture.

From the moment he read Sabatini's book he knew he was going to film it and immediately he began in his mind's eye to fit people into the colorful characters of the story. His wife, Alice Terry, seemed to be a perfect Aline and Ramon Novarro appeared to have been made to play the role of Scaramouche.

While in New York last winter during the cutting of the film of "Where the Pavement Ends" he found an ideal Climene in the person of Edith Allen. He and his wife saw her at a cafe one evening, were introduced, and brought her to Hollywood to play in "Scaramouche."

From the first Mr. Ingram knew that George Siegman would be his Danto, the famous French patriot, and there remained only the difficulty of securing the giant artist's release from two other contracts.

Bowditch "Smoke" Turner automatically became Le Chapelier, the president of the National Assembly. Mr. Turner had nothing to say about it. for Mr. Ingram had decided upon him for the part while reading the book.

The young director found his Napoleon in a peculiar manner. The famous Corsican, as he appears in "Scaramouche" is not the figure depicted in most paintings—a matured and rather overfed brooding person with a lock of hair across his forehead and hands either clasped behind his back or else with his right hand thrust into his waistcoat. In this production he is shown as a young second lieutenant of artillery, a witness of the sack of the Tuilleries Palace, one of the most thrilling of the picture's scenes of the actual fighting.

The man Mr. Ingram selected is not—or rather, was not an actor at all. The man who bears so striking a resemblance to Napoleon as he appeared in his youth is Slavko Vorkapitvh, a Servian artist. The director saw several of the young painter's works at an art exhibit two years ago and purchased one, "The Lady and the Swan." He remembered the young artist as Napoleon's "double" and when he cast "Scaramouche" he selected Mr. Vorkapitvh as one of his players. Guided by Mr. Ingram the youthful Bavarian has done remarkable work.

But there seemed to be no Maximilien Robespierre, "the little lawyer from Arras." Everywhere he went the young director was on the watch for him and as the time for the filming of the National Assembly scenes drew near it became imperative that he make a selection.

One day while directing a scene showing the attack of the populace on the mansions of the wealthy in Paris he saw his Robespierre brandishing a scythe with a thousand other ragged, blood stained revolutionists. The man was De Garcia Fuerberg. Other than to make his face appear pock marked he needed no makeup and his portrayal was faultless. Inquiry proved that he was a German with 20 years experience on European stages in Shakespearian and other classical plays. Not being a skilled linguist he had been unable during his four months in the United States to find theatrical work and so had enlisted as a member of one of the "Scaramouche" mobs.

Mr. Ingram selected and rejected three men before he finally decided upon Roy Coulson for the part of Jean Paul Marat.

All Ready for Films

Filmland's latest gossip is to effect that a certain local group is dickering for the screen services of the well-beloved, internationally famous star—none other than the illustrious Eva Tanguay, who is now in our midst, having but recently finished one of her Vesuvius-tic and exhilarating vaudeville tours, and, as is usual, having once tasted of the fruits of an idealistic existence—that of homelife in Hollywood—is, apparently, loth to return to the eternal grim and grind of the professional tours. Miss Tanguay, when seen at the Ambassador Hotel, but a few days ago, appeared even more youthful than ever before and her exotic beauty impressed one more as that of a princess of the realm rather than the Queen of Vaudeville.

"I Don't Care" may have been her commercial vehicle, undoubtedly assumed to greater or less degree, (to the tune of 3 Grand), but we feel safe in surmising that Eva Tanguay, in spite of her usual tempestuous roles, does care, in fact cares for all things that are truly inspiring and beautiful and we unhesitatingly predict a screen popularity, surpassing even her tremendous box-office appeal of the stage—that is, if some lucky boy is successful in getting her name on the dotted line.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 16th.—Buster Keaton and his wife spent the week-end in San Francisco. They were enroute from Truckee, where they have been on location, to the South.

The West Coast Films Corporation, with N. Dragomanovich as their general manager, and who, for the past two years or more, have had their production offices in the Monadnock Building here, have decided to move their future activities to Los Angeles. The headquarters of the corporation will be either at the Hollywood or the Cosmosart Studios.

Cullen Tate, location man for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and his assistant, Paul Iribe, were in San Francisco looking up locations for a forthcoming production.

Gibson Gowland, who is playing McTeague in Eric Von Stroheim's production of "Greed," having the first few days off in more than three months' work on the picture, made a hurried trip to Los Angeles last week. He enjoyed his brief visit with his little son, Peter, and spent a few hours at the Goldwyn Studios.

Harry MacKenzie, head of the Kenmat Productions, returned from a trip to the South last week, and announces that their organization will start the filming of a new picture within the next few weeks. On his recent trip to New York, Mr. MacKenzie arranged the release of their first picture, "Tipped Off," through Pathe and it will be given to the world about November 1st.

The office of the Graf Productions is a busy place these days, as they expect to start shooting on their big sea picture, "Half Dollar Bill," August 1. Studio work on the picture will be done at the Pacific Studios at San Mateo. J. Hesser Walraven, long connected with the organization, has been made business manager of the corporation.

John McDermott, well-known director with First National, is in San Francisco looking up locations for their next picture, a large part of which will be shot here. It will be "Her Temporary Husband," and it will be of unusual interest, as it is planned to use as high as seven thousand people in some of the scenes, and will be the first comedy ever filmed on such a scale. The all-star cast includes such well-known names as Sidney Chaplin, Owen Moore, Tully Marshall, George Cooper, and Chuck Reisner. McDermott himself will direct and work will begin in the very near future.

Gordon Mitchie, production manager for the Rellimeo Films, a San Francisco organization with offices in the Chronicle Building, has just returned from New York, where he went to arrange a release for the first picture of the company, recently filmed on the Universal lot. They will release through Selznick and the picture will have its world premiere in September. It was shot under the title of "Heartstrings," but will be released as the Selznick prize title picture, with an offer of a five hundred dollar prize for the best title suggested by any fan. The story is by Grace Sanderson Mitchie, author of "The Finger of Justice" and other photoplays, L. W. Chaudet was director, and the cast includes such well-known names as Monte Blue, Irene Rich, Tully Marshall, Russell Simpson, Jackie Saunders, James Gordon, and George Rheems. Lynwood Abbott was at the camera. The company will start their next picture in two weeks, and will again work at Universal City.

Captain P. B. Cullinan, at present art director with the Von Stroheim forces engaged in the making of "Greed," will leave the picture world on August 1 for London, and after a visit there will continue his travels in a trip around the world. Captain Cullinan is one of the world of the silver-screen who has a record for great bravery in the late war, and who was the winner of the Military Cross with Bars, given as a recognition of great bravery in action with the Prince of Wales Regiment.

Frank Keenan spent a few days in San Francisco last week to be "among those present" at the opening of the Duncan Sisters' big success, "Topsy and Eva."

Buster Keaton's latest picture, "Three Ages," had its world premiere at the Warfield Theatre last Saturday. It's a six-reel comedy and seems to be a riot. A number of the officials of First National came up from Los Angeles for the opening.

A new photoplay company has been organized in San Francisco by H. B. Mattern and H. A. Mitchell with offices at 331 Turk Street, and they are making plans which they expect to result in the production of from four to six feature pictures a year. Mattern created the Scenario Authors Agency in this city, of which he is still the head and Mitchell, has done most creditable work along the same lines in college. These ambitious young men are already attrating the co-operation of their friends and fellow students, and hope to go into early production with only the highest type of material.

J. F. Whitfield, well-known cameraman, is now employed by G. M. Anderson to do the taking and finishing of the Casino Motion Picture News, to be shown from now on at that popular theatre at Ellis and Mason Streets.

Under the general management of Herman Lubfin, president of the Pacific Motion Picture Studio at 331 Turk Street, many new activities are now in progress. Among them is the shooting of scenes for G. M. Anderson's "Casino News in Pictorial Form," which is devoted exclusively to events, notables, and industries, in and around San Francisco. A special program of news pictures was prepared for the opening of the Casino for the season on July 14.

STATISTICAL WRITERS NEGLECT TO INCLUDE WILTED COLLARS

The "figgerin' fools" who write statistical stories about motion picture productions have overlooked a bet. They have passed up a chance to quote facts and figures concerning the number of collars wilted during the filming of the elaborate country club dance scenes in "The Social Code," Viola Dana's newest Metro picture which Oscar Apfel is directing.

The piercing rays of an energetic Southern California sun beat relentlessly on one of the huge enclosed Metro stages. The lights used to illuminate the ballroom set within the stage gave off more heat.

Mr. Apfel and his assistants, Cameraman Jhn Arnold, the electricians, property men and carpenters were clad as lightly as possible, palm beach suits and white shirts with open necks predominating. Viola Dana and the other young and older women were fortunate inasmuch as they were in conventional evening attire which, after the style of nearly all evening gowns, permitted of considerable ventilation.

The men suffered. Malcolm McGregor, who appears opposite Miss Dana in this picture, Huntly Gordon and Cyril Chadwick spent much of their time shifting collars, removing their coats at the completion of each scene and donning them again at the start of the next scene.

In addition to those mentioned, the cast of "The Social Code" includes Edna Flugrath, John Sainpolis and William Humphrey.

The Bright Future of the "Heavy"

By Lucile Erskine

Clyde Fillmore slid into success. Others have found themselves up against the barred door that Hollywood so often turns itself into for screen aspirants, but Fate opened it for him. Coming out to the coast with Maude Fealy's company, he happened to hit the influenza epidemic and was marooned here for ten months. When the large following he had made on the speaking stage began to miss him, he flashed before them on the screen.

And his quick success wasn't altogether due to his very good height, although it did get him a job once, made a dawn out of what threatened to be a pretty black night. On a particularly blue Monday he was sitting in a theatrical office filled with others, hoping, despairing like himself, when Sam Forrest came to the railing and threw the whole crowd into the pit of dejection with the following short speech, "It breaks my heart, boys, to have to tell you that there isn't a thing for anybody." Mr. Fillmore was so impressed with the courage of the man who could utter such black candor that he lingered to express his admiration and sidled near the railing as he did so.

"When do you think there will be a chance?" he ventured timidly.

Forrest surveyed him from heel to head.

"Stick around," he murmured in a confidential whisper. It ended in a part and Mr. Fillmore as is his habit from anything flung at him made a succes out of it.

And always being able to eat in a career where so many have starved, has given his nature a certain mellowness. He is even merciful towards Hollywood.

"No," he said to a question I put to him in the living room of his little bungalow, "I don't think we're another Babylon meriting destruction for our sins. We are only honest, call a spade by its ugly black name, are more lyrical than the steam-rolled Middle West. Our freedom works both ways. You can be very good in Hollywood if you want to be."

Back of his chair as he talked hung a Japanese screen. The clock that ticked on the mantle piece must have ticked for generations to spinsters in some old colonial house. Books were about and good solid books at that. There was an air of peace, of detachment, to this little house. It plainly said, "There is no jazz here."

And enshrined above everything else of importance was Her portrait.

"Is she young?" I asked him.

"About the age I pretend to be," he answered.

They met on her birthday and are to be married on his. He was completely disillusioned, he said and she has spread the veil over the world again. She is Mrs. Sadie Michener, a very handsome widow of Los Angeles and the wedding will be solemnized in Pasadena. Mrs. Michener was formerly Miss Sadie Bird of Chicago and had a very brilliant social position there.

And Mr. Fillmore will act all the better for being happy. There is a false idea that you have to be scourged by fate and then you will have something to give the world in art. But Mendelsohn wrote music that has lived and his life was a happy song too.

As good a lover as he has made and would make on the screen, he thinks an ambitious artist is to have his biggest opportunity in the "heavy."

"A man isn't a villain," he said, "for three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. And the shading off of this character from its rather monotonous blackness is getting into the screen stories. In the play of "Othello," the "heavy" Iago offers the biggest dramatic plum. All the greatest Shakespearean actors have preferred portraying him to the hero. But to go back to the screen, I think all the characters are too conventionalized, too standardized as to type."

Clyde Fillmore

Clyde Fillmore is a thinking actor. He says he works to objectify a mental image he has of the part and in turn to impress that image on every mind in the audience.

"I've heard it said that Mrs. Fiske acts the same every night. That's absurd. She creates a thousand different images each night on a thousand different minds. They can't all be the same."

The mental image he created as the "heavy" in "The Sting of the Lash" with Pauline Frederick was indelibly impressed on the minds of all who saw it, because it was put there with such vivid power.

His talk ran to directors as naturally as sea talk would run to captains. "If a man is not a big man, then he has no right to be a director, because too much power is given him, but if he measures up, then he ought to be an autocrat."

His last picture is "Alimony" just finished at Robertson and Cole Studios under the direction of Jimmy Horne, and over him, Mr. Fillmore waxed enthusiastic.

"He was like a sun that brought out the hidden flower in every one of us. He saw our latent power and I tell you it blazes out in that picture and it's all due to him, not to us."

Mr. Fillmore gives me the impression of living a good deal with his intellect and that is rare in this Oriental Hollywood, where the emotions seem to be enthroned before everything else. Another instance of his intellectual attitude towards his art is his candor. He thinks the screen is for the masses and not the classes and that productions must make money. Therefore the actor's personality ought to be salable, the story has to be the same. From his lips comes none of the cant about the "mission of the movies."

He entered the stage door from a home of culture and with a college-trained mind. After finishing at the University of Oregon, he had a year of medicine at Johns Hopkins, Baltimore. Later, when working for the government at Washington, he found his "knock-off" time was four o'clock. He cast about somewhere else to spend the late afternoon. A dramatic school spread out her lure.

And in this new Bagdad where the failure of yesterday is the success of today, as in the old, when the beggar of the morning was the grand vizier by night, he gives you the impression through his stability and poise of not only snatching at success, but having her pretty securely by the throat.

VOLCANO TIMES ERUPTION TO SUIT LUCKY MOVIE DIRECTOR

It is very unusual for Mother Nature to perform her work on a regular schedule in any event, and twice as unusual when she performs according to a motion picture director's schedule. Henry King, the producer of the photoplay "The White Sister," starring Lillian Gish, not only saw Vesuvius work as per the schedule for his scenes of the eruption of that volcano in the picture "The White Sister," but, he and his company had been located in Bosca tre Cossa, a village at the foot of Vesuvius for three weeks, making scenes in and around the crater, when the volcano erupted and found him prepared to take full advantage of the awe-inspiring spectacle.

"All during the winter in Rome," said Mr. King, "I conducted research work on volcanic eruptions and weather conditions, so I could duplicate the actual scenes as near as possible for my photoplay.

"I had been plotting charts showing the eruption of Vesuvius from the days of Pompeii, and the weather conditions previous to each eruption, when I suddenly realized that judging from current weather conditions in comparison to my data, the next outburst of lava from the famous volcano, standing by the bay of Naples, should be some time this summer.

"My company was a bit surprised when, out of the clear sky, I abandoned work on the location near Rome and moved them down to Bosca tre Casso, a village which is three layers deep, each succeeding village being built on the ruins of one which had been buried previously by lava flow. I had told no one just exactly the reason for shifting the location, except to say that I thought it would be a good time to get some scenes around the volcano.
